"My goodness! And didn't they fine you for contempt?"—Chicago Evening News.

When a firm, decisive spirit is recognized, it is curious to see how the space clears around a man and leaves him room and legroom.—John Foster.

CROP AND STOCK.

Twenty-five heifers were sold in Lincoln county, last week, at four cents per pound.

George Graddy, of Woodford county, engaged 1,200 acres of growing wheat at 75 cents.

At a public sale of Shorthorns at Osceola, Iowa, thirty females and five bulls averaged $142.57.

Twenty five four year old sugar mules were sold at Richmond at $90 per head, aggregating $2,250.

A bunch of cattle was sold in Glasgow last week at seven cents, and another lot brought four cents.

Last week 265 hogs were shipped from Clark county to Pittsburg, weight 185 lbs., which cost from $3.25 to $3.40.

The pickle factory at Falmouth will be run in full blast this season. The company contracted for 130 acres and wants to let contracts for 170 more.

J. C. Turley shipped 300 head of hogs to Washington and Philadelphia. He paid 3¼ cents per pound for them.—Mt. Sterling Sentinel Democrat.

About 350 cattle at Winchester on Court day and some unsold. Heifers of 400 to 450 pounds sold at $17 to $22 per head; fat cows 2½ cents; work mules $100 to $125.

The Harrodsburg Democrat notes the sales of 75 fat sheep at 4 cents; a lot of lambs at 5 cents for June and 4 cents for July delivery; 16 extra mule colts at $60 each; 17 sheep at 3½ cents; 100 hogs at 3¼ cents.

Agents of the government are scouring Central Kentucky in search of horses suitable for cavalry purposes. They are very scarce and the purchases that are made from now on will not be made under as strict inspections as heretofore.

Good demand for cattle at Cynthiana on court day, with light supply, and all sold at fair prices. Common to good light weight heifers, 4¼ to 4 cents; a few good steers sold at 5 cents; milch cows, $25 to $45 per head. No mules on market.

"Prices of cattle in Texas are going to be higher next fall than they have been for sixteen years. The shortage is real this time, and it will be a number of years before it can be made up. The men who own the good breeding herds will for the next few years be at the head of the procession."—Ft. Worth Reporter.

In conversation with a well known dealer in lambs and other live stock, he said that sheep raisers should promote their interests by castrating all young bucks before getting them ready for market. This is demanded by all commission firms. He also urged the breeders should use sheep dip on their young lambs as its use keeps off ticks and insures a more healthful and rapid growth. It is also important that the ewes be fed an abundance of wholesome food.—Blue Grass Clipper.

The Dover girl who expressed so much sympathy for the farmer because of his cold winter job of harvesting his winter wheat, is equal in agricultural knowledge to the Higginsport girl who expressed a desire to see a field of tobacco when it was plugging out. But the Georgetown damsel who asked "which cow gives buttermilk?" is entitled to the bakery. And the Russellville Miss who was asked if she ever saw anybody milk a cow said: "Oh, yes I have. It just tickled me to death to see uncle jerk two of the cow's faucets at the same time."

There were 350 cattle at Winchester says the Democrat, some of which were left unsold. While prices were not much lower the market lacked the vim and snap of the last few courts, and buyers required concessions. Ten picked heifers, weight 400 lbs., at $22; a lot of 29 heifers, weight 450 lbs., brought $17 each, and a lot of 500 lbs., heifers were sold at $20 each; a lot of fat cows, weight 1,000 lbs., at 2½ cents; 20 steers, $23,50 each, about 2 cents per pound; 25 steers, weight 700 lbs. $32; a lot of 800 lb, steers were held at 5 cents; 35 grade ewes, with lambs thrown in at $4 50.

FROM CARROLL COUNTY.

[News]

The Masons of Ghent have decided to celebrate St. John's day at that place on Saturday, June 25th.

Last Sunday night while Rev. O. M. Huey and family were at church their home in the suburbs was entered by thieves and the house ransacked. Among the articles taken were all their silverware, handkerchiefs, a ham and other articles, and Bro. Huey says they left him with "only an iron spoon." An entrance was effected by the front door.

Wheat never looked better than at the present time and everything indicates a bountiful harvest.

From most every section of the county we learn that there will be plenty of tobacco plants to set a large crop.

The Carroll county convention of the Sunday-school Union will be held the last week in May.

The tobacco growers of Carroll county met at the court-house, Monday evening at 2 o'clock, to take steps toward opposing the gigantic tobacco trust and to secure legislation to prohibit and dissolve it.

FROM GRANT COUNTY.

[Courier]

Will R. Elliston, son of Senator R. H. Elliston, has tendered his services to the President in the war with Spain.

The festival and cake walk given by the Knights of Pythias at their elegant hall last Saturday night was a glittering success financially and otherwise.

Judge J. H. Thompson, of Cherry Grove, one of the county's oldest and best citizens, passed over the river and into his eternal home last Saturday.

Never in the last twenty years have the farmers of Grant county been as far behind with their spring work as they are at the present time. During the month of April scracely any plowing was done at all. Hundreds of acres of stubble and grass lands have not yet been turned over. It it ceases raining for a few days the ground becomes so hard that it can hardly be worked. Nevertheless, they are going ahead with a determination to pitch a very large crop of both tobacco and corn. Grain of all kinds looks remarkably well and the large acreage of grass sown promises well.

Last Saturday was doctor's day in Williamstwon. Some thirty-two doctors in the county had been put under arrest for failing to comply with the law in filing in the office of the county court clerk before the 10th day of January of this year a report of the births and deaths they had attended during the year 1897. The cases were tried before Esquire James P. Webb, and after one had been dismissed on account of the insufficiency of the affidavit on which the warrants had been issued, the county attorney dismissed the warrants against all of the other physicians with the understanding that they are to file their reports according to law.

FROM OWEN COUNTY.

[Herald.]

The new Baptist church at Sparta will be dedicated the last Sunday in May, it being the fifth Sunday in that month. The church is a beauty.

Several of our boys went to Frankfort Saturday to enlist in the army but failed to get in, as list the was so full it had to be cut down. They were very much disappointed as they are very enthusiastic.

Judge Green returned from his Southern trip last Friday, evening. He said he was all over the battlefields of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, and fully identified the different positions and locations of the Confederate army during those stirring times of thirty five years ago, especially of the command to which he belonged. The Judge enjoyed the visit immensely and is glad he went. He said the mule market was not as good as he hoped it would be, as he was directly interested.

Last Friday morning a rather good-looking young man, aged about twenty, came into the Herald office and inquired if he could be told where he could find a recruiting officer. When informed that the Owen County contingent had already gone to Frankfort he seemed greatly disappointed, but said he would go to Lexington and be ready when they began to organize. He said he came from Boone County and had traveled over twenty-three states in his life having made an early start. Drilling, he declared, would be right to his hand, as he drilled for three years in the House of Refuge in Cincinnati when a kid. His name was given as Mathew Green.

[News]

John Sims, col., of Montery, one of the most highly respected negroes of that vicinity, passed through Owenton last Wednesday on his way to enlist in the U. S. army to fight Spain.

The residence of A. G. Morgan near Squiresville, the Spires property, was consumed by fire Saturday morning, cause unknown. Mr. Morgan held an insurance policy of $1000.

The State Board of Equalization has raised Owen county 9 per cent. on lands and nothing on town lots. The raise is insignificant as compared with many other counties, and Judge Hill does not think it worth while to make the attempt to lower it as most all of the counties have made no success even where the raises have been pretty heavy. It would in all probability be a needless expense to the county to make the attempt.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

Rev. Dr. H. A. M. Henderson, who was at one time Superintendent of Public Instruction of Kentucky, has gone to war as Chaplain of the First Ohio Regiment.

At a meeting of the Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Louisville, last Friday, it was decided to make a donation of $150 and a loan of $500 to the Owenton church, for which the little congregation will doubtless be duly thankful.

The Baptist Year Book is just out and gives the following as the denominational statistics for the last year: Number of churches in the United States, 43,397; number of ordained ministers, 27,355; number of baptisms during the year, 198,432; total membership, 4,055,806.

Quite an unusual and happy event was the baptism of Bro. G. W. Brooks by his son, Rev. J. P. Brooks, at East Baptist Church, this city, last Sunday night. Bro. Brooks is in his 74th year and was recently happily converted. To him and his aged companion have been born 14 children, nine of whom are living. There were four daughters and ten sons, two of whom are Baptist ministers. He was the last of the family to profess faith in Christ. —Baptist Recorder.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1898. NO. 29.

JOHN SHERMAN may prepare an appendix for that book of his.

THE war with Spain has every indication of continuing beyond the breakfast hour.

THE Georgetown News publishes a list of about 450 delinquent taxpayers in Scott county.

INSTEAD of relieving suffering humanity in Cuba the course being pursued by the United States is increasing the ranks of the starving.

CINCINNATI proposes to celebrate Admiral Dewey's victory by a tremendous demonstration next Saturday. It will be a great day in the Queen City.

THE House has adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution whereby Senators shall be selected by the popular vote. The resolution has to go to the Senate now.

THE Cuban force in the field is claimed to be 40,000 men. Many of these are not armed but are ready to accept them upon the first opportunity. The reasonably well equipped force is placed at 25,000.

THE withdrawal of the Oregon, Marietta and Baltimore weakened the western coast defense very considerably, and Spain might conclude that that would be the best quarter in which to attack American cities.

IT is very seldom that Senators Foraker and Hanna agree on an appticant for a postmastership in Ohio, and in case of the Presidential offices the President will make the selection, and it is easy to forecast the result in most instances.

THE Louisville Dispatch won its fight for the city printing. It was opposed by the Courier-Journal and the Post, neither of which proved a serious opponent. The friends of the Dispatch throughout the country are glad to here of its victory.

AN Englishman proposes to furnish this country, at a cost of half a million dollars, a torpedo boat that will destroy the Spanish navy. Uncle Sam does not expect the Dons to furnish him entertainment long enough for the construction of any additional boats.

WITH the Philippines, Cuba and the Hawaii, all new territory, to look after, this country will have her hands full. Two of these acquisitions if such the islands become, are so remote as to render them much less desirable than Cuba, the position of which renders it convenient territory.

THE Kentucky soldiers' reception at Lexington was calculated to change the opinion of many of them as to the pleasures that are be found in camp life. The change from a life of luxury and comfort to hardship and hunger was so sudden that many of the boys were sorry they had joined.

THE Courier says "Williamstown can furnish a company of 84 able bodied soldiers of proper age and in splendid health and physical condition who have nothing else to do. In fact many of them have not done a day's work in five years and a little exercise as foot soldiers might be good for them."

FRANCE holds a very large slice of Spain's indebtedness, and if she does not become an ally of the Dons she will be very slow to recognize neutrality laws that she can manage in any way to successfully evade. A nation is very apt to manifest at least one characteristic of mankind when its purse is threatened.

WHEN this country gets through chastising Spain it must not conclude that it can boss the whole world and start out with a chip on its shoulder. Spain is a weak cousin, and being able to handle her will not be proof that the United States is invincible in war. And, by the way, the quicker Spain is made to ask for peace the more credit will the war be to this country from a fighting standpoint.

JOHN SHERMAN is in a position again where his mind is his own, and he is freely expressing it. He is for freeing Cuba, but opposed to the extension of our territory by annexing territory with a mongrel population. The old man seems to have a pretty well balanced mind on some propositions, yet, although of late he has repeatedly been compelled to stand aside to make room for men of contracted calibers.

THE WAR.

It is said orders have been given to bombard Cuban cities at anytime.

Dewey made his rep by getting too far from his superiors to be communicated with.

The army at Tampa is growing very restless. The soldiers are anxious to begin earning their money.

The Cubans are wondering what has become of that American army that started for their island several weeks ago.

A sharp, decisive fight with the Dons was what was expected, but it is proving anything but what was anticipated.

The report that an enemy's warship was sighted off the eastern coast last week, caused considerable uneasiness in the sea coast cities.

Very little has been accomplished in military circles during the last week. The Spanish and American fleets are now each trying to beat the other to Havana harbor, and it is thought that the greatest naval battle ever fought is liable to occur any day off the coast of Cuba.

THE first State Commercial Convention was held in Louisville, last week, and was well attended. The delegates were of the leading business men in the State. The Convention was the outgrowth of the sprit of progress which has been growing in Kentucky for several years, and great good is expected to result from the convention.

THE torpedo boat, Winslow, was not expecting an attack when she was disabled by the Spanish battery near Cardenas, last week. The surprise was complete and the loss of the boat and several of her men, was an event that may prove to be of considerable value in the future to the war craft that blockade Havana and other Cuban ports.

No doubt the Cubans are becoming anxious to know why the United States is engaged in war with Spain. At the beginning of the conflict they understood it was to assist them to gain their independence, but that idea, to them, seems to be only secondary, and an amended declaration of war ought to be issued—one that will not mislead the Americans or the Cubans.

IF to relieve the starving in Cuba is Uncle Sam's reason for going to war with Spain, he is proceeding very deliberately about a matter so serious. The vigorous and decisive campaign against the Spanish force in Cuba, and about which so much has been said, is proving a very tame affair, if anything in connection with a war can be properly classed as tame.

THE Court of Appeals has decided a novel and important question in the case of Hauns vs. the Commissioners of Lakeland Asylum. The asylum officials resisted an attachment for the sale of some of its property for debt on the ground of being a State institution. The court holds that being a State institution is not an exemption from levy in the case of asylums, as their governing boards, the commissioners, are corporations, and as such may sue and be sued and the property is therefore subject to execution and sale.

IT appears that the President is going to lose no opportunity to humiliate Governor Bushnell and his friends, and his last manifestation in that direction is the turning down of Major General Axline, who was in command of the Ohio troops. Ohio gets two Major Generals in the United States army, but Axline, who was very anxious for the position is not one of them. His political friendship for the President and some of his household has not been of a character calculated to admit him to the feast of good things now being discussed.

THE large number of rejections of volunteers has caused much comment in the army medical corps. However, the physicians who have conducted the examinations say that outside of the ranks of cigarette smokers there are fewer rejections than there were in the days of the civil war. Among habitual users of the cigarette the rejections are about 90 per cent. The records show that the average rejections during the civil war did not exceed 13 per cent. while now it is 90, principally on account of weak hearts of those who indulge the cigarette habit.

THE ISLAND[illegible]EY WON.

Their People, The[illegible]tory, Geography, Resources and General Characteristics.

This wonderful groupe of islands off the coast of Asia, which will go down in history as the first conquest made by the American Republic in the war of 1898, was discovered by Magellan in his voyage around the world, in 1852.

There are nearly 1,200 islands in the groupe, and they extend in a northerly direction from near the the north coast of Borneo to a point south of the Japanese island Formosa.

Their total area is estimated at 145,000 square miles, without including many of the smaller groups.

Magellan, the discoverer, was a Portuguese, and sought service under Charles V. of Spain because he was ignored by the court of his own country.

By the bull of Pope Alexander VI., of May 4, 1493, which was then universally recognized as law, the earth was divided into two hemispheres.

All lands thereafter discovered in the Eastern Hemisphere were decreed to belong to Portugal; all in the Western to Spain

The Phillipines were well within Portugal's rights, but as the use of the log and the variation of the compass were unknown, an error of 52 degrees in longitude was made, and to Spain the islands were given on the basis of that error.

The natives were wearing Chinese silks, and were able to visit the mainland in their own boats when they were discovered.

England first acquired the right to trade with Manilla in 1798, when an English commercial house was opened there.

Race enmities and prejudice have been stirred up by the Spaniards in order to prevent a union of the people against their rule.

Though situated in the equatorial region, the elevations of the mountains give a range of climate that allows the production of a great variety of valuable crops. Tobacco, hemp, sugar and rice are the chief staples produced.

The swamps and rivers are infested with crocodiles, and the dense woods with monkeys and serpents of many species.

Rich deposits of gold are known to exist, but have been little developed.

Several earthquakes have shaken the islands in the years named: 1601, 1610, 1645, 1658, 1675, 1699, 1796, 1824, 1852 and 1863.

The last was exceedingly destructive. It threw down the fine stone bridge over the river Pasig at Manilla, and leveled 46 public buildings and 570 private houses, killing several hundred persons.

Cock fighting is the national sport, the fighters being equipped with steel spurs. This diversion holds the same place of favor in the Philippines as bull-fighting holds in Spain.

In the cool of the evening the society of the capital promenades, flirts and displays its toilets on the beach parade, and when the vesper bells ring all halt in their diversions to pray.

The coolest months are November, December and January, as the islands lie on the north side of the equator. The hottest months are April and May, but these months are comparatively dry.

The typhoon, a kind of hurricane sometimes visits portions of the islands and does great damage. One in September, 1865, destroyed much property in the cities and drove 17 vessels ashore at Manilla.

They are hospitable to strangers.

In some districts bands of robbers infest the country, and pirates land on the shores and commit depredations.

The national drink is a strong brandy made from the palm. It is very intoxicating, and the government tries to hold a monopoly of its sale.

There are probably 200,000 Chinese on the islands. They have a virtual monopoly of trade and manufactures.

Prof. Jagor, the German traveler, says: "Usually the people live together unmarried, because they cannot pay the expenses of the ceremony."

Government school teachers in the country districts get $2 a month and "find" themselves.

Bats, called padikes, are found in the interior with wings 5 feet from tip to tip. Flying monkeys also abound.

One-fourth of all children born die within two weeks after birth from the effects of impure air and the filthy habits of the people.

The natives are so strongly attached to their native heath that it is difficult to induce one of them to leave.—New York [illegible] the Spanish

a[illegible]nborhood of [illegible]given out at [illegible]The Spanare not fully rewarded for [illegible]n to the tory at Manilla when they [illegible]y not be the thanks of Congress and the m[illegible]als ordered to be struck for them. Under the law they have become entitled to a [illegible] bounty, unless the numerical importance of the fleet of Admiral Montejo has been overestimated, its losses overstated, the officers and men of the Asiatic squadron will be entitled to share among themselves something like $187,000 bounty money.

Section 4,635 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides: "A bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement which is sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, or $100 if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of $200 if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money, and when the actual number of men on board any such vessel cannot be satisfactorily ascertained, it shall be estimated according to the compliment allowed to vessels of its class in the navy of the United States; and there shall be paid as bounty to the captors of any vessel of war captured from an enemy, which they may be instructed to destroy, or which is immediately destroyed for the public interest; but not in consequences of injuries received in action; $50 for every person who shall be on board at the time of such capture."

According to the reports from Manilla the Spanish fleet consisted of ten or eleven cruisers, gunboats and torpedo boats, with crews amounting in all to 1,872 men. Rear Admiral Dewey destroyed some of these vessels, and perhaps all of them; but if he did not, then a number were destroyed by the enemy to prevent them from falling into the hands of the United States. Admiral Montejo was increasing the bounty fund with every vessel he sank, and Spain will undoubtedly have to pay for those losses in making up the indemnity at the close of the war.

At $100 for each man of the Spanish naval force, the amount to be divided among the American sailors will be $187,200. The vessels of the United States, were, if anything, under-manned. The numbers will be under, rather than over, 1,733 men. The $187,000 will be distributed to the fleet under section 4,631 of the Revised Statutes, relating to prize money. Admiral Dewey will get one-twentieth of the whole amount of bounty awarded to his command. The lesser officers and seamen of the ships will receive in proportion to their rates of pay on the day of the engagement. The amount to each seaman, it is believed, will be in the neighborhood of $50.

THE first part of the Washington letter in this issue was written when the Spanish fleet was supposed to have shown the white feather and gone back home, but the fact is that the fleet has been coming this way all the time, but had succeeded in keeping its whereabouts concealed from the Americans until close to Cuba.

THE great naval battle that has been predicted from week to week has a date fixed for this week by those whose information in regard thereto has repeatedly proven incorrect each week for the past four or five.

EVERY hour the American guns have remained silent since the destruction of the Maine in Havana harbor has been to Spain's advantage and to this country's disadvantage.

IF the Spanish and American navies chance to meet there is no doubt but what each will make it very interesing for the other.

SPEAKER REED'S income from literary work last year was nearly four times as much as his salary from the National government. He has lately declined all offers from publications, explaining that the excitement of the present condition at Washington precluded any efforts at essays or reminiscence.

EPERNAY, in France, is a vast subterranean city, the streets for miles being hewn out of solid chalk, flanked with piles of champagne of all blends and qualities. The largest champagne manufacturers in Epernay possess underground cellars which cover no fewer than 45 acres and contain 5,000,000 bottles of wine.

A ROUMANIAN manufacturer has announced his intention of sending to the Paris exposition in 1900 a piano forte of such exceptional sonority that its tones will be heard at a distance of six miles. One can not help pitying in prospect the neighbors of a young lady who would practice several hours per day upon such an instrument.

THE sultan of Turkey has just built at Mecca the biggest house in the world. It is intended for the accommodation of pilgrims, and is capable of sheltering 6,000 persons. The next biggest house in the world is in a suburb of Vienna. It accommodates 2,112 tenants. Next come the three Rowton houses in London, with 800, 677 and 500 tenants respectively.

TUBERCULOSIS has been communicated to fishes by French bacteriologists, and proves fatal very quickly to them, whether the bacilliare derived from human beings, rabbits, or hens, or from previously infected fish. Tuberculosis bacilli from fish, however, have very little effect when injected into rabbits and fowls, the inference being that their power is attenuated in the colder blood of the fish.

THE diamond is full of phosphorus. This quality has been known for centuries and still there are many who do not know it. That is the reason often that gleams of light are seen issuing from the stone in the dark. To this quality alone attaches a great deal of value. The most phosphorescent stone is the one that is the best cut. If there is phosphorus in the stone it is greatly enhanced by proper cutting, so that its scintillating faculties are increased.

IN the recognized impossibility of completing the battle ships Kearsarge, Kentucky, Alabama, Illinois and Wisconsin within the next six months, some of their six-inch guns, of which each vessel was provided with 14, have been utilized in arming the auxiliary cruisers. Each of these vessels also had 16 six-pounders, which have been put into service, and forgings have now been ordered to make good those borrowed before the vessels are completed and ready for their armament.

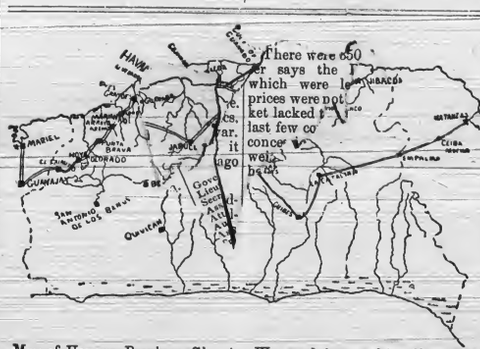
A GERMAN engineer has recently succeeded in plating aluminum with copper by a welding process, and makes the combined materials in such forms that they may be soldered, rolled drawn and plated. If this process is successful on a commercial scale it would seem as if the increased usefulness of aluminum is to become practically unlimited as the copper coating would remove all obstacles to its use where it must be in contact with fluids, soldered and painted or plated.

A BUCKET 743 miles deep and 743 miles from side to side would hold every drop of the ocean. This bucket could rest quite firmly on the British Isles. To fill the bucket one would need to work 10,000 steam pumps, each sucking up 1,000 tons of sea. But to get rid of the earth would be 4.555 times more difficult, requiring 2,000 great guns, each firing 1,000 projectiles a second, each projectile consisting of 100,000 tons of earth. At the end of 1,000 years this mundane sphere would be all shot away.

COL. WILLIAM AYRES, who died recently at his home in Philadelphia, enjoyed the distinction of having been the first union prisoner who was exchanged during the rebellion. Early in that conflict, he and several soldiers, while on a reconnoitering expedition, were captured by Mosby's guerrillas and sent to Libby. Through the efforts of Simon Cameron he was exchanged for a son of Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the southern confederacy. Young Stephens rejoined his regiment and was afterward killed in battle.

THE Woman's Auxiliary corps, in New York, worked all day and far into the night to complete the 1,000 comfort bags for the members of the Forty-seventh regiment. Each bag contains a paper of smoking tobacco, a pipe, two spools of cotton, needles, shoe laces and court plaster. The name of each man was embroidered upon the cover, so that in case of any accident or death in battle the identification will be easily established. The work was under the direction of Mrs. H. H. Quick, president of the Woman's Auxiliary corps.

"THE word ship is masculine in French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese, and possesses no sex in Teutonic and Scandinavian," says a writer in the New York Tribune. He continues: "Even a man-of-war is she to our sailors. Perhaps it would not be an error to trace the custom back to the Greeks, who called all ships by feminine names, probably out of deference to Athene, goddess of the sea. But the sailor assigns no such reasons. The ship is to him a veritable sweetheart, and it is a common thing to hear something to it vitality and



ELEVATOR BURNED.

Destroyed: 100,000 Bushels Wheat, 625,000 Corn, 200,000 Oats,

Also 40,000 Bushels Rye Were Burned—Armour's Loss on Grain Will Foot Up $890,000. Fully Covered by Insurance.

CHICAGO, May 13.—Grain Elevator "D," belonging to the Chicago, Burling & Quincy elevator, was destroyed by fire Thursday afternoon. Losses on building and contents will aggregate $1,200,000. The elevator contained 1,115,000 bushels of grain, valued at $890,000, the property of P. D. Armour. The grain was fully insured.

The elevator stood at Lumber and Brown streets, on the west bank of the Chicago river, near the Twenty-second street lumber district. It was used as a grain warehouse by P. D. Armour and had a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels.

Map of Havana Province, Showing Ways of Approaching Havana.

The Lord & Bushnell Lumber Co. was the first concern whose property was set on fire from the elevator. The lumber yard of D. S. Tate & Co. was next destroyed, and 40 freight cars on their side tracks were consumed with the contents of finished lumber. The yard of Arthur Gousley & Co. caught fire, but quick work on the part of the firemen headed off the flames in this direction. Francis Beidler & Co.'s yards adjoining the Gourley property caught next, and before the fire department steamers on the river could reach the Beidler plant it was entirely destroyed. The fire was a most exciting one. Railroad employes with a bravery approaching recklessness, took switch engines in on the side tracks leading between the blazing lumber piles, and coupling to standing freight cars, dragged them, blazing, from the heart of the conflagration. The flaming trains, as soon as they were outside of the lumber yards, were decluged by fire engines stationed for that purpose. The work was prosecuted by the railroad men until the heat from the lumber piles caused the rails to curl, pulling the spikes from the ties and rendering the tracks useless. The gravest apprehensions as the fire spread were entertained for the great gas tanks of the People's Gas Light and Coke Co. The firemen realized that these were about as dangerous as powder magazines, and that a single spark might cause an explosion, frightful in its consequences. A strong patrol of firemen with two engines and a quantity of other apparatus were detailed for duty in the vicinity of the gas reservoirs.

Elevator "D," which was used by P. D. Armour as a storehouse, contained 1,115,000 bushels of grain as follows: 100,000 bushels of wheat, 625,000 bushels of corn, 200,000 bushels of oats, 150,000 bushels of flax, 40,000 bushels of rye.

Armours loss on the grain will foot up $890,000, fully covered by insurance.

The elevator was valued at $285,000 and was fully insured.

Dennis Sweenie, the veteran chief of the fire department, was seriously injured. His face was severely burned, his beard being completely singed off.

Wm. Matherson, engineer of the elevator, and his fireman, Dennis O'Connor, are missing.

In the river slips tapping the lumber yard district were many vessels which were in emminent danger. The vessels were all small crafts, however, and the incipient fires which from time to time were started in the riggings, flammed up for a moment and were put out by streams from fire apparatus on board or from fire boats. A small army of fire tugs were hurried to the scene and were kept busy towing the vessels to places of safety.

The Expedition to the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The chief interest at the war department Thursday centered in the preparations that are being hurriedly pushed for the expedition to the Philippines. First there was the selection of Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt to command the expedition and after reaching Manila to become the head of the temporary government. Maj. Gen. Elwell S. Otis, recently promoted from the brigadier ranks, will accompany the expedition and will be second in command.

Attempt to Blow Up the Buena Ventura.

NEW YORK, May 13.—A Key West special to the Brooklyn Eagle says: A fireman aboard the captured steamer Buena Ventura, it was learned Thursday, tried to blow up the vessel on Saturday night and came near being successful. The secret was so well guarded that it has not reached the ears of the government officials.

The Calumet Arrives at Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., May 13.—The United States revenue cutter Calumet from Cleveland, O., arrived here Thursday afternoon. After taking on a supply of coal she will proceed.

ADM. MONTEJO.

LONDON, May 13.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Times, who arrived there on board the British gunboat Linnet from Manila says:

"I had a conversation with Adm. Montejo, who, recognizing the superiority of the American squadron, admitted that his chief object was to seek the protection of the Cavite forts. He fought in the Reina Maria Christina till she was on fire and had fifty-two killed. On the advice of his flag lieutenant he transferred his flag to the Isle de Cuba. Eventually, after two and a half hours' fighting, he gave the signal to scuttle and abandon her. Commodore Dewey ceased firing and asked permission of the forts to destroy the burning ship. Adm. Montejo replied: 'The ships are at your mercy; do as you like.' The American fire was resumed till the Spanish squadron was completely annihilated.

"The captain of the Boston who carried the flag of truce said:

"'You combatted us with four very bad ships, not war ships. We have never seen before braver fighting under such unequal conditions. It is a great pity you exposed your lives on vessels not fit for fighting.'

"Commodore Dewey sent a message to Adm. Montejo as follow:

"'I have pleasure in clasping your hand and offering my congratulations on the gallant manner in which you fought.'"

CABINET CHANGE.

A New Spanish Ministry, With Sagasta Again at the Head, Will Likely Be Formed on Saturday.

MADRID, May 13.—It turns out that Adm. Bermejo on learning of the Cavite disaster, told Senor Sagasta that he must resign owing to the delicacy of his position, though he felt that he was not responsible for the state of the defences of Manila.

According to the latest forecast, the new ministry will consist of Senor Sagasta as president; Senor C. Groissard, minister of justice of the dissolving cabinet, as minister of foreign affairs; Senor Aunon as minister of marine; Romero Giron as minister of justice, and the duke of Veraguay, the descendant of Columbus, as minister of public works, agriculture and commerce.

The new cabinet will probably be constituted Saturday.

The general opinion is that it will endure until the budget is passed and collapse at the first opportunity afterward.

The changes, however, are pacific in tendency, Senor Gullon having been the most warlike element in the dissolving cabinet.

GUNBOAT CONCORD.

She Destroys a Spanish War Ship at Iloilo—After a Two Hours' Fight the Spaniard Went Down With Flying Colors.

NEW YORK, May 13.—A Hong Kong special of this date says that a trading vessel from the Philippines reports having witnessed the destruction of a Spanish war ship by the United States gunboat Concord at Iloilo. The fight is said to have lasted two hours, at the end of which time the Spaniard went down with colors flying. There were no casualties on board the Concord, and no damage was done the gunboat. There are, it is alleged, only two other Spanish war vessels in Asiatic waters, and one of these is in dry dock at Hong Kong, while the cruiser Boston is searching for the other under orders to engage and sink it.

Spanish Spy in Irons.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 13.—The second regiment United States cavalry passed through here en route to Mobile Thursday afternoon. On the first section of the train there was a Spanish spy in irons and under guard. He was discovered after the train had left Chattanooga Wednesday night and immediately put under arrest. It was impossible to get particulars from officers of the regiment as to the proofs against the man.

Big Oil Deal.

TOLEDO, O., May 13.—A big oil deal was practically closed Thursday whereby John Weber, of this city, disposes to the Standard Oil Co. 300 paying wells and some 12,000 acres of territory, the consideration being in the neighborhood of $300,000. The Sun Oil Co. also purchased Mr. Steven's interest in the Oregon oil field for some $80,000 it is stated.

FORTS ATTACKED.

Rr. Adm. Sampson Opens Fire on the Defenses at San Juan de Porto Rico.

The News of the Fall of the City is Expected—The United States Auxiliary Cruiser Yale Captures the Spanish Steamer Rita.

ST. THOMAS, West Indies, May 13.—On the best authority it is reported here that the fortifications at San Juan de Porto Rico have been bombarded by the American warships. Private advices say the shells are falling all over the city.

The United States auxiliary cruiser St. Louis, from Guadaloupe, is entering the harbor as this dispatch is sent and the Yale is in the offing.

Two American warships have been signaled to the westward.

The Americans lost two killed and seven wounded. The Spanish loss is unknown.

Morro fired but three shots from her heavy guns. Morro crumbled under the American fire.

There were but seven shots fired from the big guns of the American squadron. These left Morro fort crumbled ruin. Her guns were mute, her gunners killed or in flight.

Then began the attack on the land batteries and the fortifications about the government buildings and the palace. Here the cruisers did effective service, and soon the post office and the palace of the governor were tumbled about the ears of the officials, the guns dismounted or abandoned; wreck, ruin and death everywhere. The Spaniards pluckily served their guns as long as there was any hope, but their fire was slow and wild.

At last report San Juan itself had not surrendered, though it was completely at Adm. Sampson's mercy. It had been deserted by the merchants and noncombatants. The foreign consuls had followed the refugees into the country, and the troops were reported panic stricken. The volunteers had fled.

This is the story told in Fort de France, just opposite the besieged city. Every one here believes that the city has been captured and that Sampson has won an almost bloodless victory, his nine ships escaping uncathed.

PORT AU PRINCE, May 13.—The American fleet, under Rr. Adm. Sampson, bombarded San Juan de Porto Rico Thursday. The following are the details of the bombardment thus far received:

The bombardment began Thursday morning. Rr. Adm. Sampson, with nine war ships, arrived before San Juan just before sunrise. At a signal the battle ship Indiana opened fire; in a few minutes Morro fort was reduced to a heap of ruins.

The fort made little effort to respond and was silenced almost immediately.

The Spanish steamer Rita was captured by the United States auxiliary cruiser Yale, which took her crew on board.

Thousands of the population and the foreign consuls sought refuge in the interior of the islands.

The information telegraphed is from a reliable correspondent at Port Au Prince, who received his advices from foreign office sources. His advices are believed to have reached him direct from Porto Rico, via Santiago to Kingston, and thence to Port Au Prince.

LONDON, May 13.—The bombardment of San Juan de Porto Rico is held here to indicate that Rr. Adm. Sampson has a pretty accurate knowledge of the whereabouts of the Spanish squadron, at any rate that it is too far distant to interfere with his proceedings. No definite news however, is yet obtainable as to the locality of Adm. Cerveras fleet, although it is believed to be at the Canaries waiting to join the Cadiz ships at some predetermined rendezvous.

The news is fully expected Thursday of the fall of San Juan and that Adm. Sampson has sufficient force handy to land and hold the place. If so, his feat will be regarded as almost as dashing as Dewey's. It is supposed that the news that the bombardment has begun was dispatched by some one who had command of the wires at San Juan or permission to send a message. The Spanish reports recently have said that the San Juan forts had been much strengthened, but looking to the state of affairs at Manila, little credit is given to this report, and it is judged that Adm. Sampson's task will not be very difficult.

The Carolinas and Ciefuegos fights are not regarded as very serious, except as showing that an invasion of Cuba will not be a walkover, although if San Juan has fallen, it will be utterly impossible for the Spaniards to do much to prevent the invasion.

HAVANA, May 13.—Governor General Blanco received a cable message Thursday from the captain general of Porto Rico, which says that Thursday morning an American fleet of 11 vessels opened fire upon the forts, which answered vigorously. The dispatch says that at the time it was sent, 9 a. m., no personal losses had been sustained and little material damage done.

FOOD SHORTAGE.

The Prices of Salt Meat, Fish and Flour Steadily Mounting Up at Havana.

VEGETABLES TO BE HAD IN PLENTY.

No Probability of Troops Actually Starving Until the City is Beleaguered by Land.

Soldiers and Populace Disheartened by the Blockade—The [illegible] Will Take Provisions From [illegible] Santiago de Cuba for the French Co[illegible]

KINGSTON, Jamaica, May 16.—The French [illegible] Fulton, from Havana, on May [illegible] arrived here Saturday and landed [illegible] other refugees at the quarantine stati[illegible]

The [illegible]nch will now proceed to Santiago de Cuba with provisions for the Fr[illegible] consul there, who had cabled to [illegible] requesting that food be sent [illegible] announcing that famine prices [illegible] exist at Santiago de Cuba.

The officers of the Fulton, until her arrival here, had been unable to obtain any definite news of the battle of Manila. The first bulletins received in Havana from Madrid were not allowed to be [illegible] hanged and officials of Havana in [illegible] that the honors were about e[illegible]s the American fleet had been [illegible]ppoil to land men.

It appears from what the officers of the Fulton say that the populace and soldiers at Havana are disheartened by the blockade and the improbability of any succor reaching the city. On the other hand a great American invading army is expected to land in Cuba shortly.

The prices of imported food, salt meat, fish and flour are steadily mounting at Havana; but vegetables are to be had there in plenty and there is no probability of the troops actually starving until the city is beleaguered from the land side.

The British troopship Dilivara has arrived here from Halifax with the Leinster regiment.

[illegible] SAN JUAN BATTLE.

Enemy's Loss Believed to Be Heavy; American Loss, Two Killed, Seven Wounded—Firing Lasted Three Hours.

ON BOARD THE FLAG SHIP IOWA OFF SAN JUAN DE PORTO RICO, May 12 (via St. Thomas, Danish West Indies, May 13).—The forts of San Juan de Porto Rico were bombarded by part of Rr. Adm. Sampson's fleet Friday morning. The enemy's loss is believed to be heavy. The American loss is two men killed and seven men injured.

After three hours' firing the admiral withdrew the fleet and heading for Key West he said:

"I am satisfied with the morning's work. I could have taken San Juan; but I have no force to hold it. I only wanted to administer punishment. This has been done. I came for the Spanish fleet and not for San Juan."

The men killed were: Seamen Frank Widemark, of the New York. Gunner's mate, of the Amphitrite; the latter died from effects of extreme heat.

Of the injured men, three were on board the Iowa and four on board the New York. The names of those slightly injured on the Iowa are: Mitchell; Private Marine Merk; Apprentice Hill. The injured on the New York are: Seaman Samuel Feltman, seriously; Seaman Michael Murphy and two other enlisted men, slightly injured. All the above named were injured by the bursting of a shell on the New York. This is a complete list of the killed and wounded.

The American ships were uninjured. The engagement began at 5:15 a. m. and ended at 8:15 a. m.

The enemy's batteries were not silenced. The town in the rear of the fortifications probably suffered.

The ships taking part in the action were the Iowa, Indiana, New York, Terror, Amphitrite, Detroit, Montgomery, Wampatuck and Porter. The enemy's firing was heavy but wild, and the Iowa and New York were probably the only vessels hit. They went right up under the guns in column delivering broadsides and then returned. The line passed thrice in front of the forts, pouring tons of steel on shore.

It is impossible to judge the amount of damage done to the buildings and forts. They appeared to be riddled with shot; but the Spaniards were plucky. The after turret of the Amphitrite got out of order temporarily during the engagement, but she banged away with her forward guns. After the first passage before the forts the Detroit and the Montgomery retired, their guns being too small to do much damage. The Porter and Wampatuck also stayed out of range. The smoke hung over everything, spoiling the aim of the gunners and making it impossible to tell where our shots struck. The officers and men of all the ships behaved with coolness and bravery. The shots flew thick and fast over all our ships.

Morro battery on the eastward arm of the harbor, was the principal point of attack. Rr. Adm. Sampson and Capt. Evans were on the lower bridge of the Iowa and had a narrow escape from flying splinters, which injured three men.

The Iowa was hit eight times but the shells made no impression on her armor. The weather was fine but the heavy swells made accurate aim difficult. The broadsides from the Iowa and Indiana rumbled in the hills ashore for five minutes after they were delivered. Clouds of dust showed where the shells struck; but the smoke hung over everywhere. The shells screeching overhead and dropping around showed that the Spaniards still stuck to their guns.

Thrice the column passed from the entrance of the harbor to the extreme eastward battery.

Utter indifference was shown for the enemy's fire. The wounded were quickly attended, the blood was washed away and everything proceeded like target practice. At 7:45 a.m. Adm. Sampson signaled: "Cease firing." "Retire" was sounded on the Iowa and she headed from the shore. The Terror was the last ship in the line and failing to see the signal, banged away alone for about half an hour, the concert of shore guns roaring at her and the water flying high around her from the exploded shells. But she possessed a charmed life and reluctantly retired at 8:15.

CHAOS REIGNS.

NEW YORK, May 14.—A dispatch to the World from Nuevitas, Cuba, by way of Nassau, New Providence, says: Chaos reigns at Camaguey and fear and famine prevails.

Every boat in this harbor, steam and sail, has been jammed into the narrow channel, to be sunk at the first sign of an attack. Two thousand soldiers guard the entrance, 12 miles from the city, and four old cannon have been mounted on an island in the harbor.

People are starving. Salt pork costs a dollar and a half a pound, rice fifty cents, and goats bring one hundred dollars each.

A column of 5,000 Spaniards started for Moron, carrying a flag of truce. When fired upon by the insurgents the commander sent word hat he was no longer making war upon Cubans but was going to thecoast to fight the Americans.

To Rendezvous at Chickamauga.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—War department Friday issued orders for assembling 29,087 volunteers at Chickamauga. This embraces 20 regiments and five batteries from following states: Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, Illinois, Maine, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Schley's Flying Squadron Sails.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., May 14.—The Flying squadron weighed anchor at 3:40 and are moving out to sea, the flag ship Brooklyn leading.

A FIERCE COMBAT.

The Marblehead, Nashville and Windom Engage the Forts and Ships at Cienfuegos.

SPANISH LOSS [illegible]ead, Pa[illegible]UNDRED.

One of the American S[illegible]s Was Instantly Killed and Eight Were Badly Wounded.

A Handful of Men Fought Against Fearful Odds and Were Victorious—Cable Was Cut—The Windom Arrives at Key West With Killed and Wounded.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 16.—Off the coast of Cienfuegos the ernisers Marblehead, Nashville and Windom fought a desperate battle against fearful odds Wednesday. They were victorious and now the southern Cuban seaport is nothing in ruin and the dead and dying lie in its streets.

It was determined some time ago to cut the Spanish cable out of Cienfuegos and thus prevent movements of American ships on that side being made known to Madrid. The task was assigned to the three cruisers. They drew in close to shore.

They made out a new fortification at the entrance to Cienfuegos bay, and the Windom, under Capt. McGuire, chanced its batteries. At 1,000 yards the fort opened fire. The Windom replied with her big forward rifle, and in a few minutes left the fortification a mass of ruins.

The Nashville and Marblehead in the meantime had sailed in close and made every effort to draw fire from what masked batteries the Spanish might have. One battery was visible at the apex of the bay, and into this shot and shell were poured.

Under cover of the cannonade the Nashville and Marblehead launched boats—their crews pulled into where the cable took off. By dint of rare courage they cut the cable and started back. Half way across the bay, masked batteries on either side of the harbor opened a merciless fusillade, firing shrapnel at the two boat loads. The boats were riddled and their occupants were soon struggling in the water. The treachery was quickly stoned for. From the guns of the Nashville and Marblehead belched forth a rain of shot and shell. Every shot went true.

Earthworks, guns and Spaniards were seen flying in the air as each shell burst. In the meantime Capt. McGuire lowered his boats and rescued the wounded. The bodies of the four dead were also recovered. They were placed aboard the Windom. "We avenged them," said Capt. McGuire.

The Windom arrived here Saturday morning with the wounded, all of whom are doing nicely. Capt. Maynard, of the Nashville, was struck on the head by a solid shot, but the missile glanced and only inflicted slight injury. Lieut. Winslow lost three fingers of his left hand.

Two of the killed were seamen on the Marblehead.

Private Egan, of the Nashville, was one of the slain. The other names are not known. Hendrickson is shot through the liver, and Dr. J. C. Travis, of the Windom, says he can not live. Nor can Boltz, who has three bullets through his chest and one through his head. Hendrickson suffers greatly, but he repeats: "I would do it again if I had to."

The other wounded are doing well.

The Nashville and Marblehead will take Cienfuegos, if it has not already been accomplished. The Spaniards used powerful guns of small caliber and smokeless powder. Their masked batteries are hard to locate.

The cutting of the cable at Cienfuegos is considered by the naval experts the greatest accomplishment outside of Manila, as it renders Blanco impotent. He is virtually shut out from the world now, and can only wire Madrid from Santiago de Cuba, over the English cable. This Gomez has planned to prevent. The Mangrove tried to cut this cable three weeks ago, but failed.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—The following telegram came to the navy department Saturday afternoon from Commodore Remey, at Key West:

KEY WEST, Fla., May 16.—Secretary Navy: The Windom arrived Saturday morning with the following named dead and wounded: Patrick Regan, private marine, dead; Herman W. Kuchneister, private marine, shot through the jaw, probably fatal; Harry Henrickson, seaman, shot through the liver, probably fatal; Ernest Suntenich, first class, fracture of right leg; John J. Doran, boatswain's mate second class, gunshot wound in right buttock; John Davis, gunner's mate third class, wounded in right leg; Wm. Levery, apprentice first class, wound left leg, very slight; Robert Volz, seaman on Nashville, severely wounded; Lieut. Cameron Winslow, slight wound in hands. Casualties occurred in cutting the cable at Cienfuegos. Commander McCalla's report, summary: Lieut. Winslow placed in command of steam and sailing launches of Nashville; Lieut. Anderson second in command. Boats were to drag for and cut cables under the protection of the guns of Marblehead and Nashville. Succeeded in cutting cables leading south and west but not third cable inshore, under the fire of infantry on shore with Maxim guns. Lighthouse destroyed when enemy took shelter there. The officers and men performed their work with the utmost coolness and intrepidity under trying circumstances. McCalla's report mailed.

VILAMIL'S FLEET.

It Was Sighted in the Neighborhood of Martinique—Capt. Sampson Leaves San Juan to Meet the Enemy.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The navy department was all excitement again Friday morning upon the receipt of the news that Adm. Sampson's squadron had begun the bombardment of San Juan de Porto Rico, and fuel was added to the flames when the news came later that the Spanish Flying squadron had been sighted off Martinique, giving promise of heavy fighting to come.

It is surmised that Adm. Sampson's object in making the attack on San Juan, without a landing force of troops in reserve to occupy the town if it were captured, was to destroy the fortifications and make the harbor useless to the Spanish flying squadron as a place of refuge. The reports so far received show that he did not complete that undertaking Thursday, and the question now is whether he will resume his work Friday, or will be diverted again by the report of the presence of the Spanish flying squadron in the neighborhood of Martinique. The report given out at the navy department that the Spanish squadron is now hull down to the westward of Martinique could not be supplemented by additional information as to the time the dispatch was sent, but it is supposed the squadron was seen Thursday.

Sampson already knows of its movements, for the United States scout Harvard, which put into Martinique Thursday, is said to have found there one of the torpedo destroyers composing the Spanish fleet, and would certainly report the fact to Sampson via St. Thomas if possible to do so.

It is suggested the Spanish squadron has been lying in wait for the Oregon, which, with the Marietta and Nichtheroy sailed on the 11th from the Bahai to join Sampson, and the reported activity of the Spanish torpedo boat destroyers in running in and out of Martinique seems to show that they are being used as scouts to give the rest of the squadron notice of the approach of the American battle ship. If so, the mission will be fruitless, for having discovered the whereabouts of the Spanish force, Adm. Sampson will carry out his orders to destroy their ships if he can reach them. The fact that the Spaniards were headed Thursday towards the westward on the surface would indicate that they were bound for the south coast of Cuba, but war ships in these circumstances try to mislead observers ashore.

The Spanish squadron is made up of seven first-class ships, of which four are armored cruisers and three destroyers. This is as near the exact strength as can be stated for the reports from Cape Verde and from Cadiz have caused much doubt as to the exact strength of the Spanish squadron. But allowing for the torpedo boats and other craft which returned to Cadiz, there is little doubt that the Spanish squadron of Martinique has at least seven war ships of formidable dimensions. These are:

Armored cruiser Vizcaya, built of steel, with double screws, two turrets, two funnels and two military masts with tops; length, 364 feet; displacement, 6,890 tons; maximum speed, 20.2 knots. She has an armor belt of steel 5 feet 6 inches broad, 315 feet long and 10 or 12 inches thick. Her turrets have 9 inch steel armor; conning towers, 12 inch armor. Her protected deck is from two to three inches of steel. Her armament is two 11-inch Hontoria guns, mounted singly in turrets, one forward and one aft, ten 5.5-inch guns, five on each beam, the forward and aft ones being sponsoned; eight 6-pounders ten 1-pounders, eight Nordenfelt machine guns, two Maxim machine guns, six torpedo tubes and two submerged torpedo tubes. She carries 484 men.

Armored cruiser Almirante Oquendo, built of steel, double screws, two turrets, etc. Her tonnage, armor and armament in every respect is similar to that of the Vizcaya.

Armored cruiser Infanta Maria Teresa, built of steel, 6,890 tons displacement. This cruiser is also identical to the Vizcaya.

Armored cruiser Christobal Colon, built of steel, twin screws, two covered barbettes, fore and aft, two funnels, one military mast. Length 328 feet, displacement 6,840 tons, speed 20 knots. Her armor consists of a complete nickel steel belt 8 feet 3 inches wide, 8 inches thick. The armor of the barbettes is six inches thick. The protected deck is from two to eight inches thick; conning tower six inches. All the guns have shields. Her armament is two ten-inch guns, ten six-inch guns, six 4.7-inch guns, ten six-pounders, ten one-pounders, two Maxim machine guns and four torpedo tubes. She has a complement of 500 men.

The Terror and Furor are torpedo boat destroyers lately added to the Spanish navy, having been built at Clydebank in 1896. They are of steel, with three funnels and one mast; length 220 feet, displacement 320 tons, speed 28 knots, armament two 14 pounder quick fires, two 6-pounder quick fires, two 1-pounder quick fires. Each destroyer mount two 14-inch torpedo tubes on deck and carries 67 men.

NEW YORK, May 14.—A special from St. Thomas Friday reports that Adm. Sampson has left San Juan to meet the Spanish fleet, said to be near the Island of Martinique.

Southern Ports Warned.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The navy department is in doubt whether Vilamil's fleet will go to Santiago de Cuba, Cienfuegos, Havana, Florida or the Georgia coast. Senators Bacon and Clay, of Georgia, have wired the Georgia governor of the possible danger of Savannah and Brunswick.

Bagley's Relatives in Indiana.

RICHMOND, Ind., May 14.—Ensign Bagley, who was killed at Cardenas, was a cousin of Prof. D. W. Dennis, of Earlham college, this city, and of Dr. Clark, of Economy, a small place northwest of here.

BREAKING CAMP.

All the United States Troops at Chickamauga Park Will Be Out in a Few Days—They Will Leave for Cuba.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 12.—Camp George H. Thomas at Chickamauga park is rapidly undergoing demolition. At daybreak Wednesday morning the work of breaking camp was begun by a number of the regiments and in a few hours thereafter places which have been covered with white tents for some time were again vacant and deserted. Officers and men of all regiments now remaining are giving their time and attention to the preparations for departure and the regular routine of camp life has been entirely suspended. The first troops out were those of the Third cavalry. They were loaded on special trains at Rossville about 9 o'clock and started through to Tampa over the Southern railway. The Sixth cavalry got out a few hours later, going to Tampa over the same route. The two regiments are under the command of Gen. S. S. Sumner. The Second cavalry under Col. Hinks will probably get out for Mobile late Wednesday afternoon and the First and Tenth cavalry under Col. Baldwin will leave about the same time for New Orleans. Two of the infantry regiments will march nine miles to Ringgold and take cars for Tampa Thursday morning. The three remaining will follow as rapidly as possible. The indications are now that all commands with their equipments will be gone before Friday noon.

The contract for conveying the troops to Tampa has been divided between the Southern and Western Atlantic. The Southern will carry all destined for New Orleans and Mobile.

The railroads are doing excellent work and are giving the officials every assistance in rushing the troops out.

MOBILE, Ala., May 12.—In the camps of the regulars and volunteers all is quiet. EMPEROR WILLIAM.

He Proposes to Gain Control of the Philippine Islands by Guaranteeing to Pay Spain's Indemnity.

LONDON, May 12.—A story is published here to the effect that Germany is preparing to signify her disapproval of a lasting occupation of the Philippine Islands by the United States. The German consul at Manila is said to have been instructed to make representations to Rr. Adm. Dewey differing materially in character from those of the representatives of other powers.

Very heavy claims, it is said, are being encouraged upon the part of Germans who have suffered from the bombardment of Cavite, and Germany, it is further asserted, proposes to obtain control of the Philippine islands, guaranteeing the payment of Spain's indemnity. It is believed this plan is acceptable to Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, and it is understood to have been passively accepted by France, which country is so strongly interested, financially, in the rehabilitation of Spain.

WEALTHY PHILIPPINES.

They Appear Before Consul Wildman, Willing to Take the Oath of Allegiance to the United States.

NEW YORK, May 12.—A copyright dispatch to the Evening World, dated at Hong Kong Wednesday, says:

The Philippine rebel chief, Gen. Aguinaldo, has issued a proclamation to the insurgents at Manila to obey the orders of Commodore Dewey and United States Consul Williams.

Killing still goes on in the outlying districts, where the natives are revenging themselves on the priests and local Spanish officials in spite of the proclamation of Aguinaldo.

Wealthy Philippine families who are leaving Hong Kong for Manila daily appear before Consul Wildman here and asked to be allowed to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. The powerful Cortes family insisted on having their prayer for citizenship telegraphed to President McKinley and offered their palaces in Manila for the accommodation of American officers.

Spanish Soldiers Repulsed by Women.

MADRID, May 12.—A serious riot has taken place at Logrono, capital of the Spanish province of that name, on the Ebro, 60 miles from Burgos. The grain and provision stores were attacked and pillaged by rioters who included numbers of women, armed with axes, choppers and cudgels. The cavalry charged the mob, but the soldiers were repulsed by the determined onslaught made upon them by the women.

Fatal Fire in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 13.—Three persons are known to have lost their lives and it is feared that others may have perished in a fire which originated in the wholesale toy and fireworks establishment of McCadden Bros., 619 Market street, about eleven o'clock Wednesday. The bodies of the three persons who were burned to death are so badly charred that even the sex can not now be learned.

Miss Gould Will Not Equip a Regiment.

NEW YORK, May 12.—Miss Helen Gould positively denies that a regiment is being raised under her patronage to go to Cuba. The publication of a notice to this effect has caused Miss Gould to be deluged with letters from men anxious to enlist in the regiment. Miss Gould says that the use of her name in this connection is wholly unauthorized.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—SENATE.—In the senate Monday the bill offered last Friday authorizing the postmaster-general to establish post offices at military posts and camps, in order to facilitate the delivery of mail to soldiers, was reported favorably by the post offices and post roads committee and unanimously passed. Subsequently an amendment to the post office appropriation bill was agreed to appropriating $50,000 to carry the bill into effect. The post office appropriation bill was under discussion during almost the entire session, the subject of discussion being the proposition to reduce the compensation of railroads 20 per cent. for carrying mails. The amendment was defeated by the decisive vote of 40 to 8.

HOUSE.—The house Monday, by a unanimous and rising vote, tendered its thanks to Commodore Dewey and his officers and men for their gallantry at Manila bay, and next proceeded to pass a bill creating an additional rear admiral. The house Monday spent a good deal of time upon what is known as the "immune bill," or the senate bill to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers and an additional force of 10,000 men especially accustomed to tropical climates. There was a good deal of opposition made to the provision giving the president the power to appoint all the officers, but every effort to give the privates an opportunity to elect their company or regimental officers was defeated by a party vote. The bill as amended was passed and now goes to the senate.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—SENATE.—Four war measures were passed by the senate Tuesday. One of these provided for carrying on the additional work in the adjutant general's office; the second authorized the enlistment of a volunteer signal corps, two-thirds of the members of which must be expert electricians or telegraphers; the third was the so-called "immune bill," passed by the house of representatives; and the fourth was a measure suspending existing law so that additional hospital stewards can be appointed. The post office appropriation bill, carrying an appropriation which aggregate more than $99,000,000 was passed after debate which has lasted for several days. A determined effort was made by Mr. Butler (Rep., N. C.) to cut off the sum appropriated for the fast mail service between New York and Wilmington to Atlanta and New Orleans, and to provide for two committees to investigate mail affairs, but it was unsuccessful, all amendments, except those offered by the committee on appropriations, being voted down.

HOUSE.—The house was Tuesday in session only 50 minutes, the early adjournment being due to no urgent measures of importance being before the house and to a general indisposition to take up minor matters.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—SENATE.—For more than three hours Wednesday afternoon the senate discussed what is known as the railway arbitration bill, a measure designed to adjust by means of voluntary arbitration differences that may arise between railroad officials and their employes. Mr. Kyle, (rep., S. D.) in charge of the bill offered a number of amendments which were agreed to. In order to meet objections raised to the measure, Mr. Hoar (rep., Mass.) offered an ameadmeat, which was accepted, providing that no injunction should be issued which should compel the laborer against his will to carry out any contract for personal labor or service. The bill was still under discussion when the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—After refusing Wednesday by a vote of 98 to 90 to consider the senate bill restricting immigration, the house took up and devoted the session to the house resolution to submit to the states a proposition to amend the constitution so as to provide for the election of senators by direct vote. The amendment as proposed in the resolution, as reported to the house, left it in the discretion of the states to elect their senators by direct vote or through their legislatures but an amendment by Mr. Underwood (Ala.) making selection by popular vote mandatory, was adopted and the resolution was then passed. The house refused to concur in the senate amendment to the post office appropriation bill and asked for a conference. The house set apart May 21 for eulogies upon the late Senator George, of Mississippi, and at 5:08 adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—SENATE.—After a prolonged discussion the senate Thursday evening passed the bill to prevent carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employes—popularly known as the railway arbitration bill. The most important amendment to the measure was that offered by Mr. Hoar (Mass.) which provides that courts shall issue no injunction against railway employes which shall compel them to give their personal service to a company against their will. A bill was passed removing all disabilities imposed by the Fourteenth amendment to the constitution upon persons who were at one time engaged in rebellion against the United States. The war revenue bill was reported to the senate and notice was given that it would be taken up next Monday for consideration.

HOUSE.—The house Thursday effected but little legislation. An important measure providing for a special line of coast defense vessels and the enlistment of men adequate to man them was passed. The senate bill to establish a volunteer signal corps was passed without amendment. A resolution was passed calling upon the secretary of war for information relative to the construction of a ship canal at Sabine Pass, Tex., and its probable effect upon the depth of the harbor at that point. The house voted to insist on its nonconcurrence in the amendment to the bill providing for the Cuba people and the speaker named as conferees Messrs. Marsh (Ill.), Griffin (Wis.) and Cox (Tenn.).

WASHINGTON, May 14.—SENATE.—No business of importance.

HOUSE.—The entire session of the house Friday was devoted to pension and private claim bills. The house agreed to adjourn until Monday, and at 5 p.m. recessed until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to pension business. At the night session the house, in committee of the whole, voted to grant a pension of $50 per month to Maj. Gen. Cassius M. Clay, of Whitehall, Ky. The famous old veteran of the Mexican and civil wars was represented as the owner of the extensive estate known as "Whitehall," but with an income insufficient to meet his expenses. Gen. Clay is now drawing $6 per month as a Mexican veteran, and is 84 years of age. A bill granting a pension to the widow of Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley was acted upon favorably. A total of 46 bills were passed in committee of the whole and six were passed finally by the house.

Two Women Tortured and Robbed.

BRIDGEPORT, Or., May 14.—Mrs. Rebecca Clarke and her niece, Miss Lizzie, who have for years lived in an ancient mansion here, were awakened in the early morning by two masked burglars entering their home. After being bound by the men the women were forced by torture to disclose the hiding place of many family jewels and a large amount of money. They were then threatened in numerous other ways, but the fiends left on hearing a noise on the road. The women are prostrated.

The religious editor of Blade gave us this item and vouches for its being true: "A pretty, good natured, thrifty and most excellent little woman who does not live over 100 miles from Union received a setting of eggs from New York —one was broken. She did not sit down and cry over "split milk" (or broken eggs either), but put her wits to work. She took one of a common every day Boone county egg was taken and one-half of it put over the celebrated New Yorker and set along with the balance. Results—the egg hatched and the chick is doing well."

While working at Ebenezer church, last week, your cor. heard unusual sounds coming from the south Fridays as if an army was in motion and advancing. One hour later the mystery was solved when B. F. Mr. Norman showed us the work he had done in the way of ditching and it seemed well done. He proposes putting $100 in hauling rock for the mud holes which will make his road in tiptop order.

Kurg Edwards caught 8 very nearly full grown rats in a wire trap on Saturday night. Brother Casey was called over to look at them. He suggested that they be dressed and sent to those squirrel hunters who will set up all night by a tree to watch baby squirrels come out of a hole in order to kill them. He knew a man who was in Paris when it was besieged by the Germans, who had often declared that young rats not quite grown tasted exactly like young squirrels, and that no one could tell them apart when dressed.

John Richards' little boy, Deane, to carry his point is at no loss though only five, for averments. The other day he was urging to get Mrs. Fannie Stephens to let her grand-daughter, Gladys Wilson, go over to his house and play with him. Mrs. Stephens said that they would worry his grandma and Gladys had better stay at home. "Why, Mrs. Stephens, we wont worry grandma at all; she is the hardest person to get worried that you ever saw," said the little fellow with the seriousness and gravity of an old pleader.

The Commencement of the Walton Academy drew such a large attendance that it was impossible to get the names of all the visitors. It marks a new era in the history of Walton and is giving an impetus to the cause of education that will have a very beneficial effect on the whole community. Indeed, since the first starting of the school there has been such an improvement in the social and literary standing of the community as to afford the founders a very gratifying sense of satisfaction. The Baccalaureate sermon by the Rev. Mr. Dennis, on Sunday the 8th inst., was a magnificent one, as good as ever was sounded from the pulpit. The lecture ou Education by our townsman, Rev. Rogers, needs no comment, and it is praised without stint by all who had the pleasure of listening to it. Prof. W. A. Tinkley's rendition of the Christmas Carol was unsurpassedly happy. All of these were given in wretched weather, but all drew immense crowds.

The graduating exercises on Thursday evening, May 12th, were greeted with the largest outpouring of the people. There were but four members of the graduating class: Leon Pryor, Mabel Bagby, Edna Ransier and Effie Lermond, and all acquitted themselves in such a creditable manner that one was unable to say which excelled. Had a medal been given it would have been quartered, for to each was given an equal amount of commendation—this is the sentiment of everybody, and it goes.

Everything went off most admirably. The music by the Mandolin Club of Walton, was par excellence superb.

R. C. RICE.

The following good story on Major W. C. Owens, in command of the Georgetown boys, is going the rounds: When Major Owens landed in Lexington with his Spaniard-killers, he lined them all up at the depot, and after marching up and down the line two or three times to see if every man was in his place, he gave the command, "Right about Face." But to his surprise not a man made a motion. Thinking perhaps his voice had not been loud enough to be heard he again gave the order in more vigorous tones. But still not a motion made his men. This was too much for Major Owens and raising himself up to the full height of his commanding person, he yelled in exasperating and thunder tones, "Gee, you damn fools." With that the boys turned in the right direction and proceeded to march to camp as innocently as though the ignorance displayed had all been on the part of their gallant commander.—Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, May 13th, 1898.

When it comes to fighting we can whip the Spaniards just as fast as we can get at them, but when there is a chance for trickery Spain can give this government seven points in a game of ten and win out every time. This was proven again by the wild goose chase upon which Admiral Sampson and the strongest vessels of his fleet have been for more than a week—hunting for the Cape Verde Spanish fleet, which instead of being headed for Porto Rico has turned up on the coast of Spain, 3,000 miles away. Now, when everybody is disgusted and disappointed, some officials have the nerve to say they never believed the Spanish fleet was coming this way at all.

This Spanish fleet has been the bugaboo given by the Administration as an excuse for the delay in invading Cuba. As soon as it was known that it was on the other side of the Atlantic it was announced that the invasion was to begin at once, Gen. Miles, who was to command, engaged a Pullman berth on a train for Florida and hotel quarters for himself at Tampa. Then, presto change! the enraged Pullman berth was not used, and Gen Miles posponed his trip from Washington. Still the public is assured that there has been no doubt or hesitation on the part of the Administration; that Mr. McKinley is not waiting to give Spain a chance to sue for peace, and that the invasion of Cuba will be an accomplished fact in the next few days. The men will be in Florida ready to do the invading, as they are being rushed there as fast as steam can carry them, and there will certainly be no good reason for further postponement. It is the opinion of such men as Fitz Lee, who know what they are talking about, that the campaign in Cuba need not last longer thau 30 days, if as many as 50,000 men are sent over.

There is no room to find any fault with the promptness of the Administion in sending Admiral Dewey—the rank of Rear Admiral was formally conferred upon him by the Presideut and Senate this week—reinforcements to aid him in holding and governing the Pallippine Islauds. The Cruiser Charleston has already started for Manila from San Francisco, and other ships are being prepared to start. It will take the Charleston about three weeks to make the trip.

There is no truth in the charges so persistently being made in Republican papers that Democratic Senators are responsible for the delay on the war revenue bill passed by the House. The fact is the bills passed by the House was a crude and imperfect measure, the Senate Committee on Finance has been trying to whip it into a more satisfactory shape by amending it. More amendments have so far been offered by Republican Senators than by Democrats. The Democrats are too anxious to see this war fought to a speedy and successful close to refuse to do their part towards furnishing the government all the money it needs, but there is money enough ou hand for all present needs and they do not intend being stampeded into supporting obnoxious methods of raising money just because the bill is labeled "war measure."

Major General Joseph Wheeler ("Fighting Joe Wheeler") was the first one of the new Major Generals to take the field. He bade his many friends in Congress goodbye and left for Chattanooga, where he will take his command. He took no steps concerning his seat in the House, and will probably take none until it becomes apparent whether the war is to be a matter of weeks or months Many lawyers contend that the acceptance of a commission by any Federal official vacates the other place. There seems to be a doubt about it. At the request of Senator Sewell, who as major general has been ordered to command the camp of instruction this week established on the Virginia side of the Potomac, several miles from Washington. Attorney General Griggs will give an official opinion on the subject. Major Generals Fitz Lee and James H. Wilson have been ordered to report at Chattanooga for active service.

The concurrent resolution offered by Represeutative Dockery, of Mo., providing for a recess of Congress from June 6, until July 19, which is now in the hands of the Ways and Means committee, was not the result of a party conference, but merely Mr. Dockery's idea of what would be the proper thing to do. Czar Reed hopes to have Congress adjourned before the first named date. As a rule Democrats think it would be unwise to adjourn while the war is in progress. While there is no disposition among them to have Congress interfere with the conduct of the war, they think that Congress ought to have some say about the term of peaces and if it isn't in session it cannot.

With only 11 negative votes the House passed the bill providing for a constitutional ameudment for the election of Senators by the people.

A very sad and fatal accident occurred at Arch Beall's farm, just below town, about 2:30 Thursday afternoon, when little four-year old Wm. Everett Beall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arch Beall, met its death. The child was playing around the yard, aud, it is supposed, in getting on a large unused farm gate, it fell upon the child, breaking its little neck, killing it instantly, and when the parents went to look for it, it was lying underueath the gate, dead. Dr. H. S. Rowlett was called but the little one was past all medical aid.—Warsaw Independent.

The Directors of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association met at the fair grounds near Florence, last Saturday, and transacted considerble business pertaining to the improvements of the grounds and the arrangement of the premium list for the next exhibition which will be August 31 and September 1, 2, 3. Among the improvements added will be a commodious and convenient basket room, and a considerable increase in the number of stock pens. The premium list will exceed that of last year about $1,000 and several large premiums will be given. The ring for the best harness animal regardless of age or sex will command a $100 premium, divided as follows: 1st, $60; 2d, $25; 3d, $15. The same sized premiums will be given in the ring for the best saddle animal, regardless of age or sex. On one day's program will be handsome and shabby turnouts; one day the young men will ride, and the exhibition will close Saturday afternoon with the ladies riding. With favorable weather the fair will be a rouser this year and no mistake.

Harry Biyth has given the old cemetery a thorough cleaning up, and it presents a much better appearance as the last resting place of the departed.

Supt. Voshell came over yesterday and began supervising the school census, in which he finds numerous errors committed by the enrolling officers.

Dewey Day.

It was a Dewey morning in May,
In the land of the rising sun,
That the Spanish in Manilla bay
Were compieteiy over done.

The shells flew thick and fast,
'Mid the cannon's deafening roar—
"The Spanish ships were sunk at last"
The American Eagle did soar.

The haughty Hidalgos fought so slow
On the Pacific's bosom blue,
That, alas, for little Alphouse,
The stars and stripes there flew.

The morn has passed into Dewey day,
Fair Queen of the Western Sea,
Your cause is just, what e're they say,
And Old Glory floats to Cuba Libre.

Old Sol is getting down to business now.

Corn is said to be coming up very nicely.

There are many ways in which to conduct an illcit whisky business, but Oscar Ryle tells of one that takes the bakery.

Henry Pitcher, of Big Bone, was in town, the other day. He says that the tobacco plants in his neighborhood are too small to plant.

Miss Lottie Hall returned home last week, after a two weeks visit with her aunt, Mrs. Julia Elston, of the Hathaway neighborhood.

Talking of what soldiers sometimes eat, Oscar Ryle declared that he could prove by 15,000 men that he had eaten rats, and that he could prove by the same number of witnesses that they make good meat.

Five car loads of Missouri troops passed Erlanger yesterday enroute to Chickamauga, where they will go into camp. The freight trains have all been taken off of the road in order that attention may be given the transportation of soldiers.

The delayed gardener has been given a chance this week.

The prospects for good meadows are favorable.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR

First One Ever Fought in the Cause of Mercy and Humanity.

The Same God Who Has Guided This Nation Heretofore Will Not Desert It When Engaged in a Noble Mission—Talmage's Sermon.

Most pertinent to the exciting times through which we are now passing is this sermon of Dr. Talmage, in which he proposes to cheer the people who are saddened by the horrors of war. Text: Psalm [illegible]: "Though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."

The ring of battle axes and the clash of shields, and the tramp of armies, are heard all up and down the Old Testament; and you find godly soldiers like Moses, and Joshua, and Caleb, and Gideon, and scoundrelly soldiers like Sennacherib, and Shalmaneser, and Nebuchadnezzar. The high priest would stand at the head of the army and say: "Hear O Israel, ye approach this day unto battle against your enemies; let not your hearts faint, fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified because of them!" and then the officers would give the command to the troops, saying: "What man is there that hath built a new house and hath not dedicated it? Let him go and return to his house, lest he die in battle and another man dedicate it. And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard and hath not eaten of it? Let him also go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle and another [illegible] part of it. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife and hath not taken her? Let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle and another man take her." Great armies marched and fought. In time of Moses and Joshua all the men were soldiers. When Israel came out of Egypt they were 600,000 fighting men. Abijah commanded 400,000. Jeroboam commanded 800,000 men, of whom 500,000 were slain in one battle. Some of these wars God approved, for they were for the rescue of oppressed nations, and some of them He denounced, but in all cases it was a judgment upon both victor and vanquished. David knew just what war was when he wrote in the text: "Though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."

David is encouraging himself in stormy times, and before approaching battles administers to himself the consolatory. So to-day my theme is the "Alleviations of War." War is organized atrocity. It is the science of assassination. It is the convocation of all horrors. It is butchery wholesale. It is murder glorified. It is death on a throne of human skeletons. It is the coffin in ascendancy. It is diabolism at a game of skulls. But war is here and it is time now to preach on its alleviations.

First, I find an alleviation in the fact that it has consolidated the north and south after long-continued strained relations. It is 33 years since our civil war closed and the violences are all gone and the severities have been hushed. But ever and anon, in oration, in sermon, in newspaper editorial, in magazine article, on political stump, and in congressional hall, the old sectional difference has lifted its head; and for the first time within my memory, or the memory of any one who hears or reads these words, the north and the south are one. By a marvelous providence the family that led in opposition to our government 30 years ago is represented at the front in this present war. Nothing else could have done the work of unification so suddenly or so completely as this conflict. At Tampa, at Chattanooga, at Richmond and in many other places the regiments are forming, and it will be side by side. Massachusetts and Alabama, New York and Georgia, Illinois and Louisiana, Maine and South Carolina, northern and southern men will together unlimber the guns and rush upon the fortifications and charge upon the enemy and shout the triumph. The voices of military officers who were under Sidney Johnston and Joseph Hooker will give the command on the same side. The old sectional grudges forever dead. The name of Grant on the northern side and of Lee on the southern side will be exchanged for the names of Grant and Lee on the same side. The veterans in northern and southern homes and asylums are stretching their rheumatic limbs to see whether they can again keep step in a march, and are testing their eyesight to find whether they can again look along the gun barrel successfully take aim and fire. The old war cry of "On to Richmond!" and "On to Washington!" has become the war cry of "On to Havana!" "On to Porto Rico!" "On to the Philippine islands!" The two old rusty swords that in other days clashed at Murfreesboro and South Mountain and Atlanta, are now lifted to strike down Hispanic abominations.

Another alleviation of the war is the fact that it is the most unselfish war of the ages. While the commercial rights of our wronged citizens will be vindicated, that is not the chief idea of the war. It is the rescue of hundreds of thousands of people from starvation and multiform maltreatment. A friend who went out under the flag of the Red Cross two years ago to assuage the suffering in Armenia, and who has been on the same mission, under the same flag, in Cuba, says that the suffering in Armenia were a comedy and a farce compared with the greater sufferings of Cuba. At least 200,000 graves are calling to us to come on and remember by what process their occupants died. It is the twentieth century crying out to the nineteenth: "Do you mean to pass down to us the curse with which you have been blasted? Or will you let me begin under new auspices and turn the blight of desolation into an island [illegible]? It is a war inspired by mercy, [illegible] attribute in man implies the same attribute of God. [illegible] age of the world could such a war have been waged. The gospel of kindness needed to be recognized throughout Christendom in order to make such a war possible. The chief reason why most of the European nations are not now banded together against us is because they dare not take the part of that behemoth of cruelty, the Spanish government, against the crusade of mercy which our nation has started. Had it been on our part a war of conquest, a war of annexation, a war of aggrandizement, there would have been by this time enough flying squadrons coming to this country across the Atlantic to throw into panic every city on our American seaboard.

The wars of the Crusaders were only to regain an empty sepulcher: the Napoleonic wars, with their 6,000,000 slaughtered men, were projected and carried out to appease the ambition of one man; of the 25,000,000 slain in Jewish wars; and of the 60,000,000 slain in wars under Julius Caesar; of the 180,000,000 slain in wars with Turks and Saracens; of the 50,000,000 slain in wars of Xerxes; of the 20,000,000 slain in wars of Justinian, and the 32,000,000 slain in the wars of Genghis Khan, not one man was sacrificed by mercy; but in this Hispanic-American war every drummer boy, or picket, or gunner, or standard bearer, or skirmisher, or sharpshooter, or cavalryman, or artilleryman, or engineer who falls, falls in the cause of mercy, and becomes a martyr for God and his country.

An other alleviation of this war is that it is for the advancement of the sublime principle of liberty, which will yet engirdle the earth. [illegible] will this war [illegible] but finally will free Spain. By what right does a dynasty like that stand, and a corrupt court dominate a people for centuries, taxing them to death, riding in gilded chariot over the necks of a beggared population? There are 10,000 boys in Spain growing up with more capacity to govern that nation than will the weak boy now in the Madrid palace ever possess. Before this conflict is ended the Spanish nation will be well on toward the time when a constitutional convention will assemble to establish a free government instead of the worn-out dynasty that now afflicts the people. The liberty of all nations, transatlantic as well as cisatlantic, if not already established, is on the way; and it can not be stopped.

Napoleon III. thought he had successfully driven the principle out of France, when on the second day of December, 1851, he rode down the Champs Elysees of Paris, constitutional government seemingly crushed under the hoofs of his steed. But did it stay crushed? Let the batteries on the heights above Sedan answer, and the shout of 250,000 conquering hosts and the letter of surrender of Emperor William tell the story. "Sire, My Brother: Not having been able to die in the midst of my troops, it only remains for me to place my sword in your majesty's hands. I am, Your Majesty, your good brother, Napoleon. Sedan, 1 September, 1870." That monarchy having fallen, then the French republic resumed its march.

Another alleviation is that the war opens with a great victory for the United States. It took our government four years to get over the fiasco at Bull Run. A defeat at the start of this present war would have been disheartening to the last degree, and would have invited foreign intervention to stop the war before anything practical for God and humanity had been accomplished, and would have prolonged the strife, for which we are hoping a quick termination. In the most jubilant manner let this victory of our navy be celebrated. With the story of the exploded battleship fresh in the minds of the world, it required no ordinary courage to sail into the harbor of Manila and attack the Spanish shipping. That harbor, crowded with sunken weaponry of death; to enter it was running a risk enough to make all nations shiver. But Manila is ours, and the blow has shaken to the foundation the palaces of Madrid, and for policy's sake the doubtful nations are on our side. For Commodore Dewey and all who followed him let the whole nation utter its most resounding huzza; and more than that, let us thank the Lord of hosts for his guiding and controlling power. "Praise ye the Lord! Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord?"

Another alleviation is the fact that in this war the might is on the side of the right. Again and again have liberty and justice and suffering humanity had the odds against them. It was so when Benhadad's Syrian hosts, who were in the wrong, at Apheck, came upon the small regiments of Israel, who were in the right, the Bible putting it in one of those graphic sentences for which the book is remarkable: "The children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids, but the Syrians filled the whole country." It was so in the awful defeat of the Lord's people at Gilboa and Megiddo. It was so recently when gallant and glorious Greece was in conflict with gigantic Mohammedanism, and the navies of Europe hovering about the Bosporus were in practical protection of the Turkish government, fresh from the slaughter of 100,000 Armenians. It was so when in 1776, the 13 colonies, with no war shipping and a few undrilled and poorly-clad soldiers, were brought into contest with the mightiest navy of all the earth and an army that commanded the admiration of nations. It was so when Poland was crushed. It was so when Hungary went under. It has been so during all the struggles heretofore for Cuban independence. But now it is our powerful navy against a feeble group of incompetent ships, crawling across the Atlantic ocean to meet our flotilla, which have enough guns to send them to completely under as when the Red sea submerged Pharaoh's army. It is so in these times, when only a few thousand Spaniards at most can reach our hemisphere, and we go out to meet them with 125,000 armed men, to be backed up speedily with 500,000 more if needed. We do not have to ask for any miracle, but only a fair shot at the ships headed this way, and time enough to demolish them. This is one of the cases in the world's history where might and right are shoulder to shoulder.

Another alleviation is in the fact that such an atrocity as the destruction of 266 lives in Havana harbor in time of peace can not with impunity be wrought in this age of the world's civilization. The question as to who did that infernalism is too well settled to need any further discussion. But what a small crime it was, compared with the systematic putting into their graves of hundreds of thousands of Cubans or leaving them unburied for the buzzards to take care of! If Spain could destroy 200,000 men, women and children, the slaughter of 266 people was not a very great undertaking. But this one last deed will result in the liberation of Cuba, and the driving of Spain from this hemisphere and the overthrow of that government, which will soon drop to pieces if it does not go down under bombardment of insulted nations.

There was danger that the long-continued oppression of our neighbors in Cuba might be continued from generation to generation without sufficient protest on our part and the pronounced execration of people on both sides of the Atlantic, but that bursting volcano of destruction in the harbor of Havana fired the nation and shocked the whole civilized world. All nations will learn that such an act can not be repeated without the anathema of all Christendom. As individual criminals must be punished for the public [illegible] we have [illegible] courts of Oyer and Terminer, and penitentiaries, and electric chairs, and hangman's gallows, so governments committing high crimes against God and humanity must be scourged and hung up for the world's indignation. When in Spanish waters our battleship, looking after our commercial interests and intending nothing but quietude, was hurled into demolition and the men on board, without time to utter one word of prayer, were dashed into the eternal world, the doom of the reigning house of Spain was pronounced in tones of thunder which that night rolled out over the sea.

Another alleviation is the fact that we have a God to go to in behalf of all those of our country men who may be in especial exposure at the front, for we must admit the perils. It is no trifling thing for 100,000 young men to be put outside of home restraints, and sometimes into evil companionship. Many of the brave of the earth are not the good of the earth. To be in the same tent with those who have no regard for God or home; to hear their holy religion sometimes slurred at; to be placed under influences calculated to make one reckless; to have no Sabbath, except such Sabbath as in most encampments amounts to no Sabbath at all; to go out from homes where all sanitary laws are observed into surroundings where questions of health are never discussed; to invade climes where pestilence holds possession; to make long marches under blistering skies; to stand on deck and in the fields under fire, as the mercy of shot and shell—We must admit that those thus exposed need especial care, and to the throne of present God we have a right to commend them. Postal communication may be interrupted, and letters started from camps or homes may not arrive at the right destination; but however far away our loved ones may be from us, and however wide and deep the seas that separate us, we may hold communication with them via the throne of God.

A shipwrecked sailor was found floating on a raft near the coast of California. While in the hospital he told his experience and said he had a companion on the same raft for some time. While that companion was dying of thirst he said to him: "George, where are you going?" and the dying sailor said: "I hope I am going to God." "If you do," said the rescued sailor, "will you ask Him to send some water?" After the death of his companion, the survivor said, the rain came in torrents, and slaked his thirst and kept him alive until he was taken to safety. The survivor always thought it was in answer to the message he had sent to Heaven asking for water. And God, we have direct and instantaneous communication with the Lord Almighty through Jesus Christ, His only begotten Son, and in that faith we may secure the rescue of our imperiled kindred. Is not that a mighty alleviation?

Until this conflict is ended let us be much in prayer for our beloved country. Do not let us depend upon the friendship of foreign nations. Our hope is in God. Out of every misfortune He has brought this nation to a better moral and financial condition, and so let us pray that He will lift us out of this valley of trouble unto a higher mountain of blessing.

It is a mystery that just as this country was recovering from a long season of hard times, so many of our industries should now be halted; that business men who thought they could see their way to pay their debts and build up more prosperous enterprises and endow their homes with more advantages should have to halt and wait until the perfidious oppressors of Cuba shall be turned back. But individual and national life is always clothed with mysteries, and we may make ourselves miserable by stabbing ourselves with sharp interrogation points, and plying the everlasting questions of "Why?" and "How?" and "What?" and "When?" While we must, of course, try to be intelligent on all public affairs, it is a glorious thing to do our duty and then fully and confidently trust all in the hands of God, who has proved Himself the friend of our country from the time when the Spanish government fitted out an expedition to discover it, to this time, when Spaniards would like to destroy it.

GENTEEL HYPOCRISY.

Mrs. Brown Had a Way of Keeping Tab on Callers Who Conversed Behind Her Back.

Tragedies are best treated in few words, so suffice to say that the phonograph had been standing all day in the room where Mrs. Brown sat with her month old baby! This is the record it spouted forth in the evening when Mr. Brown came home and turned it on:

"Oh, the little darling! The angel child!"

"Beautiful eyes! Exactly like his mother's!"

"So good, too! Oh, no! It doesn't cry half as much as most babies! Ittle precious lamb!"

"Oh, it's just the loveliest little thing I ever saw! I could dess eat it uppie, uppie, and so I tuddie, tuddie! Bess it's heart!"

"What a fine head! What a brow! Why, I never saw a child with genius stamped more clearly on its face! Why, of course, there's something hurting it! Ittle sweetness udn't ty unless aunpin was hurtin, it, ud it, pecious?"

"Oh, dear! There's the girl calling me from the kitchen! Excuse me just one moment!"

"Certainly, Mrs. Brown! Certainly!"

"Goodness gracious! I couldn't have kept up the faree much longer! Isn't it hideous!"

"Ugliest little creature I ever saw! I told the truth, though, when I said it looked like its mother! What goggle eyes!"

"Shut up, you brat! Just pure peevishness!"

"It don't look just right to me! I never heard that the Browns had insanity in their blood, though! Well, there are lots of things in this world you don't hear!"

"Lord! I'm glad she didn't make us kiss the horrid little thing! I wouldn't—"

"Oh, you darling! I could just love—"

"Beauty!" "Angel!" "Dream!" "Sugar lump!"

"Oh, Mrs. Brown! I'm almost afraid we've smothered the child with caresses while you were out! Yes, we must go! I, for one, am afraid to stay; I'm getting so desperately envious of your treasure."—N. Y. Journal.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Excepting onions, there is no more disagreeable odor that permeates a house than that of cabbage cooking. There are other vegetables that make almost as bad an odor, and some families eschew the whole lot rather than endure the scent. An old cook says that you can have cabbage and carrots, codfish and boiled corned beef and never know any of them are in the house if you just follow her directions. Put over the fire a pint of good vinegar, and when it boils up tumble two tablespoonfuls of sugar in it. Then set the can on the back of the stove, and let the vinegar simmer as long as you are cooking the vegetables, and never a bit of odor can be detected. When the vinegar boils low, put in water and let it simmer. It must be boiling well before you put the cabbage on to cook.

Sometimes a sentimental charm attaches to the photograph of the childhood's home, and it is often framed in gold and white enamel. A prettier idea is to secure from the old place a moss-covered board, and of this have the frame made by a cabinet or frame-maker, putting a simple beading of white enamel next the photograph and a glass over it.

The housewife who makes large use of oranges will make no dietetic error. Next to the apple it is considered the best of all the fruits that are within the reach of the multitude, being so cheap that they cost but little more than potatoes at some seasons of the year. There are many charming desserts that can be made of oranges, but the very healthiest way to use them is to free them of skin and white pith, remove the seeds and slice, putting over them fine granulated sugar. A delicious orange beverage is made by using the juice of two lemons and the juice and pulp of half a dozen oranges, or in that proportion to two quarts of water, with cracked ice in it. Serve with a long-handled spoon in a tall glass. When sweetened to taste, for which you pass pound sugar, it is delicious and refreshing. Limes may be substituted for lemons.—Washington Star.

Rhubarb Cake.

One cupful of sugar, half a cupful of butter, two-thirds of a cupful of sweet milk, the whites of three eggs, two heaping teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar mixed with three cupfuls of flour, and two even teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in the milk. Cream, butter and sugar together, add the milk, then the whites of eggs and flour alternately. Bake in three layers. For the filling beat together with the yolks of two eggs, half a cupful of sugar, one-fourth of a cupful of butter, then add one-third of a cupful of rhubarb juice strained from unsweetened rhubarb which has been stewed. Set the vessel containing this mixture in one of hot water and stir continunlly until the paste is smooth and thick. Take from the stove and spread between the cakes. Frost if desired.—Ladies' World.

Sash Curtains.

Sash curtains of surah in solid color are gaining ground, especially for cold weather hangings. They are placed next the window, are draped to have two broad hems, sometimes hemstitched, sometimes not. Pink seems to be the favorite shade, although a pair of empire green ones seen lately were very handsome and more durable than the pink.—N. Y. Post.

THE COUNTRY AT PRESENT.

Industrial Depression Resulting from Legislation Hostile to Labor Interests.

A calm and careful review of the progress of the various influences at work molding the destiny of this republic leads toward optimistic conclusions. When all things are considered, there is nothing that should be discouraging in the obstinate stupidity of a considerable portion of the masses whose political bribe is a subsidized gold standard organ, or who at every election think they drive shrewd bargains in exchanging their birthright for messes of pottage. Not totally impenetrable is the present gloom on account of industrial depressions, caused by corrupt legislation, hostile to labor interests, although it will continue to hover around, with varying density, as long as the people choose public servants who treacherously become subject to the control of the class that is striving to thoroughly establish, for all time to come, a plutocracy to be supported in luxury by the interest on bonds always to be refunded and never to be paid at maturity. I think I can show why, writes A. A. Renshaw, in the Mississippi Valley Democrat. The plain truth, which was temporarily obscured in 1896 by the subsidized press and politicians and the muzzled preachers and professors, is brought by natural laws to rise again triumphant. Is it not strange that in that year a colossal campaign fund was able to successfully darken counsel with words of [illegible] Though the lines were sharply drawn between the people and their plunderers as never before since Andrew Jackson's day, yet the confusion incident to a hurried, and, for many voters, novel agitation, prevented a cohesion of reform forces. However, there was a signal disintegration of the cement of party prejudice and a separation of right and wrong, so that now, in the calm interim between quadrennial election there is steadily taking place a recrystallization, in which affinities are inevitably drawn together—the honest, unselfish and patriotic on one side, and the corrupt, greedy and plutocratic on the other side. It is not a division between the rich and poor for some of the former are true blue patriots, while many of the latter profess admiration for corrupt practices, claiming it is the smartest man who can sell for the highest price. Surely there can be no doubt as to the result of a test at the polls between two such opposing forces unless the people are woefully ignorant of the issue. In spite of the deep-laid schemes of the plotters in unearned increments, the course of the present administration has unmasked the hypocritical pretensions of the St. Louis platform makers, and muffled tones of unmuzzled truth are even now and then heard amid the din of the republican scramble for spoils. Up to the time when the Cuban question overshadowed everything else, there has been at Washington so conspicuous an exhibition of corrupt greed that he who runs may read the handwriting on the wall. The president's cabinet (with Hanna on the side) is largely made up of repulsive types of fin de siecle plutocrats, which, the Creator be praised, will fade away with the century, and it compromises representatives of various forces that threaten the stability of the republic. The attorney-general is the undisguised champion of corporate tyranny; the secretary of the treasury represents the respectable church, unconscious of the insidious encroachments of Mammon, the name of the secretary of state is the synonym of cold, calculating treachery, and our own assistant secretary of the interior represents that numerous class of republicans who stifle their honest convictions for pie. I cannot conceive the possibility of an aggregation of evil, such as the republican party has developed into, being indorsed this year or in 1900 by the people, unless Ahitophels dominate in the counsels of the three opposing parties. Since the plutocrats are determined to establish a public indebtedness, the principal of which is to be handed down through all future generations, the people ought to have enough Anglo-Saxon spirit to say: "If necessary, so be it. But in that case we will take care that we will be the creditors, and will take the debt in denominations of from one dollar to fifty dollars and charge no interest. We see the absurdity of paying idlers for the privilege of drawing upon the products of our own labor."

OPINIONS AND POINTERS.

——Even Hanna is moved to enthusiasm by the news from Manila. He must have his eye on a rice plantation over there.—St. Louis Republic.

——The idea that the foreigner can be made, through the workings of a tariff, to buy warships for us and keep an army in the field for us, and pay our bills generally, is as dead as Julius Cæsar. And for that much we can be thankful. Even Mr. Dingley appears to have come to a partial recognition of the truth that the tariff is a tax.—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

——Mark Hanna admits that "Commodore Dewey has demonstrated that Americans can fight, when it is necessary to uphold the honor of the nation;" and inasmuch as Mr. Hanna is conceededly the greatest living expert authority on all matters connected with the national honor, we suppose Dewey may consider his tactics at Manila to be vindicated.—Albany Argus.

——Under the existing duties in many instances the "protection of labor" is nothing more than a deceptive phrase. Tariff schedules which foster trusts that control the output and price of the necessaries and common conveniences of life, and that throw industry out of employment, to feed the voraciousness of plundering combinations of American and foreign capital, are in no sense "protective" of anything save insatiable avarice.—Philadelphia Ledger.

TAKING THEIR TIME.

The Unsettled Financial Policy of the Republican Administration.

Secretary Gage makes even a poorer showing for his party's $500,000,000 bond scheme than was made by Messrs. Dingley and Dolliver in advocating that suspicious measure on the floor of the house.

In his statement before the senate committee, Mr. Gage claimed that there would be an available balance of $91,000,000 when the deficiencies in the war and navy departments were met. When every pressing claim is met, he estimates that there will be an available cash balance of $70,000,000 above the gold reserve of $100,000,000. The best estimates, he asserts, place the extraordinary expenses of the war and navy departments in the vigorous prosecution of hostilities at $52,000,000 up to July 1, exclusive of the $50,000,000 already at the disposal of the president for national defense.

In the face of this showing of figures, Secretary Gage made the extraordinary statement that from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 in addition to ordinary revenues would have to be realized between now and July 1 to preserve the gold reserve intact. When pressed by Senator Turpie for an explanation in detail of his plans for meeting the cost of the war, Mr. Gage said he "knew of no other method for raising this extra money except by taxation or the sale of bonds." Further on the secretary used the words: "I know of no legitimate operation to borrow in any way you can make it acceptable to both parties to the contract."

In this last declaration is the keynote to the whole scheme of the administration's financial policy. "In any way you can make it acceptable to both parties to the contract," says the secretary of the treasury in defining his method of getting money for the government. The question naturally suggests itself as to whom financiers of the Gage caliber regard as "both parties to the contract" when they begin to cast about in search of cash for immediate needs of the government. Of course, the government is one of the parties. In the purview of the Gages the bondholders, and they only, are the other "party." This takes no account of the wishes of the people. The only persons whose wishes are to be consulted are those comprising the small class of bond dealers.

In urging this bond transaction, none of its advocates have yet shown that there is a necessity, present or prospective, for an issue of any large amount of interest-bearing obligations of the government. Nobody in authority at Washington has claimed that the war was to be a long one—that hostilities were to be extended over a period that would exhaust even the available cash balance in the treasury.

The senate can do the country no harm by holding the $500,000,000 bond bill in abeyance until it becomes indisputably evident that we shall need to add more interest-bearing burdens to the national debt in order to whip puny, bankrupt Spain.—St. Louis Republic.

REPUBLICAN SCHEME.

How the Hannaites Propose to Raise Funds to Carry on the War.

When the revenue bill to raise money to prosecute the war against Spain was prepared by the ways and means committee no democrat was consulted. It was the idea of the republicans to have a measure strictly partisan in character, strictly in the interest of republicans, and then to force the democrats in congress to vote for it under the plea that it was a war measure and it would be "unpatriotic" to oppose it. This sort of bulldozing is evidently going to be the method followed by the administration party, and the republican press has received instructions from Boss Hanna, whose cringing slave it is, to work the "obstructionist racket" for all it is worth. There can be no doubt that there are many things in the revenue bill which should not be there, but much more is it true that there are many things not in that bill that should be in it. Necessities of life are taxed to the utmost, but incomes and luxuries are not touched. The poor man's glass of beer and his pipe must be levied on to help pay the expenses of war. To be sure, the rich man bought protection during the last presidential campaign by paying large sums of money to Hanna, but there was no talk of war then, and the bargain ought to be declared off because of the change in conditions. While the republican majority in congress voted cheerfully to tax the necessities of the people, the inquiry will not down as to why such operations as the giant Standard Oil combine should escape without the tribute of a single penny to the war fund. Why should the man who has to spend money for the necessities of life be forced to pay a tax on every cent he spends, while the man who receives an income of $2,000 a day not have to pay a cent of tax? And yet administration papers say democrats are "obstructionists" because those same democrats want to equalize the burden of war by making the rich help the poor to carry it.

——Among the compensations of the war is the gradual subsidence of Mark Hanna. We no longer hear of that gentleman issuing orders to cabinet officers, directing the course of legislation and sitting in the white house with his heels on the president's lap. Along with those other glorious old war horses, Steve Elkins and John J. McCook, Mr. Hanna has been shoved into the background by the pressure of great events. But, unlike the Manila cable, the wires to Wall street are still intact. Deaf to the roar of battle, Marcus may find consolation and even modest gain in the clatter of the peaceful stock ticker. Somewhere there is balm for every aching heart.—Chicago Chronicle.

RAILWAY MANAGEMENT.

Address of Hon. M. E. Ingalls to the Commissioners' Convention.

Questions Pertaining to the Conduct of Railways Which Are of Interest to the General Public.

The railway commissioners of the country met in convention at Washington, D.C., on Tuesday, May 10, for the purpose of considering questions of great interest both to the railways and the people of the United States. The convention was addressed by Hon. M. E. Ingalls, a high authority in railway matters, upon the establishment of proper traffics, conduct of shippers and the betterment of existing conditions in railway affairs, also the advancement of measures looking to the greater comfort and convenience of the public. Mr. Ingalls' address is here given as being a semi-official expression of the views held by railway managers generally, and as being also of general interest to the public at large:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: I am very much obliged for this opportunity of addressing you. I understand I have in my audience the members of the interstate commerce commission and the gentlemen composing the various railway commissions of the different States. Such a body that is supposed to stand as an arbiter between the railroads and the people, as a friend of both, as the public servant of both does have great influence, and especially in reference to legislation regarding railroads. If this audience should agree upon any legislation in that regard that was needed, [illegible] could be no difficulty in inducing yonder congress to enact it into law, and believing as I do that it is essential to the public interest to secure legislation, I am pleased to have this opportunity of presenting my views and endeavoring to enlist you in the reforms which I think are so vital. We have reached a crisis in railway management where something must be done if we would avoid disaster, not alone to the railways, but to the material interests of our country.

"For 20 years a contest has been waged in legislatures, in congress and before the courts, by the public, by those who believed that railways were public corporations and subject to control by the power that created them; and, on the other hand, by others of the railway idea, who did not believe such control was legal or practicable. State after state asserted its right. These rights were contested from one court to another, and decided from time to time always in favor of the people, under certain restrictions. It finally culminated in 1887 in the enactment of the interstate commerce law, and since then there has been hardly a day when some provision of that law was not under consideration by the courts or by conferences, or perhaps we may state it is as fairly settled by the highest courts in the land that the legislatures of the states have control over railways with reference to their local business, and subject to certain conditions, and that the congress of the United States has the power to regulate interstate business. The supreme court of the United States, which is the highest arbiter of these differences, has just decided that such control of the states, of regulation, must be reasonable, and that rates cannot be reduced so low a point whoro the railroads can earn their expenses and a fair return upon their cost.

"Railway managers had accepted the situation and were endeavoring to obey the interstate commerce law and adapt their management to the new order of things. Instead of which a decision was rendered by the supreme court which produced chaos and destroyed all agreements. It was practically that the Sherman anti-trust law, so-called, which it had not been supposed applied to railways, did apply to them, and under the construction of that law by the court it was practically impossible to make any agreements or arrangements for the maintenance of tariffs. In the case brought against the Joint Traffic Association in New York, this view has been combatted by the railways and it may be modified by the courts. But since that decision in March, 1897, there has been practically a state of anarchy so far as the maintenance of tariffs is concerned in a large part of this country.

"It is well, perhaps, that we should look the situation fairly in the face, and while I do not care to be an alarmist, I feel bound to describe plainly to you the condition today, so that you may understand the necessity for action. Never in the history of railways have tariffs been so little respected as to-day. Private arrangements and understandings are more plentiful than regular rates. The larger shippers, the irresponsible shippers, are obtaining advantages which must sooner or later prove the ruin of the smaller and more conservative traders, and in the end will break up many of the commercial houses in this country and ruin the railways. In madness seems to have seized upon some railway managers, and a large portion of the freights of the country is being carried at prices far below cost. Under such a maintenance of tariffs the condition of the railways is good; their physical condition has been improved; their trains are well managed, and the public will never rest till a way can be found by which tariffs can be maintained and the practice of secret rebates and private contracts be discontinued, the future will have great promise for railway investors, railway employes and the public generally. And here I wish to say that this is not a question such as concerns railway investors alone. If it was, you might say 'let them fight it out.' It concerns over and above everyone else, the great army of one-fifth of our people interested directly in railways, either as employes or employes of manufactories that are engaged in furnishing supplies to the railways. Can any body imagine that if one-fifth of its number is engaged in a business that is losing money? The railways are certainly in the public in so many ways that their prosperity is closely interwoven with the prosperity and the comfort of the ordinary people. One thousand millions of dollars were paid out last year by the railways from their earnings to employes of manufactories in this country; 511,000,000 of passengers were carried; 13,000 millions were carried one mile; 765,000,000 of tons of freight were moved; 95,000 millions of tons were moved one mile. Do you think that any interest performing such immense service as this can be in difficulty and the balance of the country not feel it? Forty millions of dollars were paid out for public taxes. Over three thousand millions of dollars that have been invested in railways have earned no dividend for years. This is not water, as some populist orator will say, but good, honest money. These securities are held all through the land, and their failure to pay any return has brought disgrace upon us abroad and suffering and want in many a family and community at home. A slight improvement in the rate, which would be scarcely felt, would make this investment good. One mill per ton per mile, or one-tenth of a cent, additional, the year would have made $95,000 increase in net revenue, and this would have paid three per cent. upon this invested capital.

"These are the material sides of the question. There is a much more dangerous view, and that is the demoralization of the men conducting these immense enterprises and the want of respect for the law which is being developed by the present situation. The troubles, the difficulties under the provisions and the interstate commerce law. It has grown up from various sources. The panic of 1893 and the loss of business for the next few years impaired the competition between the lines; new avenues were opened; the competition of the Gulf ports increased enormously; also that of the Canadian Pacific on the north. Altogether, these causes produced such sharp competition, coupled with the decision referred to of the courts, that no understanding or agreements can be made, and have combined to produce the most complete breakdown that has ever been seen in any business. There is less faith to-day between railway managers with reference to their agreements to maintain tariffs than was probably ever known on earth in any other business. Men managing large corporations who would trust their opponent with their pocketbook with untold thousands in it, will hardly trust agreement for the maintenance of tariffs while they are in the room together. Good faith seems to have departed from the 'railway world, so far as traffic agreements are concerned.

"One of the chief difficulties with the law as it stands to-day is that the punishment for private contracts and rebates is entirely out of proportion to the offense. The imprisonment clause was put in as an amendment to the interstate commerce law, and I believe the commission and everyone who has watched its workings will agree with me that it has been a failure; more than a failure, that it has caused perhaps more demoralization than anything else. The public has not believed in it, has been impossible to get a conviction; it has prevented the railway official who desired to be honest from complaining of his competitor whom he thought was dishonest. In fact, it has become that every law is that is not supported by public sentiment—a failure. What, in fact, is the man now conducting business under it? The railway official who desires to be honest and law-abiding sees traffic leave his line and finds the freight that he was carrying hauled to the warehouse of his rival, the earnings of his line decreasing and complaints from the management of loss of earnings, and in the distance he sees looming up the loss of his position. At the same time, the shipper who desires to obey the law sees some rival selling merchandise to his customers at prices he cannot meet, and he knows very well that he is receiving concessions from some railway to enable him to do this. The railway agent and the shipper to wish to obey the law sit down together and look it over. What relief is there for them? They can complain of their rivals, possibly convict them under the interstate commerce law and send them to the penitentiary, but such action would bring down upon them the condemnation of the public, and would ruin their business; for, as I stated before, the public does not believe in this severe feature of the law, and will not support anyone who enforces it. The result is, these men in despair are driven to do just what their opponents are doing—they become lawbreakers themselves. I have drawn no fancy picture; it is what is occurring every day around you. Boards of trade, commercial bodies and conventions have repeatedly reported on it, and all have come to the same conclusion, and the law should be enacted imposing a fine of, say, $5,000 upon the offending corporation; make each and every contract or bill of lading a separate offense. Leave out the shipper altogether—you want his testimony. If he cheats by underbilling or false invoices, he should be punished, but his attempt to secure a lower rate than his rival should not be punishable, as you then prevent getting testimony which you need. With this amendment put into law every railway official will be interested in prosecuting his rival for any violation of the law.

"To-day you cannot get any help that way, because to one is going to try to send his competitor to prison. Public sentiment would not support it, and over it all is the fear that he himself may have committed transgressions which, if found out, will be discovered and prosecuted, and punishment inflicted upon himself. But if it was a case of fine against the corporation, there would be no hesitation in finding these corporations using the entire power which they have to convict wrongdoing. You may think that some would pay these fines and go on, but I assure you that a few fines of $5,000 would work wonders in reforming railway corporations in their management. Above all, you will have public opinion behind you, and it will be easy to enforce this law. You can get all the testimony you want; no one can refuse to produce his books. You will at least give those railway officials and those shippers who sincerely desire to be law-abiding citizens a fair chance to defend themselves.

"Second, the law should be amended so that railway corporations can contract with each other for the maintenance of rates or the division of business, and in case of failure of either party to keep his contract allow the other to sue in the courts and recover damages. This, in part, is what is called pooling, but it is more than this. It legalizes contracts between railway corporations. It may be a contract for maintenance of rates with no division of business. To-day, if two railway corporations contract that they will maintain the same rate between Baltimore and New York it is a conspiracy, contrary to public policy, and cannot be enforced in the courts. This is an old law which is not adapted to modern business methods. It grew up to protect the public in old times, but it is no longer necessary, and should be changed to legislation. The right to pool, as you all know, provides that two or more railway corporations can agree to divide the business between competing points on certain proportions, and a line that carries more than its share shall pay a certain sum as damages for its failure to keep its contract. The objection to allowing this has been that excessive rates would be charged. To protect the public in this matter, enact into law that upon the complaint of any citizen such rates shall be subject to review by the interstate commerce commission, and in case they shall find that they are excessive they shall at once be reduced to the basis fixed by the interstate commerce commission, or else the agreement shall be ended.

"All of us who have any interest in our country, who desire its prosperity, are interested in this solution of this great question. It is not a time for the demagogue to howl about corporations. It is not a time to talk about the wrongdoings of railway managers. There are always to come, in this business, who will not do right, and there always will be, but the great mass of railway managers to-day, I assure you, are as honestly seeking a solution of this question as are you or any member of the legislative body. I believe I voice the belief of a very large majority of them that the two provisions I have mentioned are necessary and will lead to the settlement of this question. If this body will join and heartily indorse this course and work for it, its accomplishment can be attained. That it is unwittingly in this country applied to railway laws that it was never intended should be applied, by reference to many provisions of this nature. We have gone back and taken decisions that were wise a hundred years ago, when civilization was in its infancy and when the masses needed certain protection, and have endeavored to apply these same principles to the great transportation interests of modern times. The courts, unfortunately, have followed this line.

"I beg of you, gentlemen, to take these things to heart. If the thoughts that I have suggested are wise and commend themselves to your judgment, put them in such form as is proper and present them to congress with your recommendations, and I have not much doubt but they will be made into law. Some people will oppose them through selfish interest or for political reasons; there will be some railway managers who fear the effect of the present power and who can see great trouble in the future, who will oppose them; but I say, determine to assist the enormous interest as this, wait for everyone to agree? Take the great mass of thinking men, frame what yourselves approve, and put it into the shape of a law and let us try it. If it accomplishes what we wish, it will be a fortunate day for the country. If it accomplishes but a little of what we hope, we shall indeed have made a success. If we are mistaken and it does no good, we at least shall have the satisfaction of having made an honest effort in the right direction."

THE LAW IN THE CASE.

It Was So Plain and Simple That There Was No Need of an Appeal.

The man in the southwest had stolen the horse beyond the peradventure of a doubt, for he had been taken with the horse under him and the owner's name was on the blanket. Under these circumstances he should have been thankful that he had been granted even so much as a trial by a judge on a soap box, because many such offenders, with far less evidence of guilt, had been swung up to the nearest telegraph pole on sight. But this one had had a trial and the verdict had been duly announced.

"Genta," remarked the judge, who was attired in a red flannel shirt and sand-colored pantaloons, "take the prisoner."

The eager crowd made a rush for him, when a lawyer from the effete east, who was present by the merest accident, shouted to the judge:

"Stop this business. You are acting contrary to the law."

The judge, being a good-natured fellow and a gentleman by instinct, stopped it as requested.

"What's that the gent says?" he asked.

"This procedure is contrary to the law," replied the lawyer.

"What law?" said the judge, in surprise.

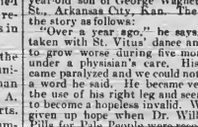
"The accepted law of the land."

"I reckon not," smiled the judge.

"But I tell you it is," persisted the lawyer.

"Aw, go jangle yourself," exclaimed the judge. "Don't I know law? Law is a rule of action prescribing what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. Now, mister," and he continued in a friendly manner, "if your air ready to tell these here gents that it is wrong to hang a man fer hoss stealin' you kin. Jurisprudence is the court to do it, but the court ain't goin' to be responsible fer what happens to a man with them senterments."

The crowd assented to this proposition with a shout of admiration for the judge, and the legal luminary from the east withdrew with more or less precipitance.—Washington Star.



AN ANCIENT CUSTOM.

From Republican Traveler, Arkansas City, Kan.

Pilgrimages to some shrine of St. Vitus, to cure the disease known as St. Vitus' dance are no longer made. The modern way of treating this affliction is with reach of every household, as is shown by the experience of A. Wagner, the eleven-year-old son of George Wagner, of 515 9th St., Arkansas City, Kan. The father tells the story as follows:

"Over a year ago," he says, "Karl was taken with St. Vitus' dance and continued to grow worse during five months he was under a physician's care. His tongue became entirely paralyzed and he could utter a word he said. He became very thin, lost the use of his right leg and seemed doomed to become a hopeless invalid. We had about given up hope when Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People were recommended to my wife by a lady whose daughter had been cured of a similar affliction by the pills.

"I bought a box of them at once and soon noticed a change for the better in Karl's condition. I was so well pleased that I bought more of them, and when he had taken five boxes the disease disappeared.

Hopeless Invalid.

"That was six months ago and there has been no return of the disease. The cure was effectual and permanent, and I feel satisfied that no other medicine could have produced so marvelous a result. We feel rejoiced over the restoration of our son, and cannot help but feel that Dr. Wilhams' Pink Pills for Pale People are the most remarkable medicine on the market."

No discovery of modern times has proved such a blessing to mankind as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Acting directly on the blood and nerves, invigorating the body, regulating the functions, they restore the strength and health in the exhausted patient when every effort of the physician proves unavailing.

These pills are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE.

And what it led to.

It is not a common occurence that a friendly word should be the means of giving nearly forty years of happiness and health to the person heeding the advice it carried. This was the case with Mary Lingard. At twenty-five she was dragging out her days in misery. At sixty-one she finds herself so active and strong she can do work that would shame many a younger woman, and looks back on thirty-six happy, healthful years of industry. But let her tell her story:

"Thirty-six years ago I had great trouble with my liver. The doctors allowed that there were tumors growing on it, and they blistered my side in an effort to give me relief. I was at that time earning my living as a tailoress, but for five years, between the pain in my side and the blisters I was in constant misery, and work was a drag to me, with no prospect of relief; fortunately for me, however, a friend advised me to take Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and finally persuaded me to take a regular course of it. When I first commenced taking the Sarsaparilla my side was so tender that I could not fasten my dress, and for a time I did not get any relief, but my friend advised me to persevere, and relief was sure to come, and come it did. This happened, as I say, thirty-six years ago. My liver has never troubled me since, and during these years I have passed through the most critical period in a woman's life without any particular trouble, and to-day, at sixty-one years of age, I am active and strong, and able to do a day's work that would upset a younger woman. Ever since my recovery I have taken a couple of bottles of Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla each spring, and am quite satisfied that I owe my good health to this treatment. I give this testimonial purely in the hope that it may meet the eye of some [illegible] sufferer."
MARY LINGARD, Woods [illegible]

Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla Courts [illegible] to every corner of the [illegible] the praise of its friends; those who [illegible] tried it and who know they were [illegible] by the use of the remedy. There is [illegible] so strong as this personal testimony. Away with theories and fancies to the winds and stands solidly upon the rock of experience challenging every skeptic with a positive "I know." Ayer's Sarsaparilla with its purifying and vitalizing action on the blood is a radical remedy for every form of disease that begins in tainted or impure blood. Hence inner disorders, ulcers, boils, eruptions and similar diseases yield promptly to this medicine. Some cases are more stubborn than others, but persistence with Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla usually results in a complete cure. Many Lingard's age with a bottle, and went on to a course of Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When she was cured she realized that a medicine of such power to cure should also prevent it. So she took a couple of bottles each spring and kept in perfect health. There are thousands of similar cases on record. Some of these are gathered in Ayer's Curebook, a little book of 100 pages which is sent free by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass. Write for it.

CARAMELS.

The Sweet Satisfaction a Woman Finds in Conquering Masculine Hearts.

"And do you ever have such moments?" she asked.

"Yes," he replied, "many of them."

"You are young, you have genius, you have many friends who expect great things of you. Why should you ever have a dreary moment?"

He turned an earnest look upon her, and she permitted her long curling lashes to brush her cheek.

"Need I tell you why?" he asked, in trembling tones.

She did not answer.

"If I had been permitted to know—some one, before it was too late," he went on, "life could have held no dreary moments for me. If I dared now to ask for the love of—some one who has grown dear to another, Heaven would open to me. If I dared —if I dared—"

He hesitated. She arose and smiled sadly as they parted.

That night she sat alone and held her mirror in her hands for a long, long time.

Finally she laid it down, feelings of satisfaction in her heart as she contemplated her beauty.—Cleveland Leader.

TRIALS OF SALESWOMEN.

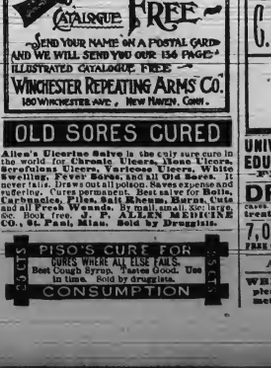
Mrs. Pinkham Says Standing Still is One of Woman's Most Trying Tasks.

Have you ever thought why it is that so many women or girls rather walk for an hour than stand still for ten minutes?

It is because most women suffer from some derangement of their delicate organism, the discomfort from which is less trying when they are in motion than when standing.

So serious are these troubles and so dangerous to health that the laws in some states compel employers to provide resting places for their female employees.

But no amount of law can regulate the hard tasks of these women. Customers are exacting, and expect the saleslady to be always cheerful and pleasant. How can a girl be cheerful when her back is nailed by lassitude and bearing-down pains? No matter how sweet tempered she is naturally, her nerves give way under the pain after a while. Employers, however, don't want cross and snappy saleswomen. Cheerfulness is very important capital, and no one can be amiable when racked with pain.



If you are ill or suffering, write without delay to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and tell her all about yourself. Your story will not be new to her; she has heard it many thousand times and will know just what you need. Without doubt, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, it has done such wonderful things for suffering women. Do not hesitate to write her all the little things that make you feel miserable. Your letter will not be seen by any man, and Mrs. Pinkham's advice will cost you nothing.

Read this letter from Mrs. MARGARET ANDERSON, 403 Lisbon St., Lewiston, Me.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For years I had suffered with painful menstruation every month. At the beginning of menstruation it was impossible for me to stand up for more than five minutes, I felt so miserable. One day a little book of Mrs. Pinkham's was thrown into my house, and I sat right down and read it. I then got some of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills.

"I can heartily say that to-day I feel like a new woman; my monthly suffering is a thing of the past. I shall always praise the Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me."

The members of the diplomatic corps and the international lawyers here all agree that the United States has a right to hold the Philippines for indemnity or annex them to our territory, but such annexation must follow a treaty of peace and be with the consent of Spain. Of course, we would have to respect the vested rights of foreign nations in those islands, because in giving us a title, Spain could only transfer her own interests and not the interests of others. Having secured a legal title we can establish an independent government or a protectorate, or we can sell them to Japan or England or any other nation, just as a man can sell real estate that he has obtained by legacy, purchase or forfeiture. The same rules that govern private individuals govern nations in this respect, but before we can dispose of the territory, we must get a clear title, because a nation, like a man, would not care to buy into a lawsuit.—Chicago Chronicle.

In a fight with shot guns in Casey county, Owen Southerland killed John Sampson. Southerland was wounded.

Ryland, 8-year-old son of Dr. R. D. Pratt, of Shelbyville, died of lockjaw, caused by stepping on a rusty nail.

A company of Georgetown colored men have been enrolled, ready to go when the next call for volunteers is made.

Charles Williams, 15, colored, who detained a female, was sentenced at Georgetown to seven years in the penitentiary.

Rice Brothers' store, at Dawson Springs, near Madisonville, was robbed of $700 in merchandise and $275 in cash.

Young Asher, of Todd county, was disemboweled by his shot gun which was discharged when he was crawling through a fence.

Miss Effie Hill, of Knob Lick, fell dead while walking across the room at home. Her father was killed a few years ago by lightning.

At Eddyville the jury in the Cato murder case stood six for hanging and six for imprisonment for life. The jury was out sixty-two hours.

A coroner's jury at Louisville held Carrie Rogers guilty of the murder ot Houston Hutchinson, whom she fatally shot when shooting at and missed George Jones.

In Pike county Miss Martha Branham and Mrs. Nancy Dawson fought over a dress. Joe Branham, the 18-year-old brother of Miss Branham, came up and stabbed Mrs. Dawson to death.

The dwelling house of Squire Rogers, near Franklinton, was partially blown up by dynamite. He and his wife were in bed in the house when the explosion occurred, but escaped injury, though the door was blown from the hinges and across the room.

Mrs. Melinda Collins, colored, resides at Minerva. She has been ill for several months. Monday she was seized with sickness of the stomach, followed by severe vomiting. In one of her paroxysms she threw up a reptile six inches long and nearly an inch in diameter. It was coated with a heavy skin, had perfect head, eyes and tail, was pure white and resembled a lizard. The absolute truth of this is vouched for by Major W. H. Hawes, who saw the reptile and knows the fact.—Maysville Public Ledger.

In Floyd county, John Adams, a wealthy farmer, 80 years old, was married to Dora Hall, a girl of sixteen. The couple met for the first time the day before they were married. She consented to marry him on condition that he would convey to her before they were married a farm located near her home. He readily agreed, and accordingly a deed was made, and they were married. But the young bride, on the morning of the wedding, was missing from home, and a thorough search revealed the fact that she had eloped with a former admirer. The aged bridegroom was furious, and now he is trying to have the deed made null and void.

CROP AND STOCK.

Some sheep that had been sheared died from the effects of the unseasonable weather on Friday and Saturday.—Georgetown Times.

Mr. Wm. A. Leach, of Scott county, has an apple tree 75 years old. It bore a good crop last year and has a heavy bloom at the present.

The estate of Robert Downing, of Mason county, sold 3,000 bushels of wheat to Cincinnati parties for $1,25 per bushel, the highest figure in Mason county in eighteen years.

Preparations for a large crop of tobacco are being pushed as rapidly as the season will permit. The damage to plants by the freeze of April 5th and 6th was not so great as at first indicated. The supply of plants was in the first place so abundant that the small percentage of loss will have no appreciable influence on the acreage. In the western section of the State the loss was but 7 per cent. In the central section it was 18 per cent. Some complaint is made that the plants are not growing as they should.

Commissioner of Agriculture Lucas Moore has issued a report on Kentucky crops up to May 1. It shows. Wheat good, but with low averages in a few southeastern counties. Average, 101. Oats, 85; corn, 80 per cent of the average of 1897; planting conditions unfavorable; tobacco, slow growth, but preparations for a large crop; clover and pastures, not promising; fruit, reports conflicting. The conditions as compared with average year are: Apples, 81; peaches, 37; pears, 43; cherries, 53; grapes, 84, and strawberries, 78.

[News]

Some farmers set tobacco last Monday and Tuesday.

Prof. H. C. Smith sold his Shetland pony, Queeny, to John Smith, of Carrollton, price $125.

Aunt Martha Sebree, dropped dead at the residence of her daughter, last Saturday night, after eating a hearty supper. She was the wife of Richard Sebree, and step-mother of J. A. Sebree, of Gratz.

If rumor be correct one can afford to assert that within the next two or three months there will be no less than a dozen weddings take place, including in the list several batchelors, a widower or so, but no old maids.

[Herald.]

A few of the farmers set some tobacco last week and quite a number could if the ground had been prepared.

Farmers, though busy, are rather behind with their work, finding more trouble in pitching a summer than a winter crop.

The body of "Uncle Si" Kersey was recovered last Wednesday. The coroner's inquest found that he came to his death by accidental drowning. He was buried in the Masonic cemetery by charitable people of Monterey.

Russell Smalley, of Gratz, attended a chicken soup, last Saturday night, on the river cliff, and after dining sought refuge under a projecting rock, which gave way while he was asleep and fell on him, breaking one of his legs and badly bruising him otherwise.

An exchange says: "The one-horse farmer has a life long ambition to gain a reputation for wearing a dirty shirt. He will alarm the neighbor by getting up two hours before day then set around and not get to work till after sun up; he will ride around a week looking for a $2 hog; he will complain of hard times, then tear his pants climbing a fence where a gate ought to be; he will pay $2 for a new bridle, then let a calf chew it to pieces before Sunday; he will get all his neighbors to help get a cow out of the bog, then let her die for want of attention; stock will get in and destroy his crop at a place in his fence he has been talking of fixing for six months; he will strain his back lifting something to show how strong he is; he will talk all day Sunday on what he knows about farming then ride around the neighborhood Monday hunting for seed potatoes; he will go in his shirt sleeves to show how much cold he can stand, then return home at night and occupy two thirds of the fire place till bed time; he will go to town on Saturday and will come back with 50 cents worth of coffee, a paper of pins and a dollar's worth of tobacco, he is economical; economy is his forte; he will save 20 cents worth of axle grease and ruin a $70 wagon."

"When God gives a man a wife and six children he has done a great deal for that fellow. But when he gives him a society woman and a poodle he has thrown off on him. These society women look upon children as nuisances. I have had some of the society women shake hands with me. I would as soon shake a dead fish's tail. I wouldn't give one of your sock darning women for all the society women in the country. Between cutting off the top of their dress for the ball room and the bottom for the bicycle these society women will soon have no clothes left. A man said to a society woman: 'I hope I'll see more of you.' She said: 'Come to the ball tonight.' Some people say you shouldn't speak that way before mixed audiences. You old sisters wear a high collar, close around your neck—that's modest and comely. But deliver me from the society women who button their collars around their waist. You preachers don't talk that way, do you? You talk about the sweet bye and bye. You ought to talk about the nasty now and then."

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, MAY 25, 1898. NO. 31.

Some times the battle is not to the strong.

The opinion that the Strategic Board is a failure and ought to be retired, is growing.

The public can only judge the progress the war is making by the results of events as they come to light.

The Spanish fleet is very much like the Irishman's flee—just as the Strategic Board locates it, it is not there.

If anybody will inform Admiral Sampson of the whereabouts of Cervera's fleet, the information will be appreciated.

Cervera's success lies in the fact that the route of his voyage was not given to the public. His people know how to keep a secret when it is necessary.

The Spanish have strengthened all their coast defenses in Cuba, and landing there is now much more hazardous than it was six weeks or two months ago.

The post-office appropriation bill, carrying appropriations which aggregate more than $99,000,000, was passed by the Senate Tuesday, after a debate of several days.

W. J. Bryan's enlisting as a private soldier has been a stinging disappointment to many people. The statement that he wanted to be appointed Major General was all bosh.

It is about time the Democratic Congressional committee in this district was having some understanding as to when and how the next nomination for Congress, is to be made.

W. E. Gladstone, acknowledged by all to be the greatest statesman of the age, is dead. The death of such men as Gladstone at this particular time is a cause for mourning the world over.

If each town that now claims to have had a representative on one of Dewey's ships engaged at Manilla, actually had such representative there are something like 75,000 men with the Admiral.

Mr. Reed is not favorable to the annexation of Hawaii and the proposition is having a rough voyage through the House. It is said that he is conducting a proselyting campaign in the ranks of the supporters.

The nautical mile is called a knot. It contains 6086.7 feet, while our mile has but 5,280. That makes a knot a little more than one and three twentieth miles. A ship that sails 20 knots an hour goes 23 miles per hour.

It is said that those concentrados whose suffering caused your Uncle Sam to scrap with Spain, are dying so rapidly at Havana that they are hauled by car loads and dumped out to be preyed upon by the vultures.

Those quick, decisive blows about which the public has been reading for six weeks, have not been struck, and there is no telling when a quick, decisive or anyother kind of a blow will be struck, but wait until the Spaniards are cornered.

Hon. E. E. Settle, of Owen county will succeed himself in Congress. He has made a good record at the capital, and ranks among the best members in the House. When it comes to speaking, there are few among the members who are considered his equal.

Last Saturday was a wild day in Cincinnati. The celebration of Dewey day gave her citizens a splendid opportunity to give vent to their patriotism, while thousands of the country cousins flocked there to witness the grand display.

"European countries have acquired the habit," says the National Intelligencer, "if remaining neutral until the war is over and then interfering and depriving the victor of the fruits of its victory." It says the United States should profit by the experience of Russia, Japan and Turkey.

Mr. Kohlsaat's Chicago Times-Herald proclaims that "the Democrats have plunged the country into a war for free silver and a dishonest dollar." "We say that the Times-Herald wilfully lies to its readers, and further state that any person who says that any dollar Uncle Sam stamps and makes legal tender is a "dishonest dollar" is a traitor.—National Intelligencer.

The Work That Warships Do.

What part do the various kinds of ships play in a naval battle?

Of course conditions at the time of battle have much to do with the formation of a naval fleet and with its maneuvering during the engagement.

As a general rule the battleships are ranged at suitable distances apart in the first line and bear the brunt of the fight.

In line with the battleships are the armored cruisers and monitors, which are expected to do their part to overwhelm the enemy and to destroy his ships.

The former can move about much more easily than the battleships, and are relied on to protect the flanks and rear of the line of battle.

In the second line are the protected cruisers, torpedo boats, dispatch boats, hospital ships and torpedo boat destroyers.

The latter are really torpedo boats which are provided with torpedoes to launch at the enemy and with guns and rams to sink the enemy's torpedo boats.

Nothing is yet known in practice of the uses that can be made in battle of such ships as the Vesuvius and Katahdin.

By some authorities they are expected to prove extremely effective against an enemy.

Others are dubious about their merits.

Admiral Ammen, who designed the ram Katadin, believed that it would be able to run in among a hostile fleet and to ram and sink the most powerful vessels before they could do any special damage to the ram.

But critics of this model of war craft hold that it must prove a failure in active service, and experience alone can decide.—Louisville Post.

Has Fought Five Wars.

It is interesting to observe that the United States has fought five wars in the 122 years since the declaration of independence announced the birth of our nation. In each one we have triumphed. In that period England has fought six wars, not including the conflicts with savages in India Africa and she has lost two—both in the United States. France has engaged in six, and has lost two, one with the allied powers and one with Germany. Prussia in the same period has lost two out of five wars. Austria has lost two out of five. Spain has lost every war she has undertaken in that period—unless her ten year war with Cuba may be called victorious.

The United States has declared war but once, that instance being in 1812, and after such a series of insults and injuries as no nation would not dream of inflicting. But there never has been a day when a declaration of war has found us unprepared. And every enemy which has first attacked has been the first to sue for peace. In this country the initiative always rests with Congress, and on its authorization the President must declare war.—Alabama Advocate.

There are criticisms and mutterings among the people who are not satisfied with the results in and about Cuba, and the slow progress of affairs.

It would have been very pleasing to any one of several Kentucky gentlemen to have been commissioned Major General, but that honor is not to come this way so soon in the fray.

Camp life is not the snap that many of the boys anticipated when they enlisted, and they would like to lay down their arms and return home. What will become of that class when the front is reached and the trials and hardships of real army life confront them?

Now is the time when you read war news six days in the week, and on the seventh day you conclude that your reading has all been to no purpose, and that you have no more information than you had at the close of the preceding week. There is a little too much newspaper enterprise on tap in this country at the present time.

The El Heraldo de Puerto Rico of May the 4th, makes a great deal of sport of the Americans as fighters, calls them cowards and everything else that its editor could think of. No doubt if the Heraldo's editor had been put in command of Cervera's fleet the ships would all have been at the bottom of the Atlantic ocean weeks ago, because instead of continuing to dodge the American fleet he would have gone after it, and the war would have been over in short order.

Pith of the Press.

Major General Joe Wheeler is a great fighter and weighs 115 pounds.—Boston Herald.

Senator Hanna's views on the war must be of supreme value, as he positively refuses to give them away.—Columbus Dispatch.

But we will get there in time to give the remaining reconcentrados a Christian funeral if Speaker Reed is not over-confident.—Detroit Journal.

A nation that has not been able thus far to catch Mark Hanna should not feel ashamed of its inability to run Spain down in a week.—St. Louis Republic.

At the proper time the good people of Kansas will doubtless get together and present a soda water fountain to the cruiser Topeka.—Washington Post.

"Everybody wants to fight nowadays," remarks a Brooklyn contemporary. Nonsense; look at Corbett, Fitzsimmons and McCoy.—Chicago Times-Herald.

This Administration may be possessed of a desire to go down in history as the one that was going to send re-enforcements to Admiral Dewey.—Chicago Record.

In addition to the co-operation of General Gomez General Miles will have some assistance from General Starvation in his operations against Blanco.—Washington Times.

President McKinley has one great advantage over Sagasta. He unloaded some of the weak members of his Cabinet before the firing began.—N. Y. Journal.

It would be wisdom for Sagasta to close the present complications as quickly as possible and formulate a strong domestic, non-interference policy for Spain.—Washington Star.

It is not exactly the thing to say that the mantle of Perry and Farragut has fallen on Dewey. This is a different mantle—one of Dewey's own getting up.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

McKinley seems to be using the army for the purpose of boosting the sons of prominent men into positions they do not merit by any efforts of their own.—Zanesville Signal.

Admiral Montejo admits that "the American gunners are good marksmen." This must be considered in the light of an expert opinion from the target.—Chicago Times Herald.

Mr. McKinley's policy of giving army places to inexperienced young men because their papas have been great or are now very rich, will not shorten the war much.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Now they are calling attention to the fact that Fitzhugh Lee stood forty-fourth in his class of 49 at West Point. All the same, his classmates are now looking up at him.—Boston Herald.

McKinley should gather wisdom from the sagacious Sagasta. He wants cool heads and ready arms. He dismisses the lilliputs and endeavors to gather about him giants.—Chicago Chronicle.

It will hardly be necessary for President McKinley to send provisions for the reconcentrados when the army finally goes to Cuba. Tomstones are more appropriate already.—Boston Globe.

If Admiral Cervera wants to bull Spanish bonds he should lose a ship and if he could manage to sink his whole fleet the finances of Spain would be greatly benefitted.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Li Hung Chang remarks across the water that the Yankees fight harder than the Japs, and everybody knows that a Jap looks like an infernal machine run by the lightning in the eyes of Li Hung.—Denver Times.

It has been discovered that while he was in Cuba Weyler bought mules in his own name for $30 and sold them to Spain for $128. No wonder the butcher is made furious by the prospect of Spain losing Cuba.—St. Louis Republic.

The schoolteacher, like the regular army officer, is learning something of war nowadays. The schoolteacher who pronounced the name of one of the greatest American Admirals "Farrague" had read but never heard of Farragut.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

An Iowa farmer who is fond of the practical joke hoisted a Spanish flag on his barn. His w[illegible] succeeded in picking the l[illegible] thers off his anatomy, and [illegible] ed the smaller ones and the [illegible] panying tar will wear off in [illegible] of time.—Washington Post.

If France has really incurred the displeasure of General Grosvenor she will be sure to hear from him. It will be no great trick for the Ohio man to produce his pad and pencil and demonstrate that the Paris Exposition will be a fourth-rate fizzle.—Washington Post.

Your Uncle John Sherman is not much in evidence nowadays. Wonder if he is writing a second edition to that book of his? No doubt some of our Congressmen would rather face the Spanish Navy than what Sherman could say if he would.—Portsmouth (O) Sentinel.

Anyone who has ever attempted a swift movement in getting into his apparel when the house was on fire can appreciate to its fullness the dismay of the Spaniards whom Dewey attacked while they were in their pajamas. No man can combat anything beyond colic in his pajamas.—Louisville Commercial.

Give Back the Flags.

For a generation the battle flags of the Confederacy which were captured upon the field during the Civil War by the Union troops have been held by the Northern States as priceless trophies of war. Ohio has some of those torn and tattered banners and she has esteemed them beyond price. They were taken by brave men from men equally as brave, in a struggle that will ever be memorable in history, and the result of that conflict would not now be changed by the vanquished, even if they had the power to do so. The Civil War settled for all time the indissoluble character of the Republic, and its present greatness is based upon the verdict then rendered.

The States that thirty-seven years ago were alligned in hostile array are now bound together, not only by political ties agreeable to themselves, but by a mutual respect and affection. The men who fought on opposing sides in the Civil war vie with each other in paying deserved tributes to their former foes, as brave men always do after a quarrel is mended, and the tremendouous struggle of 1861-1865 has become naught but history. The last lingering vestige of rancer which it inspired is vanished forever. But one flag is loved and cherished now, from the vast plains of the Dakotas to the sands that are washed by the waters of the gulf.

Today, in the face of a common danger, the South and the North stand shoulder to shoulder in opposition to the foe; their sons answer to the same bugle call; Generals that wore both the blue and the gray are in command of a united country's army, and over it all floats the Stars and Stripes.

The time to give back the captured flags has come. Ohio wants no longer the trophies taken from her sister States so long ago. She would rather restore them once more into the hands and the tender care of those who first bore them aloft, as a token of love for her sister commonwealths whose defeat in war has long since turned into a victory of peace and plenty.

Within a few months there will assemble in Cincinnati, the chief city of Ohio, the Grand Army of the Republic. The occasion of that reunion would be a fitting time for Ohio to return to the South its battle flags, and it will not be amiss to here suggest that some appropriate arrangement with that end in view be made by the proper authorities.

Ohio, standing at the gateway to the South, and between whom and the South there exists an intimacy and a friendship precious and dear to each, should be the first State to take such action as is here suggested.

The achievements of Ohio in the Civil War constitutes an illustrious and imperishable page in the history or our commou country, but no action of hers in that great epoch will stand out brighter than that of giving back the flags she won.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Mr. Reed is making trouble for those who are laboring for the annexation of Hawaii. He is the whole thing in Congress, and in his opposition to Hawaii he will encounter the criticisms of many of his party who have enjoyed his harsh rulings when they were taking the epidermis off of some of the minority. Reed is a terror as a presiding officer.

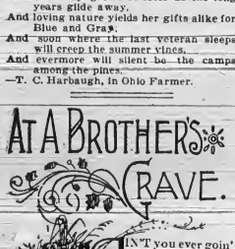
THE ARMY IN THE PINES.

I AM old and I am weary, and my marching days are o'er,
I can hear the misty river, breaking on its ghostly shore;
At the window, with my crutches, as the daylight fades away,
I sit and watch the shadows 'neath the hoary maples play;
It is then I hear the music of a bugle loud and shrill,
And the long roll in the twilight seems to come from yonder hill;
But awake or dreaming ever I can see the old blue lines,
And again the army marches—marches underneath the pines.

With a tread that echoes ever in the veteran's heart to-day,
Marches still that grand old army, 'mong the trees so far away;
And I see its banners floating proudly 'gainst the azure sky,
Just as though beneath my window it to-day were passing by;
I can recognize the comrades touching elbows as of yore,
With a beautiful devotion that will live forever more;
And the sun in cloudless heavens upon blade and bayonet shines,
And the breeze stir the pennons of the army in the pines.

Sitting here I count the marches one can never more forget,
I can see the gleaming camp-fires when the stars their watch have set;
Yonder rides the grayheard colonel, with a comrade's smile for all,
That morning in the wilderness, he was the first to fall;
I remember how we laid him 'neath the dark green branches low,
And turned to meet the charges of the ever valiant foe;
I seem to hear war's thunder as it rolled along our lines,
Waking not the dear old colonel, sleeping sweetly 'neath the pines.



But my crutches oft remind me that our battle flags are furl'd,
That where we fought the angel Peace proclaims to all the world
That love cements the sections and that, brothers true to-day,
Beneath the starry banner fair stand both the Blue and Gray;
The rosea bloom in beauty where we heard the mad shells scream,
And southern lilies grow beside the squadron guarded stream,
And everywhere, this sacred day, love gratefully entwines
A fragrant wreath in memory of the army in the pines.

The sound of music thrills me; they are coming down the street,
It plainly hear upon the wind the tramp of many feet;
With nature's treasures beautiful they march again to keep
Memorial day and crown the boys where side by side they sleep;
They see me at the window and salute me as they pass,
I lift my hand and smile on them, but very soon they pass,
My old, old eyes grow misty and I cannot see the lines,
Though I seem to hear the army once again among the pines.

There's another army marching 'neath the heavens soft and blue,
Its leaders are not many now, its privates, too, are few;
One by one they cross the river to the camp where all is still,
Where drums to battle never beat and bugles never thrill;
Memorial day grows sweeter as the long years glide away,
And loving nature yields her gifts alike for Blue and Gray,
And soon where the last veteran sleeps will creep the summer vines,
And evermore will silent be the camps among the pines.

AT A BROTHER'S GRAVE.

AIN'T you ever goin' to quit lawin' over that shoat? You an' Josh have both spent more'n its worth fifty times over, an' it ain't no nearer settled than it was five year ago. No I won't give my consent to spendin' another nickel in lawin'," and "Ma" Walker gave her foot a determined stamp on the polished kitchen floor to signify that she meant all she said.

To those who knew "Ma" Walker the stamp she gave meant much. Her mind was made up, and no amount of coaxing and argument could change it. She didn't intend to throw good money after bad in a vain endeavor to get payment for a four-dollar shoat for which they had already mortgaged the farm for more than they could pay in the next five years.

"But, 'Ma,' the lawyer says he can git a judgment in the next court, an' then I want to teach Josh that he can't have everything his own way. The lawyer says he'll only need $50 more."

"Hiram Walker, you might just as well quit talkin', for I tell you I won't consent to spendin' another cent. I declare to goodness, it's a downright shame that two brothers can't get along without spendin' all they make in lawin'! It's bad enough for Josh, and for you, what's got a family to care for, it's still worse. You had just better spend that $50 in buyin' me an' the girls some new clothes. Goodness knows, we need 'em bad enough; I haven't had a new dress since this lawin' business began, five year ago; neither has the girls."

Again the foot of "Ma" Walker struck the floor with a thump that was certainly impressive, and her husband, finding that he could accomplish nothing by argument, left the house. If his wife wouldn't consent he had no thought of doing what he wished against her wishes, and, besides that, the money that he wanted was her own, the receipts from her butter and egg sales. No, the case would have to go over for awhile, but he wouldn't give it up, he would teach his contrary brother the needed lesson in time.

In the dark days of '61 three brothers responded to President Lincoln's call for troops. They came from a quiet farm home in one of the northern counties of Indiana. All of them left home for the battlefields with a mother's blessing on their heads, but the mother's heart went out especially to the youngest, "her baby." He was but a boy of 19 to whom the hard work of the farm had always been more of a burden than his frail body could bear, and for that reason he was made much of by the other members of the family. But men were needed, her sons thought it their place to go, and it was not her part to stand in the way of their duty to their country.

Month after month wore away. The mother watched anxiously for each mail, and was occasionally rewarded with a letter, always from "her baby." He told her of his brothers, of the army, of their camp life, of their marches and their battles, but of himself he told her little except that he was as well as usual. But the mother read between the lines. The hardships of campaigning was wearing away "her baby's" health, and how she longed for him.

And one day a letter came from Hiram, his brother, the mother's "baby" was ill, and they would send him home to her. She could feel almost glad that he was sick for it would bring him back. How carefully she would nurse him, and by the time the war was over he should be well again.

But the mother's hopes were not to be realized. "Her baby" came home to her only to be taken away again forever. She watched beside his bedside; she did all the many little things that only a mother knows how to do, but without success. Long before the war was over they had laid him in the little cemetery, and his furlough was extended into eternity.

When the old folks died the farm of more than 200 acres was left to Hiram and Josiah Walker, to be divided equally or worked together, as the brothers might choose. For several years they farmed their land together, and then Hiram married. After that the land was divided, Hiram taking the part on which the home stood for himself and his bride, and Josiah was to make his home with them.

Added to the ties of blood were the ties of comradeship on the battlefields of the south, and they seemed inseparable. Nothing, it seemed, could come between them. They assisted each other in their work, they shared each other's earnings; they made it a point to plant at the same time; they reaped their crops at the same time, and they sold the products of their farms to the same men. Their lives were the happy ones of peace and good will.

And then came a time of doubt, of hard words, and all the comradeship of the past was forgotten.

It was in the winter time, and both brothers were fattening hogs for market. The pens in which their hogs were kept adjoined, and day after day they had stood together and remarked about the condition of the stock. One morning as Josiah came out to the barnyard he found his brother counting his logs, and as he reached his side Hiram turned to him and said:

"Josh, there's a board loose and one of my shoats has worked its way into your pen. I think it's the spotted one in the corner there."

"Guess you're mistaken, Hiram; that's my pig; this old sow here is his mother. You'll have to look again, Hiram, to find your shoat."

"But I guess I know my shoat when I see it, Josh, and I tell you that spotted pig's mine. I'll git in an' catch it and put it back in my pen."

"You'll do nothin' of the kind. That spotted pig's mine, I tell you, an' you'll let it alone where it is. I don't believe you've lost a shoat, anyway."

And so the quarrel started. A pig that either would have gladly given the other had he asked it was to come between them.

At his first opportunity Hiram carried out his intention of putting the pig into his own pen, and in less than 24 hours afterwards he was arrested on a warrant sworn out by his brother.

The case went through the justice court with a decision for Josiah; when appealed to the grand jury the decision was the other way. At a retrial the decision was again reversed, and then it went to the state courts, where it was tried time after time, until now it had reached the supreme court, and Hiram hoped to have the last decision against him reversed.

During the progress of the case both brothers had become heavily involved in debt, the money needed to pay court and attorneys' fees. Hiram's farm had been mortgaged, his crops for years, and the same kind of bills. The case cost his family had counted for six hundred dollars, but against this legal monster. His boy had left school that he might take the place of a hired man and so save that expense, as well as that incurred by his schooling. The daughters had done without the clothes they were accustomed to. They and their mother had worked over their old ones until they would bear no more, and then came this plea for just $50 more. Every plea of this kind had promised to be the last one since the case was first started, and "Ma" Walker had finally rebelled.

"I tell you, girls, something's got to be done so's your father and Uncle Josh'll make up this senseless quarrel of theirs. I can't, for the life of me, think how we're goin' to do it, but do it we must. Can't one of you think out some plan?"

THE BROTHERS MEET.

A little conference of mother and daughters was being held in the kitchen. They wanted clothes, and that soon. Here was summer coming on and all of their thin clothing was worn out long before the last summer was over. Something must be done to stop this ravenous legal monster that was devouring them.

"I don't know as it'll work," replied Mary, the youngest, "but anyway we might try it—"

"Try what?" cried "Ma" Walker.

"You know, ma, pa and Uncle Josh always go to the cemetery Decoration day to fix up Uncle Charley's grave. That's one of the last requests Grandma Walker made before she died. She said Charley was 'her baby,' and she wanted his grave always kept nice. Before this lawsuit pa and Uncle Josh always went together on Decoration day to trim the bushes and fix the sod and put on the flowers, but now they go by themselves. Pa always goes in the afternoon and Uncle Josh in the morning, and each takes care of one side of the grave. Maybe if we could get them to go at the same time, and have them meet there without knowing it the remembrances might cause them to make up again."

"I just believe it would, Mary, if we could only do it, but your pa's so set in his ways that he wouldn't go at any time he thought Uncle Josh would be there, and Uncle Josh wouldn't go if he thought he'd meet your pa. I don't see how we could work it, Mary, they're both that contrary," and "Ma" Walker shook her head over the problem.

"But, ma, couldn't we make Uncle Josh believe pa was going in the morning, or make pa believe Uncle Josh was going in the afternoon," put in Jane.

"Now I never thought of that," and "Ma" Walker beamed on her two daughters. "It takes young heads for new ideas, don't it. I'll just leave it for you two girls to fix up. You've got a way of gettin' round them two men I never could get."

The morning of May 30 was as bright and clear as anyone could ask. The country people in the part of the county where the Walkers lived always made the day a holiday—a day devoted to the memories of the brave men who fell in the civil war. Many of them had friends and relatives buried on the battlefields of the south, but there were but few soldier graves in the little churchyard cemetery at home. What few there were, however, received the offerings of the entire community.

As Hiram Walker came in from the barn after doing the chores of the morning his wife asked how soon after dinner he was going to the cemetery, saying she believed she would go with him.

"I guess I'll go this morning," he replied. "The girls tell me Josh has took a notion to annoy me by goin' in the afternoon, an' I guess I'll let him have his own way."

After the quarrel of five years before Josiah had built himself a house as far from that of his brother as possible, and at his place there was no sign of his intention of varying his usual custom of visiting the cemetery in the morning. The girls had worked their plans quite successfully, and the chances were the brothers would meet at a place where, for a time at least, they must drop their quarrel over a spotted pig.

Josiah Walker was kneeling beside the little marble monument clipping the dead branches out of a rose bush over his brother's grave, when he became aware that some one was approaching the grave from the other side of the bush. Glancing around he saw it was his brother. As he rose from his position beside the bush Hiram paused at the side of the grave opposite him.

"Why do you come here at this time?" demanded Josiah, thoroughly incensed at what he considered an imposition.

"And why did you tell my girls that you was comin' in the afternoon," answered Hiram. "I came this morning because you told them that."

"I never told the girls nothing of the kind, and you know it. You come here at this time to spite me."

The whole scheme that the girls and their mother had worked came to Hiram in a minute, and stepping a little nearer he said:

"Josiah, the girls told me that, and now I know why. They can't see any sense in this quarrel of ours, and want us to forget it. They thought here at Charley's grave would be a good place for us to meet. Don't you think it is?"

Without a word of reply Josiah extended his hand across the grave, where it met that of his brother.

"Hiram," he said, "we have quarreled for many years. I thought I would never again speak a kind word to you, but beside the grave where our brother and comrade sleeps our quarrel should be forgotten for the time at least. Shall it be?"

"Why not let it be forgotten for all time, Josiah? Is a spotted pig worth the amount of happiness it has cost us?"

"It was my pig, Hiram."

"No, it was mine, Josiah."

"Let's call it our pig, Hiram, as it really was?"

"That's best, Josiah. Now let's fix up Charley's and mother's graves, and then you must go home to dinner with me, for I suspect 'ma' and the girls will be expecting you."

The lawsuit was settled out of court. "Ma" Walker and the girls got their summer dresses, and abundant supply, for they came from both farms, and Josiah is back at the old home again to live.

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

A GREAT BOOK THIEF.

Probably the most audacious and successful book thief that ever lived was Count Libri of Florence, who, emigrating to France, became in 1842 secretary of a government commission to examine and catalogue the books and manuscripts in the many communal libraries of the country. Availing himself of his opportunities, of the carelessness and ignorance of the custodians, and a consummate knowledge of the treasures unveiled to him, he quietly and leisurely despoiled the libraries of hundreds of their choicest manuscripts and most precious heirlooms, carefully obliterating afterward all signs that might lead to their identification.

How the collection thus acquired came into the possession of the late Lord Ashburnham; by what means Libri's robberies were afterwards discovered and traced back to him; together with the recent sale of the library at a stupendous increase of price, and the methods by which the French government finally recovered a portion of their long-lost treasures, form a most remarkable and romantic chapter in literary history.

THE NAMELESS DEAD.

To deck, with flowers, the lonely spot of earth
That holds the dust of heroes—nameless dead—
Columbia comes; nor asks the place of birth;
They were her sons. In grief she bows her head,
While from her heart she breathes to Heaven the prayer
That all are joined in love fraternal there.

Mahogany is now very generally substituted for hickory in the manufacture of wagon wheels in France, it being found cheaper and quite as durable.

PRICES FALLING.

Industrial Depression Follows the Introduction of the Gold Standard.

If the falling prices since 1873 has been due to some cause other than the demonetization of silver we should have expected the fall to be universal the world over. Yet, strange to the gold-bug, while in every gold standard country prices have disastrously fallen, prices in the silver standard countries have remained substantially stable. United States Consul Whetmore, of Shanghai, has prepared an index number table of Chinese prices showing this fact beyond dispute; and the same has been true of Mexico and the other silver countries. But the most striking and conclusive example is Japan. Up to 1897 that country had enjoyed the most marvelous prosperity. Her export trade increased from $5,000,000 in 1890 to $71,000,000 in 1895, with the annual balance of trade of $5,000,000 in her favor. In 1897, however, Japan decided to become "the England of the orient," and adopted the single gold standard. What has been the result? Prices have begun to fall and industrial depression has set in. The Tiji Shimpo, the leading paper of Japan, in reviewing the first year of the gold standard, says: "We can speak only in gloomy terms of the year just past. Commercial affairs and political affairs reached their lowest depths of depression and mismanagement. The introduction of the gold standard proved a complete failure." And that paper states that the bulwark of trade is against Japan. Says Greater Japan, a magazine published in Japan in English: "The adoption of the gold standard is the worst mistake ever committed by the government in the long history of 30 years that have been passed since the present Meiji era began." And it adds: "Many of the factories in the western part of Japan are closing or only running on half time."

NOTES OR BONDS.

Democrats in congress who are opposing the issue of $500,000,000 worth of bonds are acting in the interests of the people.

Of course, the republicans raise a great howl that the democrats are "obstructionists," but the democrats are simply obstructing an attempt to place a great and unnecessary burden of taxation upon the country.

There are more ways of raising money with which to pay the expenses of the war than the one way, so dear to republicans—that of issuing bonds with which to make the syndicates rich and to keep the masses poor.

Treasury notes are just as good as bonds, being payable in coin, and they do not carry any interest. Again, there is a great quantity of silver lying idle in the government vaults which ought to be utilized. The people know that the democrats are fighting for their benefit, and the democrats are quite willing to go before the people on the issue raised by the republicans.

Treasury notes will have to be redeemed in the long run just as the bonds would have to be redeemed, but there would be no interest to pay on the notes, and that is why the money sharks are opposed to them.

Every three months the bondholder would be able to thrust his hand into the treasury and loot it of interest. He could not do that if treasury notes were issued.

"Anything to get interest out of the government" is the cry of the republican. And that is the extent of the bond buyer's patriotism.—Chicago Dispatch.

A TRICK OF HANNA'S.

The President Maker Works a Point Under Cover of the War Excitement.

Hanna has turned a little trick under cover of the war excitement. That the game he has played is discreditable goes without saying. That it would have worked in ordinary times is doubtful. Worthington C. Ford, who has held the office of the chief of bureau of statistics for the last five years and demonstrated rare capacity, has been removed. Giving the record of Statistician Ford the Pittsburgh Post says: "In 1893, when he took his office, it was in a condition of chaos and its reports of little account. It is the bureau that collects, compiles and prepares for publication those exceedingly important returns of the country's commerce, industry and finance on which the future plans of merchants and financiers are based. Their value is known in all newspaper offices, and with all who concern themselves with economic subjects." Hanna has removed this capable officer and has put in his place one Austin, an obscure Washington correspondent, who knows nothing whatever about the science of statistics. In the campaign of 1896 Austin was hired by Hanna to compile campaign dodgers filled with misinformation. As a tool he proved useful to Hanna, and for his reward he is given a place which he is in nowise competent to fill. This is the kind of work Hanna calls statesmanship. This is one of the results of the disgraceful bargaining which made Hanna a senator.

—Those politicians and newspapers in the United States who are attributing the improved conditions here to the advent of Chinese wail protection might turn their attention to Canada and explain why that country is proportionately more prosperous than we are, while having low tariff. The present conditions in Canada, compared with what existed when protection was in force there, is to those capable of reasoning one of the best possible object lessons on the fallacy of Dingleyism.—Sioux City Tribune.

A BAD FEATURE.

Mr. Dingley's Aversion to Commerce Appears in the War Revenue Bill.

One provision of the bill to provide revenue for war purposes is of such an obnoxious character that it is likely to be stricken out by the senate. In general the bill distributes the burden of emergency taxation in a pretty fair sort of way. But the unconquerable aversion to commerce possessed by Mr. Dingley crept into the bill in the shape of a tonnage tax on foreign shipping. It would naturally be supposed that our foreign commerce was sufficiently laden with the Dingley tariff duties, without adding the weight of heavy tonnage duty, which is in effect an addition to the tariff rates. A representative of one of the leading steamship lines has been in Washington explaining the effect of such a tax to the senators. To Senator Allison he gave a specific illustration as follows:

"One of our large freight steamers, the Pennsylvania or the Pretoria, of 8,139 tons net, would be charged $1,627.80 every time she enters the port of New York, or, as she makes eight trips yearly, this one steamer would have to pay a tax of $13,022.40 per annum. This is simply enormous, and will serve to prove the correctness of the contention as to the influence of the tax towards a deviation of traffic, and give an idea of the magnitude of the intended taxation in the aggregate."

This tax would simply divert commerce from the North Atlantic ports to Montreal, and the freight for the United States would come down by rail from Montreal instead of being distributed from New York. This would be putting work and wages in the way of the Canadian freight handlers and railroads, bringing stagnation on the ports of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and make Montreal the leading port on the continent. It is to be hoped that the senate will be wise enough to wipe out this provision, which would not only weaken us by robbing us of the profits of commerce, but would intensify the disaffection that the Dingley law stirred up in many foreign nations. —Utica Observer.

PLAGUES THE INVENTORS.

The Currency Problem Raises a Specter to Haunt the Republicans.

The republican party has steadily boasted its invention of the greenbacks, the blood-stained greenback as Dick Oglesby called it. The greenback is a noninterest-bearing obligation, and more than 30 years after the civil war, during which the country's soldiers and sailors were paid in greenbacks, hundreds of millions of them are still in circulation. It was suggested by Secretary Gage, not, however, with the full assent of the president, that steps be taken by the issuance of interest-bearing bonds to redeem, retire and destroy greenbacks. This the party has refused to do. The blood-stained republican created greenback is still a feature of the national currency. Now that more currency is needed for the prosecution of another war the republican house says issue interest-bearing bonds. The senate, however, hears a report from its finance committee to the effect that in providing more money resort may again be had to that form of government obligation which costs nothing but printing. There is no gain in this plan for the money loaner. If there be loss it must fall on everybody. Thus the currency problem returns to plague the inventor of the greenback the republican party, which is now seeking to discredit the money it once took credit for supplying. This is the absolute proof that the republican party of to-day is no longer the party of Lincoln, who was a real follower of Jefferson.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

—The democrats in the senate have demanded an inheritance tax as a part of the Dingley war revenue bill. What are the republicans going to do about that?—St. Louis Republic.

—But for the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the United States, as poured forth from day to day in the democratic press for the past year, Spain would never have been called to account for atrocities in Cuba by the present administration. — Columbus (O.) Press.

—Let the republicans keep the currency question, the protection of trusts and the making of political appointments to the army in the background and they will find democrats voting with them in all measures looking toward the defeat of the common foe. —Chicago Dispatch.

—Spain stands where she does today because for centuries she has been governed for the profit and glory of the politicians in power, regardless of the general good. —If we are to have outlying provinces all over the world we shall have to create proconsuls (or something of that sort) to govern them and to supervise the collection of the provincial revenues. Of course, the great political bosses in New York, Pennsylvania, etc., will expect to have the naming of these functionaries. What a particularly fat addition to the present political and financial assets of bossdom such a prerogative as that would be.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

—The Ohio senate's report of bribery against Mark Hanna is now in the hands of Vice President Hobart. The scheme is said to be to watch for a time when none but Hanna's friends are present and then call for the report in the senate, with the expectation that it will be tabled and thus permanently disposed of. The senate cannot afford to treat the matter so lightly. And, pray, what kind of a "friend" is it that would want to treat so frivolously so serious a charge?—St. Louis Republic.

John Talked Poker in His Sleep and Had to Make an Explanation.

"John, what makes you stay downtown so late nights?" inquired an angry wife of her husband.

"Yes, dear, and then sometimes you say: 'It's up to you.'"

"That's when I'm going down the line asking questions of my company."

"But what do you mean when you say: 'It's open?'"

"Do I say it loud?"

"Yes, a little bit exclamatory."

"Well, that's when the engagement opens up."

"And if you keep talking about the 'reds' and 'whites' what's that?"

"Oh, blese you, that's the colors of the flag."

"Well, don't go to war, will you, John?"

"Unless my country demands it, then—"

Bills of Fare in Fashionable Restaurants.

The question has been mooted over and over again whether the engrafting of French and German dishes upon the bill of fare of the better class of American restaurants is or is not an improvement. Many pretend that before their introduction our cooking was coarse, barbarous. This is an open question, but no bill of fare presents attractions to the dyspeptic, but they, like the bilious, malarious and persons with weak kidneys, can be cured by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

THIS IS A "HOT" ONE.

Lake Crystal, Minn., July 31st, 1897.

April 8th, 1892, my little boy, just four years old, was terribly scalded by falling backward into a pail full of boiling water. He fell into it in such a manner that he remained doubled up until his mother, who was in the next room, could come to his rescue. In tearing his clothing from him, the skin and flesh came off in strips, and the mother's hands were badly burned. The skin came off his body from above the middle of the back to below the calves of his legs. The burn was deep and the case desperate. For two months he was under the care of our family physician. We then took him to St. Paul and acting under his advice called in one of the leading surgeons of the city, who took the case in charge. Other physicians were called in consultation; sixty pieces of skin were grafted at one time, yet notwithstanding all the skill of the doctors and the most unremitting care, two months afterwards all hope had been given up. For months he had lain on pillows with his face down and suffered terribly. He had no appetite and could retain nothing on his stomach.

The sores were indolent and for two months had lain perfectly dormant. My attention was then called to Dr. Owen's Ulcerine Salve, and in desperation, ready to try anything that promised help, we commenced its use. Results were apparent at once. It at once aroused the sores to action and stimulated a healthy discharge. We kept the boy's strength up with a preparation of beef's blood and wine, and in about two months he was well on the road to recovery, and we were able to remove him back to our home. Thirteen months from the time he was injured he was perfectly restored. It has been over four years since the cure was effected and the boy is perfectly well and remarkably strong and active. I believe that Allen's Ulcerine Salve saved his life, as when we commenced its use all hope had been given up, and blood poisoning was expected to set in any moment. It was four months after he was burned before we began to use the Salve. Signed, H. E. WOODS, Traveling Agent for C. Gotzian & Co., Wholesale Boots & Shoes, St. Paul, Minn. by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

CINCINNATI AT WORK.

Preparing to Make the Grand Army Encampment a Success.

How the Ohio City Will Care for the Veterans Who Will Assemble There Early in September.

[Special Cincinnati Letter.]

THE Grand Army of the Republic is now recognized the world over as the greatest and most influential organization of war veterans the world has ever known. Its national encampments have become famous, attracting visitors from all parts of the union, both military and civilian. The first post of the Grand Army was organized at Decatur, Ill., April 6, 1866, and the first national encampment, a very small affair, was held at Indianapolis, Ind., April 20, 1866. Today the society has a membership of nearly 320,000, divided into 7,106 posts. Its annual encampments are attended by fully 100,000 people, and made the occasion of a spontaneous display of patriotism which must be intensely gratifying to the grizzled veterans. The encampment of 1897, held at Buffalo, N. Y., was in every respect a success, but it is predicted that this year's gathering, which will meet at Cincinnati, a point much more centrally located than Buffalo, will attract the largest attendance in the history of the order. Every one of the 45 departments of the Grand Army will be represented, and most of them will participate in the grand parade, which will be in command of Col. John P. S. Gobin, of Lebnon, Pa., the present commander in chief, and his personal staff.

M. E. INGALLS.

The Women's Relief Corps, an organization composed of the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters of union soldiers of the civil war, will hold its annual meeting at the same time. It is composed of a number of state departments, divided into corps, and has a membership of about 140,000. The national president is Mrs. Agnes Hitt, of Indianapolis. The Ladies of the G. A. R., another auxiliary to the Grand Army, will meet at Cincinnati during the first week of September.

Commander-in-Chief Gobin is expected to visit Cincinnati soon with his staff to inspect the preliminary plans of the citizens' committee for the thirty-second annual encampment of the G. A. R. This will be his second official visit. When here, in November last, he expressed surprise at the progress already made. He found a thorough organization of prominent business men, with Hon. M. E. Ingalls, president of the Big Four and Chesapeake & Ohio railroads, at their head.

On the occasion of his coming visit, the committee will be able to outline to a large extent exactly what will be done in the way of receiving and entertaining the old veterans and the thousands of friends who will come with them to Cincinnati in September of this year.

WILLIAM B. MELISH.
(Executive Director of Citizens' Committee.)

The three important features—railroad rates, hotel rates and free quarters for veterans—have all been satisfactorily arranged for. The committee has assurance of a rate of one cent a mile from all points in the country, the tickets being on sale several days preceding the opening date of the encampment—September 5—and good without any restrictions for about ten days. For those wishing a longer time the railroads will establish a joint agency here during encampment, with authority to stamp the excursion tickets, making them good for full 30 days. In addition, the roads out of Cincinnati will be allowed the privilege of arranging special home-visitors' excursions within short distance limits.

All the hotels of the city of any consequence have signed binding contracts by which they may charge only the regular established rates, and limiting the number of guests that may be assigned to each room. This gives assurance that no undue advantages will be taken of visitors while here. Gen. Gobin a few days ago named the Grand hotel as national headquarters, and he and his family and his staff will occupy about 12 large rooms in this hostelry. This hotel will also be headquarters for the two national presidents of the women's auxiliary organizations—the Women's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R. Parties began contracting for accommodations in the hotels early last fall, and some of the hotels have already disposed of every room. But Cincinnati has fortunately a large number of good hotels, and it is believed there will be no lack of facilities in that direction.

As for the veterans who prefer to camp out, with a mattress only between their bodies and the floor, and their grips for pillows, two classes of free quarters will be provided. The most interesting by all means is Camp Sherman. Adjoining the popular summer resort, Chester park, is a large level field of many acres extent, which is to be transformed into a tented city, with a careful sewage system, with electric lights and city water. Here it is proposed to care for 40,000 veterans. The many buildings in Chester park will be used as auxiliaries to the camp, which has been named in honor of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. The large club house will be used as a restaurant, where the veterans can get a square meal for a quarter, or lunches at popular prices. The amusement hall will be available for campfires and reunions.

Cincinnati has about 70 school buildings. The use of all of these has been donated by the board of education. They will be transformed into lodging houses for the week of September 5. Already the committee on school buildings, of which Capt. R. E. Monford, president of the board of education and member of the national council of administration, G. A. R., is chairman, has assigned to quarters in 26 school buildings about 12,000 veterans. It is expected that at least 40,000 veterans can be comfortably lodged in all the school buildings of the city.

The committee on halls and meeting places, Col. Max Silberberg, chairman, has obtained possession of every public meeting place in the city, and is now engaged in assigning the same for campfires and reunions. Col. Silberberg is desirous that all organizations desiring use of halls will make application to him at as early a date as possible. The committee on private accommodations, George Puchta, chairman, will begin shortly a thorough canvass of the homes of the city to find how many visitors may be cared for. As the population of Cincinnati and its suburbs now aggregates half a million souls, the committee anticipates no trouble whatever in providing ample accommodations of a high class for those visitors who do not care to go to hotels.

The miscellaneous entertainment committee, Charles E. Logan, chairman, is preparing to make use of the four principal summer resorts—Coney Island, the Zoological gardens, the Lagoon and Chester park—and will also provide special features, probably including sham battles on both land and river.

Gen. Andrew Hickenlooper, who won his title by long and distinguished service during the civil war, is chairman of the committee on parade and review. While the line of march has not yet been made public, it has been selected and approved by Commander in Chief Gobin. It will be within the prescribed limit of two miles, and will be entirely of streets paved with asphalt with the exception of only a quarter of a mile. The day of the parade has not been selected, but it will probably be Wednesday, September 7.

The citizens' committee having the arrangements in charge is thoroughly organized. It comprises an executive board consisting of Mr. Ingalls, chairman; William B. Melish, executive director; Casper H. Rowe, treasurer, and Edwin Stevens, secretary; also 36 members, each of whom is chairman of a subcommittee which is conducting some particular line of work. Besides the committees named, the others are as follows, with their respective chairmen: Auditing, E. V. Cherry; bureau of information, H. D. Crane; badges, William B. Melish; courtesies, state and city, Gustav Tafel; day decorations, J. A. Rohner; fireworks, F. Alms; grand stands, J. W. Robinson; horses and carriages, H. P. Wilborg, invitation and reception, Capt. J. Milt Blair; legislation, Maj. George A. Vandegrift; medical corps, Dr. J. C. Culbertson; music, Frank A. Lee; military organizations, P. M. Millikin; night illuminations, James Powell; sister cities, George E. Currie; press, Joseph T. Carew; printing, W. B. Carpenter; painting and decorating, John Harris; private accommodations, George Puchta; public order, ex-Mayor John A. Caldwell; public comfort, W. C. Johnson; war pageantry, W. R. McComas; women's auxiliary, Congressman Jacob H. Bromwell.

CHEERING HIM.

His Hearers Were Duly Appreciative But Were Not Completely Carried Away.

He was unquestionably an orator. But he was not content with that gift. He desired to deliver speeches which would read well in print. As a result, his periods were polished till they lost force. They would have made more of an impression if he had left a few jagged edges on them. His speeches were as famed for their soporific qualities as they were for their immaculate syntax, but his wife was a confident admirer of his powers as a speaker. Without taking the trouble to inform herself very thoroughly on the topics he discussed, she accepted his observations with implicit faith and unbounded applause. She had gone to hear him address the legislature. As he was over he remarked:

"That speech wasn't the success I thought it would be."

"It was a very nice speech," she answered, encouragingly. "I enjoyed it very much. I have passed a highly instructive afternoon. And, besides, I needed rest."

"There wasn't much enthusiasm."

"I was very enthusiastic."

"I was referring to my fellow-members."

"You couldn't tell whether they liked it or not."

"At all events, they were not carried off their feet."

"Oh, you mustn't be the least bit worried about that. They couldn't be. They took special precautions. I noticed that before you got half through nearly all of them had their feet on their desks."—Washington Star.

A SCHOOL GIRL'S BATTLE.

From the Mail, Milford, Ind.

Miss Emma Rybolt, a prepossessing school girl of Milford, Ind., is of more than usual intelligence, and is ambitious to rise in the literary world.

"In the fall of 1896," said Mrs. Rybolt, "Emma was taken ill. She was a close student and her work began to tell on her. She grew weak, pale and nervous, and complained of pains in her back, chest and limbs. A few weeks passed and she grew worse. The doctor said she was a victim of nervous prostration, and should have been taken from school weeks earlier. She gradually grew worse, her nerves were so tense that the least noise irritated her and she had a fever and a continual twitching in her muscles. The symptoms were much like St. Vitus' dance.

Her Battle.

"A year passed, and, under a change of physicians, Emma became some what better but soon was as bad as ever. One day I read of a case similar to hers which was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and I decided to try them.

"Emma had no faith in proprietary medicines, but tried the pills, and after taking a dozen doses, she began to improve. It was about the first of April when she began and by the middle of May, after taking about eight boxes, she was entirely cured.

"While ill, she lost twenty-eight pounds, but now weighs more than ever before. Her nerves are strong and she is in perfect health. We are all confident that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured her, and I cheerfully recommend them in all similar cases. MRS. E. A. RYBOLT."

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this third day of September, 1897.

How They Shop.

"What do you want 60 cents for?"

Disease

can be driven in or driven out. Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla drives disease out of the blood. Many medicines suppress disease—cover it but don't cure it. Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures all diseases originating in impure blood by purifying the blood itself. Foul blood makes a foul body. Make the blood pure and the body will be sound. Through the blood Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures eczema, tetter, boils, eruptions, humors, rheumatism, and all scrofulous diseases.

"Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me by my physician as a blood purifier. When I began taking it I had risings or boils all over my body, but one bottle cured me. I consider Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla the best blood medicine made."—BONNER CRAFT, Wesson, Miss.

Real estate dealers often console themselves during these dull days by reminiscences of the periods of inactivity which have gone before. A well-known Washington street dealer while in a reminiscent mood told the following story:

"The period of inactivity through which we are now passing reminds me somewhat of the days of 1873 when a dealer who made a sale was looked upon as a marvel. I had my office at that time on the second floor of this building. On the main floor were the offices of Reese, Pierce & Co. I was in the habit of stopping in each morning and greeting Col. Pierce, and usually the greeting became a morning visit. One day I was complaining somewhat bitterly of the dullness of the market, and the colonel remarked: 'I tell you that you miss it by not getting down on the ground floor. Now we get a great deal of drop-in trade, so to speak, that never gets to you because of the stairs.'

"Just as he was closing this remark the door opened and in stepped a man with a valise. 'There, what did I tell you,' said the colonel. 'Here's a man who probably wants to buy a lot and who never would climb up to you.' I was duly impressed with the truth of the statement then, and we both became silent as the newcomer ascended. As he came up to us he bowed and smiled and then blandly inquired: 'Can't I sell either of you some corn salve to-day?'

"The colonel was almost overcome, but he managed to express a decided negative and the visitor retreated. When he had closed the door behind him I burst out laughing and exclaimed: 'Colonel, if that's the kind of drop-in trade you get down here I want none of it. Now, that man would never trouble me because he could easily see that any man who could frequently climb the stairs of this building could not possibly have corns.' I went upstairs to my office, leaving the colonel speechless."—Chicago Chronicle.

THE DUTY OF MOTHERS.

What suffering frequently results from a mother's ignorance; or more frequently from a mother's neglect to properly instruct her daughter!

Tradition says "woman must suffer," and young women are so taught. There is a little truth and a great deal of exaggeration in this. If a young woman suffers severely she needs treatment and her mother should see that she gets it.

Many mothers hesitate to take their daughters to a physician for examination; but no mother need hesitate to write freely about her daughter or herself to Mrs. Pinkham and secure the most efficient advice without charge. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

"My health became so poor that I had to leave school. I was tired all the time, and had dreadful pains in my side and back. I was also troubled with irregularity of menses. I was very weak, and lost so much flesh that my friends became alarmed. My mother, who is a firm believer in your remedies from experience, thought perhaps they might benefit me, and wrote you for advice. I followed the advice you gave, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills as you directed, and am now as well as I ever was. I have gained flesh and have a good color. I am completely cured of irregularity."

A perfect type of the highest order of excellence.

THE ARMY IN THE PINES.

I AM old and I am weary, and my marching days are o'er,
I can hear the misty river, breaking on its ghostly shore:
At the window, with my crutches, as the daylight fades away,
I sit and watch the shadows 'neath the hoary maples play:
It is then I hear the music of a bugle loud and shrill,
And the long roll in the twilight seems to come from yonder hill;
But awake or dreaming ever I can see the old blue lines,
And again the army marches—marches underneath the pines.

With a tread that echoes ever in the veteran's heart to-day,
Marches still that grand old army, 'mong the trees so far away:
And I see its banners floating proudly 'gainst the azure sky,
Just as though beneath my window it today were passing by;
I can recognize the comrades touching elbows as of yore,
With a beautiful devotion that will live forever more;
And the sun in cloudless heavens upon blade and bay'net shines,
And the breeze stir in the pennons of the army in the pines.

Sitting here I count the marches one can never more forget,
I can see the gleaming camp-fires when the stars their watch have set;
Yonder rides the graybeard colonel, with a comrade's smile for all,
That morning in the wilderness, he was the first to fall:
I remember how we laid him 'neath the dark green branches low,
And turned to meet the charges of the ever valiant foe;
I seem to hear war's thunder as it rolled along our lines,
Waking not the dear old colonel, sleeping sweetly 'neath the pines.

But my crutches oft remind me that our battle flags are furled,
That where we fought the angel Peace proclaims to all the world
That love cements the sections and that, brothers true to-day,
Beneath the starry banner fair stand both the Blue and Gray:
The roses bloom in beauty where we heard the mad shells scream,
And southern lilies grow beside the squadron guarded stream,
And everywhere, this sacred day, love gratefully entwines
A fragrant wreath in memory of the army in the pines.

The sound of music thrills me; they are coming down the street,
I plainly hear upon the wind the tramp of many feet;
With nature's treasures beautiful they march again to keep
Memorial day and crown the boys where side by side they sleep;
They see me at the window and salute me as they pass,
I lift my hand and smile on them, but very soon they pass,
My old, old eyes grow misty and I cannot see the lines,
Though I seem to hear the army once again among the pines.

There's another army marching 'neath the heavens soft and blue,
Its leaders are not many now, its privates, too, are few;
One by one they cross the river to the camp where all is still,
Where drums to battle never beat and bugles never thrill:
Memorial day grows sweeter as the long years glide away,
And loving nature yields her gifts alike for Blue and Gray:
And soon where the last veteran sleeps will creep the summer vines,
And evermore will silent be the camps among the pines.

AT A BROTHER'S GRAVE.

"AIN'T you ever goin' to quit lawin' over that shoat? You an' Josh have both spent more'n its worth fifty times over, an' it ain't no nearer settled than it was five year ago. No I won't give my consent to spendin' another nickel in lawin'," and "Ma" Walker gave her foot a determined stamp on the polished kitchen floor to signify that she meant all she said.

To those who knew "Ma" Walker the stamp she gave meant much. Her mind was made up, and no amount of coaxing and argument could change it. She didn't intend to throw good money after bad in a vain endeavor to get payment for a four-dollar shoat for which they had already mortgaged the farm for more than they could pay in the next five years.

"But, 'Ma,' the lawyer says he can git a judgment in the next court, an' then I want to teach Josh that he can't have everything his own way. The lawyer says he'll only need $50 more."

"Hiram Walker, you might just as well quit talkin', for I tell you I won't consent to spendin' another cent. I declare to goodness, it's a downright shame that two brothers can't get along without spendin' all they make in lawin'! It's bad enough for Josh, and for you, what's got a family to care for, it's still worse. You had just better spend that $50 in buyin' me an' the girls some new clothes. Goodness knows, we need 'em bad enough; I haven't had a new dress since this lawin' business began, five year ago; neither has the girls."

Again the foot of "Ma" Walker struck the floor with a thump that was certainly impressive, and her husband, finding that he could accomplish nothing by argument, left the house. If his wife wouldn't consent he had no thought of doing what he wished against her wishes, and, besides that, the money that he wanted was her own, the receipts from her butter and egg sales. No, the case would have to go over for awhile, but he wouldn't give it up, he would teach his contrary brother the needed lesson in time.

In the dark days of '61 three brothers responded to President Lincoln's call for troops. They came from a quiet farm home in one of the northern counties of Indiana. All of them left home for the battlefields with a mother's blessing on their heads, but the mother's heart went out especially to the youngest, "her baby." He was but a boy of 19 to whom the hard work of the farm had always been more of a burden than his frail body could bear, and for that reason he was made much of by the other members of the family. But men were needed, her sons thought it their place to go, and it was not her part to stand in the way of their duty to their country.

Month after month wore away. The mother watched anxiously for each mail, and was occasionally rewarded with a letter, always from "her baby." He told her of his brothers, of the army, of their camp life, of their marches and their battles, but of himself he told her little except that he was as well as usual. But the mother read between the lines. The hardships of campaigning was wearing away "her baby's" health, and how she longed for him.

And one day a letter came from Hiram. His brother, the mother's "baby," was ill, and they would send him home to her. She could feel almost glad that he was sick for it would bring him back. How carefully she would nurse him, and by the time the war was over he should be well again.

THE BROTHERS MEET.

But the mother's hopes were not to be realized. "Her baby" came home to her only to be taken away again forever. She watched beside his bedside; she did all the many little things that only a mother knows how to do, but without success. Long before the war was over they had laid him in the little cemetery, and his furlough was extended into eternity.

When the old folks died the farm of more than 200 acres was left to Hiram and Josiah Walker, to be divided equally or worked together, as the brothers might choose. For several years they farmed their land together, and then Hiram married. After that the land was divided, Hiram taking the part on which the home stood for himself and his bride, and Josiah was to make his home with them.

Added to the ties of blood were the ties of comradeship on the battlefields of the south, and they seemed inseparable. Nothing, it seemed, could come between them. They assisted each other in their work, they shared each other's earnings; they made it a point to plant at the same time; they reaped their crops at the same time, and they sold the products of their farms to the same men. Their lives were the happy ones of peace and good will.

And then came a time of doubt, of hard words, and all the comradeship of the past was forgotten.

It was in the winter time, and both brothers were fattening hogs for market. The pens in which their hogs were kept adjoined, and day after day they had stood together and remarked about the condition of the stock. One morning as Josiah came out to the barnyard he found his brother counting his hogs, and as he reached his side Hiram turned to him and said:

"Josh, there's a board loose and one of my shoats has worked its way into your pen. I think it's the spotted one in the corner there."

"But I guess I know my shoat when I see it, Josh, and I tell you that spotted pig's mine. I'll git in an' catch it and put it back in my pen."

"You'll do nothin' of the kind. That spotted pig's mine, I tell you, an' you'll let it alone where it is. I don't believe you've lost a shoat, anyway."

And so the quarrel started. A pig that either would have gladly given the other had he asked it was to come between them.

At his first opportunity Hiram carried out his intention of putting the pig into his own pen, and in less than 24 hours afterwards he was arrested on a warrant sworn out by his brother.

The case went through the justice court with a decision for Josiah; when appealed to the grand jury the decision was the other way. At a retrial the decision was again reversed, and then it went to the state courts, where it was tried time after time, until now it had reached the supreme court, and Hiram hoped to have the last decision against him reversed.

During the progress of the case both brothers had become heavily involved in debt, the money needed to pay court and attorneys' fees. Hiram's farm was mortgaged, his crops were covered by chattel mortgages, and the same kind of bills. The family of Josiah Walker had counted for six years on his legal monster. His boy had left school that he might take the place of a hired man and so save that expense, as well as that incurred by his schooling. The daughters had done without the clothes they were accustomed to. They and their mother had worked over their old ones until they would bear no more, and then came this plea for just $50 more. Every plea of this kind had promised to be the last one since the case was first started, and "Ma" Walker had finally rebelled.

"I tell you, girls, something's got to be done so's your father and Uncle Josh'll make up this senseless quarrel of theirs. I can't, for the life of me, think how we're goin' to do it, but do it we must. Can't one of you think out some plan?"

A little conference of mother and daughters was being held in the kitchen. They wanted clothes, and that soon. Here was summer coming on and all of their thin clothing was worn out long before the last summer was over. Something must be done to stop this raveaous legal monster that was devouring them.

"I don't know as it'll work," replied Mary, the youngest, "but anyway we might try it."

"Try what?" cried "Ma" Walker.

"You know, ma, pa and Uncle Josh always go to the cemetery Decoration day to fix up Uncle Charley's grave. That's one of the last requests Grandma Walker made before she died. She said Charley was 'her baby,' and she wanted his grave always kept nice. Before this lawsuit pa and Uncle Josh always went together on Decoration day to trim the bushes and fix the sod and put on the flowers, but now they go by themselves. Pa always goes in the afternoon and Uncle Josh in the morning, and each takes care of one side of the grave. Maybe if we could get them to go at the same time, and have them meet there without knowing it the remembrances might cause them to make up again."

"I just believe it would, Mary, if we could only do it, but your pa's so set in his ways that he wouldn't go at any time he thought Uncle Josh would be there, and Uncle Josh wouldn't go if he thought he'd meet your pa. I don't see how we could work it, Mary, they're both that contrary," and "Ma" Walker shook her head over the problem.

"But, ma, couldn't we make Uncle Josh believe pa was going in the morning, or make pa believe Uncle Josh was going in the afternoon," put in Jane.

"Now I never thought of that," and "Ma" Walker beamed on her two daughters. "I'll takes young heads for new ideas, don't it. I'll just leave it for you two girls to fix up. You've got a way of gettin' round them two men I never could get."

The morning of May 30 was as bright and clear as anyone could ask. The country people in the part of the county where the Walkers lived always made the day a holiday—a day devoted to the memories of the brave men who fell in the civil war. Many of them had friends and relatives buried on the battlefields of the south, but there were but few soldier graves in the little churchyard cemetery at home. What few there were, however, received the offerings of the entire community.

As Hiram Walker came in from the barn after doing the chores of the morning his wife asked how soon after dinner he was going to the cemetery, saying she believed she would go with him.

"I guess I'll go this morning," he replied. "The girls tell me Josh has took a notion to annoy me by goin' in the afternoon, an' I guess I'll let him have his own way."

After the quarrel of five years before Josiah had built himself a house as far from that of his brother as possible, and at his place there was no sign of his intention of varying his usual custom of visiting the cemetery in the morning. The girls had worked their plans quite successfully, and the chances were the brothers would meet at a place where, for a time at least, they must drop their quarrel over a spotted pig.

Josiah Walker was kneeling beside the little marble monument clipping the dead branches out of a rose bush over his brother's grave, when he became aware that some one was approaching the grave from the other side of the bush. Glancing around he saw it was his brother. As he rose from his position beside the bush Hiram paused at the side of the grave opposite him.

"Why do you come here at this time?" demanded Josiah, thoroughly incensed at what he considered an imposition.

"And why did you tell my girls that you was comin' in the afternoon," answered Hiram. "I came this morning because you told them that."

"I never told the girls nothing of the kind, and you know it. You come here at this time to spite me."

The whole scheme that the girls and their mother had worked came to Hiram in a minute, and stepping a little nearer he said:

"Josiah, the girls told me that, and now I know why. They can't see any sense in this quarrel of ours, and want us to forget it. They thought here at Charley's grave would be a good place for us to meet. Don't you think it is?"

Without a word of reply Josiah extended his hand across the grave, where it met that of his brother.

"Hiram," he said, "we have quarreled for many years. I thought I would never again speak a kind word to you, but beside the grave where our brother and comrade sleeps our quarrel should be forgotten for the time at least. Shall it be?"

"Why not let it be forgotten for all time, Josiah? Is a spotted pig worth the amount of happiness it has cost us?"

"It was my pig, Hiram."

"No, it was mine, Josiah."

"Let's call it our pig, Hiram, as it really was?"

"That's best, Josiah. Now let's fix up Charley's and mother's graves, and then you must go home to dinner with me, for I suspect 'ma' and the girls will be expecting you."

The lawsuit was settled out of court. "Ma" Walker and the girls got their summer dresses, and abundant supply, for they came from both farms, and Josiah is back at the old home again to live.

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

A GREAT BOOK THIEF.

Probably the most audacious and successful book thief that ever lived was Count Libri of Florence, who, emigrating to France, became in 1842 secretary of a government commission to examine and catalogue the books and manuscripts in the many communal libraries of the country. Availing himself of his opportunities, of the carelessness and ignorance of the custodians, and a consummate knowledge of the treasures unveiled to him, he quietly and leisurely despoiled the libraries of hundreds of their choicest manuscripts and most precious heirlooms, carefully obliterating afterward all signs that might lead to their identification.

How the collection thus acquired came into the possession of the late Lord Ashburnham; by what means Libri's robberies were afterwards discovered and traced back to him; together with the recent sale of the library at a stupendous increase of price, and the methods by which the French government finally recovered a portion of their long-lost treasures, form a most remarkable and romantic chapter in literary history.

That holds the dust of heroes—nameless dead—

They were her sons. In grief she bows her head,
While from her heart she breathes to Heaven the prayer
That all are joined in love fraternal there.

Mahogany is now very generally substituted for hickory in the manufacture of wagon wheels in France, it being found cheaper and quite as durable.

PRICES FALLING.

Industrial Depression Follows the Introduction of the Gold Standard.

If the falling prices since 1873 has been due to some cause other than the demonetization of silver we should have expected the fall to be universal the world over. Yet, strange to the gold-bug, while in every gold standard country prices have disastrously fallen, prices in the silver standard countries have remained substantially stable. United States Consul Whetmore, of Shanghai, has prepared an index number table of Chinese prices showing this fact beyond dispute; and the same has been true of Mexico and the other silver countries. But the most striking and conclusive example is Japan. Up to 1897 that country had enjoyed the most marvelous prosperity. Her export trade increased from $5,000,000 in 1890 to $71,000,000 in 1895, with the annual balance of trade of $5,000,000 in her favor. In 1897, however, Japan decided to become "the England of the orient," and adopted the single gold standard. What has been the result? Prices have begun to fall and industrial depression has set in. The Tiji Shimpo, the leading paper of Japan, in reviewing the first year of the gold standard, says: "We can speak only in gloomy terms of the year just past. Commercial affairs and political affairs reached their lowest depths of depression and mismanagement. The introduction of the gold standard proved a complete failure." And that paper states that the balance of trade is against Japan. Says Greater Japan, a magazine published in Japan in English: "The adoption of the gold standard is the worst mistake ever committed by the government in the long history of 30 years that have been passed since the present Meijji era begnn." And it adds: "Many of the factories in the western part of Japan are closing or only running on half time."

NOTES OR BONDS.

Democrats in congress who are opposing the issue of $500,000,000 worth of bonds are acting in the interests of the people.

Of course, the republicans raise a great howl that the democrats are "obstructionists," but the democrats are simply obstructing an attempt to place a great and unnecessary burden of taxation upon the country.

There are more ways of raising money with which to pay the expenses of the war than the one way, so dear to republicans—that of issuing bonds with which to make the syndicates rich and to keep the masses poor.

Treasury notes are just as good as bonds, being payable in coin, and they do not carry any interest. Again, there is a great quantity of silver lying idle in the government vaults which ought to be utilized. The people know that the democrats are fighting for their benefit, and the democrats are quite willing to go before the people on the issue raised by the republicans.

Treasury notes will have to be redeemed in the long run just as the bonds would have to be redeemed, but there would be no interest to pay on the notes, and that is why the money sharks are opposed to them.

Every three months the bondholder would be able to thrust his hand into the treasury and loot it of interest. He could not do that if treasury notes were issued.

"Anything to get interest out of the government" is the cry of the republican. And that is the extent of the bond buyer's patriotism.—Chicago Dispatch.

A TRICK OF HANNA'S.

The President Maker Works a Point Under Cover of the War Excitement.

Hanna has turned a little trick under cover of the war excitement. That the game he has played is discreditable goes without saying. That it would have worked in ordinary times is doubtful. Worthington C. Ford, who has held the office of the chief of bureau of statistics for the last five years and demonstrated rare capacity, has been removed. Giving the record of Statistician Ford the Pittsburgh Post says: "In 1893, when he took his office, it was in a condition of chaos and its reports of little account. It is the bureau that collects, compiles and prepares for publication those exceedingly important returns of the country's commerce, industry and finance on which the future plans of merchants and financiers are based. Their value is known in all newspaper offices, and with all who concern themselves with economic subjects." Hanna has removed this capable officer and has put in his place one Austin, an obscure Washington correspondent, who knows nothing whatever about the science of statistics. In the campaign of 1896 Austin was hired by Hanna to compile campaign dodgers filled with misinformation. As a tool he proved useful to Hanna, and for his reward he is given a place which he is in nowise competent to fill. This is the kind of work Hanna calls statesmanship. This is one of the results of the disgraceful bargaining which made Hanna a senator.

——Those politicians and newspapers in the United States who are attributing the improved conditions here to the advent of Chinese wail protection might turn their attention to Canada and explain why that country is proportionately more prosperous than we are, while having low tariff. The present conditions in Canada, compared with what existed when protection was in force there, is to those capable of reasoning one of the best possible object lessons on the fallacy of Dingleyism.—Sioux City Tribune.

A BAD FEATURE.

Mr. Dingley's Aversion to Commerce Appears in the War Revenue Bill.

One provision of the bill to provide revenue for war purposes is of such an obnoxious character that it is likely to be stricken out by the senate. In general the bill distributes the burden of emergency taxation in a pretty fair sort of way. But the unconquerable aversion to commerce possessed by Mr. Dingley crept into the bill in the shape of a tonnage tax on foreign shipping. It would naturally be supposed that our foreign commerce was sufficiently laden with the Dingley tariff duties, without adding the weight of heavy tonnage duty, which is in effect an addition to the tariff rates. A representative of one of the leading steamship lines has been in Washington explaining the effect of such a tax to the senators. To Senator Allison he gave a specific illustration as follows:

"One of our large freight steamers, the Pennsylvania or the Pretoria, of 8,139 tons net, would be charged $1,627.80 every time she enters the port of New York, or, as she makes eight trips yearly, this one steamer would have to pay a tax of $13,022.40 per annum. This is simply enormous, and will serve to prove the correctness of the contention as to the influence of the tax towards a deviation of traffic, and give an idea of the magnitude of the intended taxation in the aggregate."

This tax would simply divert commerce from the North Atlantic ports to Montreal, and the freight for the United States would come down by rail from Montreal instead of being distributed from New York. This would be putting work and wages in the way of the Canadian freight handlers and railroads, bringing stagnation on the ports of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and make Montreal the leading port on the continent. It is to be hoped that the senate will be wise enough to wipe out this provision, which would not only weaken us by robbing us of the profits of commerce, but would intensify the disaffection that the Dingley law stirred up in many foreign nations. —Utica Observer.

PLAGUES THE INVENTORS.

The republican party has steadily boasted its invention of the greenbacks, the blood-stained greenback as Dick Oglesby called it. The greenback is a noninterest-bearing obligation, and more than 30 years after the civil war, during which the country's soldiers and sailors were paid in greenbacks, hundreds of millions of them are still in circulation. It was suggested by Secretary Gage, not, however, with the full assent of the president, that steps be taken by the issuance of interest-bearing bonds to redeem, retire and destroy greenbacks. This the party has refused to do. The blood-stained republican created greenback is still a feature of the national currency. Now that more currency is needed for the prosecution of another war the republican house says issue interest-bearing bonds. The senate, however, hears a report from its finance committee to the effect that in providing more money resort may again be had to that form of government obligation which costs nothing but printing. There is no gain in this plan for the money loaner. If there be loss it must fall on everybody. Thus the currency problem returns to plague the inventor of the greenback the republican party, which is now seeking to discredit the money it once took credit for supplying. This is the absolute proof that the republican party of to-day is no longer the party of Lincoln, who was a real follower of Jefferson.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

——The democrats in the senate have demanded an inheritance tax as a part of the Dingley war revenue bill. What are the republicans going to do about that?—St. Louis Republic.

——But for the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the United States, as poured forth from day to day in the democratic press for the past year, Spain would never have been called to account for atrocities in Cuba by the present administration. — Columbus (O.) Press.

——Let the republicans keep the currency question, the protection of trusts and the making of political appointments to the army in the background and they will find democrats voting with them in all measures looking toward the defeat of the common foe. —Chicago Dispatch.

——Spain stands where she does today because for centuries she has been governed for the profit and glory of the politicians in power, regardless of the general good. That is the principle of spoils, whether the politicians be called kings and nobles or bosses and heelers. It exists in every country and among every people.—Buffalo Express.

——If we are to have outlying provinces all over the world we shall have to create proconsuls (or something of that sort) to govern them and to supervise the collection of the provincial revenues. Of course, the great political bosses in New York, Pennsylvania, etc., will expect to have the naming of these functionaries. What a particularly fat addition to the present political and financial assets of bossdom such a prerogative as that would be.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

——The Ohio senate's report of bribery against Mark Hanna is now in the hands of Vice President Hobart. The scheme is said to be to watch for a time when none but Hanna's friends are present and then call for the report in the senate, with the expectation that it will be tabled and thus permanently disposed of. The senate cannot afford to treat the matter so lightly. And pray, what kind of a "friend" is it that would want to treat so frivolously so serious a charge?—St. Louis Republic.

SOME NEW WAR TERMS.

John Talked Poker in His Sleep and Had to Make an Explanation.

"John, what makes you stay downtown so late nights?" inquired an angry wife of her husband.

"They're talkin' war downtown and urge that I tell my experiences in the last war as sort of pointers."

"But in your sleep you say 'I'm in.' What does that mean?"

"Why, you know, if they'd ask me if I'd go to war again of course I'd say that, wouldn't I, darling?"

"Yes, dear, and then sometimes you say: 'It's up to you.'"

"That's when I'm going down the line asking questions of my company."

"But what do you mean when you say: 'It's open?'"

"Do I say it loud?"

"Yes, a little bit exclamatory."

"Well, that's when the engagement opens up."

"And if you keep talking about the 'reds' and 'whites' what's that?"

"Oh, bless you, that's the colors of the flag."

"Well, don't go to war, will you, John?"

"Unless my country demands it, then—"

The explanation appeared to be satisfactory.—Denver Times.

Bills of Fare in Fashionable Restaurants.

The question has been mooted over and over again whether the engrafting of French and German dishes upon the bill of fare of the better class of American restaurants is or is not an improvement. Many pretend that before their introduction our cooking was coarse, barbaric. This is an open question, but no bill of fare presents attractions to the dyspeptic, but they, like the bilious, malarious and persons with weak kidneys, can be cured by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

THIS IS A "HOT" ONE.

April 5th, 1892, my little boy, just four years old, was terribly scalded by falling backward into a pail full of boiling water. He fell into it in such a manner that he remained doubled up until his mother, who was in the next room, could come to his rescue. In tearing his clothing from him, the skin and flesh came off in strips, and the mother's hands were badly burned. The skin came off his body from above the middle of the back to below the calves of his legs. The burn was deep and the case desperate. For two months he was under the care of our family physician. We then took him to St. Paul and acting under his advice called in one of the leading surgeons of the city, who took the case in charge. Other physicians were called in consultation; sixty pieces of skin were grafted at one time, yet notwithstanding all the skill of the doctors and the most unremitting care, two months afterwards all hope had been given up. For months he had lain on pillows with his face down and suffered terribly. He had no appetite and could retain nothing on his stomach.

The sores were indolent and for two months had lain perfectly dormant. My attention was then called to Allen's Ulcerine Salve, and in desperation, ready to try anything that promised help, we commenced its use. Results were apparent at once. It at once aroused the sores to action and stimulated a healthy discharge. We kept the boy's strength up with a preparation of beef's blood and wine, and in about two months he was well on the road to recovery, and we were able to remove him back to our home. Thirteen months from the time he was injured he was perfectly restored. It has been over four years since the cure was effected and the boy is perfectly well and remarkably strong and active. I believe that Allen's Ulcerine Salve saved his life, as when we commenced its use all hopes had been given up, and blood poisoning was expected to set in any moment. It was four months after he was burned before we began to use the Salve.—Signed, H. E. WOODS, Traveling Agent for C. Gotzian & Co., Wholesale Boots & Shoes, St. Paul, Minn.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. CINCINNATI AT WORK.

Preparing to Make the Grand Army Encampment a Success.

How the Ohio City Will Care for the Veterans Who Will Assemble There Early in September.

[Special Cincinnati Letter.]

THE Grand Army of the Republic is now recognized the world over as the greatest and most influential organization of war veterans the world has ever known. Its national encampments have become famous, attracting visitors from all parts of the union, both military and civilian. The first post of the Grand Army was organized at Decatur, Ill., April 6, 1866, and the first national encampment, a very small affair, was held at Indianapolis, Ind., April 20, 1866. Today the society has a membership of nearly 320,000, divided into 7,106 posts. Its annual encampments are attended by fully 100,000 people, and made the occasion of a spontaneous display of patriotism which must be intensely gratifying to the grizzled veterans. The encampment of 1897, held at Buffalo, N. Y., was in every respect a success, but it is predicted that this year's gathering, which will meet at Cincinnati, a point much more centrally located than Buffalo, will attract the largest attendance in the history of the order. Every one of the 45 departments of the Grand Army will be represented, and most of them will participate in the grand parade, which will be in command of Col. John P. S. Gobin, of Lebanon, Pa., the present commander in chief, and his personal staff.

M. E. INGALLS.

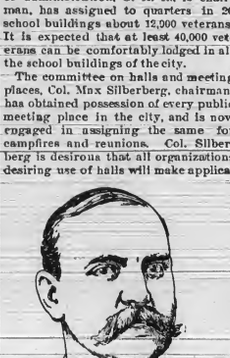
The Women's Relief Corps, an organization composed of the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters of union soldiers of the civil war, will hold its annual meeting at the same time. It is composed of a number of state departments, divided into corps, and has a membership of about 140,000. The national president is Mrs. Agnes Hitt, of Indianapolis. The Ladies of the G. A. R., another auxiliary to the Grand Army, will meet at Cincinnati during the first week of September.

Commander-in-Chief Gobin is expected to visit Cincinnati soon with his staff to inspect the preliminary plans of the citizens' committee for the thirty-second annual encampment of the G. A. R. This will be his second official visit. When here, in November last, he expressed surprise at the progress already made. He found a thorough organization of prominent business men, with Hon. M. E. Ingalls, president of the Big Four and Chesapeake & Ohio railroads, at their head.

On the occasion of his coming visit, the committee will be able to outline to a large extent exactly what will be done in the way of receiving and entertaining the old veterans and the thousands of friends who will come with them to Cincinnati in September of this year.

WILLIAM B. MELISH.
(Executive Director of Citizens' Committee.)



The three important features—railroad rates, hotel rates and free quarters for veterans—have all been satisfactorily arranged for. The committee has assurance of a rate of one cent a mile from all points in the country, the tickets being on sale several days preceding the opening date of the encampment—September 5—and good without any restrictions for about ten days. For those wishing a longer time the railroads will establish a joint agency here during encampment, with authority to stamp the excursion tickets, making them good for full 30 days. In addition, the roads out of Cincinnati will be allowed the privilege of arranging special home-visitors' excursions within short distance limits.

All the hotels of the city of any consequence have signed binding contracts by which they may charge only the regular established rates, and limiting the number of guests that may be assigned to each room. This gives assurance that no undue advantages will be taken of visitors while here. Gen. Gobin a few days ago named the Grand hotel as national headquarters, and he and his family and his staff will occupy about 12 large rooms in this hostelry. The hotel will also be headquarters for the two national presidents of the women's auxiliary organizations—the Women's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R. Parties began contracting for accommodations in the hotels early last fall, and some of the hotels have already disposed of every room. But Cincinnati has fortunately a large number of good hotels, and it is believed there will be no lack of facilities in that direction.

As for the veterans who prefer to camp out, with a mattress only between their bodies and the floor, and their grips for pillows, two classes of free quarters will be provided. The most interesting by all means is Camp Sherman. Adjoining the popular summer resort, Chester park, is a large level field of many acres extent, which is to be transformed into a tented city, with a careful sewage system, with electric lights and city water. Here it is proposed to care for 40,000 veterans. The many buildings in Chester park will be used as auxiliaries to the camp, which has been named in honor of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. The large club house will be used as a restaurant, where the veterans can get a square meal for a quarter, or lunches at popular prices. The amusement hall will be available for campfires and reunions.

Cincinnati has about 70 school buildings. The use of all of these has been donated by the board of education. They will be transformed into lodging houses for the week of September 5. Already the committee on school buildings, of which Capt. R. E. Monford, president of the board of education and member of the national council of administration, G. A. R., is chairman, has assigned to quarters in 20 school buildings about 12,000 veterans. It is expected that at least 40,000 veterans can be comfortably lodged in all the school buildings of the city.

The committee on halls and meeting places, Col. Max Silberberg, chairman, has obtained possession of every public meeting place in the city, and is now engaged in assigning the same for campfires and reunions. Col. Silberberg is desirous that all organizations desiring use of halls will make application to him at as early a date as possible. The committee on private accommodations, George Puchta, chairman, will begin shortly a thorough canvass of the homes of the city to find how many visitors may be cared for. As the population of Cincinnati and its suburbs now aggregates half a million souls, the committee anticipates no trouble whatever in providing ample accommodations of a high class for those visitors who do not care to go to hotels.

The miscellaneous entertainment committee, Charles E. Logan, chairman, is preparing to make use of the four principal summer resorts—Coney Island, the Zoological gardens, the Lagoon and Chester park—and will also provide special features, probably including sham battles on both land and river.

Gen. Andrew Hickenlooper, who won his title by long and distinguished service during the civil war, is chairman of the committee on parade and review. While the line of march has not yet been made public, it has been selected and approved by Commander in Chief Gobin. It will be within the prescribed limit of two miles, and will be entirely of streets paved with asphalt with the exception of only a quarter of a mile. The day of the parade has not been selected, but it will probably be Wednesday, September 7.

The citizens' committee having the arrangements in charge is thoroughly organized. It comprises an executive board consisting of Mr. Ingalls, chairman; William B. Melish, executive director; Casper H. Rowe, treasurer, and Edwin Stevens, secretary; also 30 members, each of whom is chairman of a subcommittee which is conducting some particular line of work. Besides the committees named, the others are as follows, with their respective chairmen: Auditing, E. V. Cherry; bureau of information, H. D. Crane; badges, William B. Melish; courtesies, state and city, Gustav Tafel; day decorations, J. A. Kohner; fireworks, F. Alms; grand stands, J. W. Robinson; horses and carriages, H. P. Wiborg, invitation and reception, Capt. J. Milt Blair; legislation, Maj. George A. Vaudegrift; medical corps, Dr. J. C. Culbertson; music, Frank A. Lee; military organizations, P. M. Milliklin; night illuminations, James Powell; sister cities, George E. Currie; press, Joseph T. Carew; printing, W. B. Carpenter; painting and decorating, John Harris; private accommodations, George Puchta; public comfort, W. C. Johnson; war pageantry, W. R. McComas; women's auxiliary, Congressman Jacob H. Bromwell.

CHEERING HIM.

His Hearers Were Duly Appreciative But Were Not Completely Carried Away.

He was unquestionably an orator. But he was not content with that gift. He desired to deliver speeches which would read well in print. As a result, his periods were polished till they lost force. They would have made more of an impression if he had left a few jagged edges on them. His speeches were as famed for their soporific qualities as they were for their immaculate syntax. But his wife was a confident admirer of his powers as a speaker. Without taking the trouble to inform herself very thoroughly on the topics he discussed, she accepted his observations with implicit faith and unbounded applause. She had gone to hear him address the legislature. As he was over he remarked:

"That speech wasn't the succ[illegible]d it would be."

"It was a very nice speech," answered, encouragingly. "I enjoyed very much. I have passed a highly instructive afternoon. And, indeed, I have rest."

"There wasn't much enthusiasm."

"I was very enthusiastic."

"I was referring to my fellow-members."

"You couldn't tell whether they liked it or not."

"At all events, they were not carried off their feet."

"Oh, you mustn't be the least bit worried about that. They couldn't be. They took special precautions. I noticed that before you got half through nearly all of them had their feet on their desks."—Washington Star.

A SCHOOL GIRL'S BATTLE.

From the Mail, Milford, Ind.

Miss Emma Ryboll, a prepossessing school girl of Milford, Ind., is of more than usual intelligence, and is ambitious to rise in the literary world.

"In the fall of 1896," said Mrs. Ryboll, "Emma was taken ill. She was a close student and her work began to tell on her. She grew weak, pale and nervous, and complained of pains in her back, chest and limbs. A few weeks passed and she grew worse. The doctor said she was a victim of nervous prostration, and should have been taken from school weeks earlier. She gradually grew worse, her nerves were so tense that the least noise irritated her and she had a fever and a continual twitching in her muscles. The symptoms were much like St. Vitus' dance.

Her Battle.

"A year passed, and, under a change of physicians, Emma became somewhat better but soon was as bad as ever. One day I read of a case similar to hers which was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and I decided to try them.

"Emma had no faith in proprietary medicines, but tried the pills, and after taking a dozen doses, she began to improve. It was about the first of April when she began and by the middle of May, after taking about eight boxes, she was entirely cured.

"While ill, she lost twenty-eight pounds, but now weighs more than ever before. Her nerves are strong and she is in perfect health. We are all confident that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured her, and I cheerfully recommend them in all similar cases. MRS. E. A. RYBOLT."

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this third day of September, 1897.

CALEB BAKER, Notary Public.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People will cure all diseases arising from a poor and watery condition of the blood, will build up a run-down system and are a specific for paralysis, locomotor ataxia and other diseases long regarded as incurable.

How They Shop.

"Harry," said Mrs. Tredway to her husband at the breakfast table, "I am quite out of money, and I want to spend the day shopping. Let me have 60 cents."

"What do you want 60 cents for?"

"Ten cents for car fare and 50 cents for luncheon."—Harper's Bazar.

Give the Children a Drink

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it, because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee. 15 and 25c.

Disease

can be driven in or driven out. Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla drives disease out of the blood. Many medicines suppress disease—cover it but don't cure it. Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures all diseases originating in impure blood by purifying the blood itself. Foul blood makes a foul body. Make the blood pure and the body will be sound. Through the blood Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cures eczema, tetter, boils, eruptions, humors, rheumatism, and all scrofulous diseases.

"Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me by my physician as a blood purifier. When I began taking it I had risings or boils all over my body, but one bottle cured me. I consider Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla the best blood medicine made."—BONNER CRAFT, Wesson, Miss.

"The period of inactivity through which we are now passing reminds me somewhat of the days of 1873 when a dealer who made a sale was looked upon as a marvel. I had my office at that time on the second floor of this building. On the main floor were the offices of Reece, Pierce & Co. I was in the habit of stopping in each morning and greeting Col. Pierce, and usually the greeting became a morning visit. One day I was complaining somewhat bitterly of the dullness of the market, and the colonel remarked: 'I tell you that you miss it by not getting down on the ground floor. Now we get a great deal of drop-in trade, so to speak, that never gets to you because of the stairs.

"Just as he was closing this remark the door opened and in stepped a man with a valise. 'There, what did I tell you,' said the colonel. 'Here's a man who probably wants to buy a lot and who never would climb up to you.' I was duly impressed with the truth of the statement then, and we both became silent as the newcomer advanced. As he came up to us he bowed and smiled and then blandly inquired: 'Can't I sell either of you some corn salve to-day?'

"The colonel was almost overcome, but he managed to express a decided negative and the visitor retreated. When he had closed the door behind him I burst out laughing and exclaimed: 'Colonel, if that's the kind of drop-in trade you get down here I want none of it. Now, that man would never trouble me because he could easily see that any man who could frequently climb the stairs of this building could not possibly have corns. I went upstairs to my office, leaving the colonel speechless."—Chicago Chronicle.

THE DUTY OF MOTHERS.

Tradition says "woman must suffer," and young women are so taught. There is a little truth and a great deal of exaggeration in this. If a young woman suffers severely she needs treatment and her mother should see that she gets it.

Many mothers hesitate to take their daughters to a physician for examination; but no mother need hesitate to write freely about her daughter or herself to Mrs. Pinkham and secure the most efficient advice without charge. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

"My health became so poor that I had to leave school. I was tired all the time, and had dreadful pains in my side and back. I was also troubled with irregularity of menses. I was very weak, and lost so much flesh that my friends became alarmed. My mother, who is a firm believer in your remedies from experience, thought perhaps they might benefit me, and wrote you for advice. I followed the advice you gave, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills as you directed, and am now as well as I ever was. I have gained flesh and have a good color. I am completely cured of irregularity."

Walton.

Eugene Demonsey and Boone Finnell, of the second regiment, got in this morning on the through freight. Both looked as men do who had been shoveling coal dust for a month. Boone came near meeting with a bad accident. They had secured berths on top of a load of lumber and were soon fast asleep, in the night, when the train was crawling through a cut, Boone suddenly aroused Eugene by a vigorous shake, saying, "get up, Gene, don't you hear the hugie, it's time for drill," and walked over the load and stepped off, landing with a bang in the ditch below. Gene jumped up, saw his comrade in the ditch, hopped off, raised him up till he recovered and then assisted him onto a car 3 or 4 lengths from where he fell and this morning he is all right.

Joe Christina (Fink) was happy as a bird. There is a member of Joe's company with feet so immensely large that Joe's look a Cinderella's in comparison. Graham is hearty as a buck and doing his level best to learn a soldier's duty. All are in high spirits and filled with greater enthusiasm than when they started from Walton. The regiment is ordered to Chickamauga on Wednesday.

Our citizen's greeting to the boys was hearty and sincere. It is wonderful how much a man is raised in the opinion of his fellows when he assumes the hard life and duties of a patriotic soldier. They then can see that there is something more than common in the man, and the more so, as hitherto he had only been regarded as a mere entity drifting along in the turbid waters of nothingness.

The passing of so many trains, of troops on to the Southern, last week, was cheered by the presence of almost all the ladies in Walton, who had bouquets tied to switches which they swung up to the car windows, where they were caught by the soldiers in uproious delight. The engineers on a troop train would sound the whistle in a way different from those on the regular trains, and almost every mother's daughter would drop their work and break for the railroad.

The sayings of the sage, Josh Billings, though read at the time of publication as items of amusement, with the passing of time show them to be the words of a profound wisdom. Billings condemned, in his quaint style, the habit of men running after women, alleging that if the men would stop the women would run after them. The recent feminine demonstrations show the sage's deep insight into the real nature of women.

Some amusing incidents transpired. A young lady succeeded in landing a note on one car, requesting the recipient to write to her. By mistake, perhaps, it was thrown off a short distance above among some of her friends, and great was the fun they intended to have over the inadvertence of the youthful Michigander, who, by his carelessness, missed securing a fair correspondent.

A train pulling apart caused a delay, and some of the ladies walked down toward it. One soldier, seeing their bouquets, hurried forward and accosted them most courteously with, "are those flowers for me, ladies?" "They are for the soldiers," said one. "Well, I'm a soldier, and thank you kindly for them." They were given to him when he said, "I am so sorry that I have nothiug to give in return. I gave even my coat away, knowing we are going to a warm climate where I should not suffer." "What about the button on your cap?" "well,if the button come off the cap goes to pieces, but anyhow you will always retain the memory of my unpardonable assurance in asking for something without having anything to give in return, but the unspeakable gratitude the soldier always feels when his fair countrywomen show their appreciation of his devotion to his country. Ladies the 25th Pennsylvania volunteers will ever cherish the remembrance of your kindness."

Being asked about his fare, he said they had plenty of everythiug. The field officers refused to stir until everythiug was furnished. These officers had made a request of the enlisted men to abstain from the use of ardent spirits, wine and tobacco, and promised if they complied that they would supply them bounteously with coffee, cocoa, tea and tobacco, and this soldier said he had not drunk a drop of water since he started. Wonder if he had ever heard of the average Kentuckian's distaste for the aqueous beverage?

Mr. Lan Pickwick with Mr. Lee Weller had been fishing all evening and had a nice string (remember I said string) caught for supper. Mr. Pete Tupman with Messrs. Ben Crisler and Sol Long made their appearance as invited guests of the club and were soon in full fellowship and having a grand time. Mr. Pete Tupman hit the Ed. of the Union Blade over the left eye with a slice of well browned "sow belly" red hot, and said supper was ready. Mr. Pat Winkle escorted Bros. Ben and Sol to stations of honor at the festive board (which was a wagon seat wrong side up with care) and helped them to a basket top of delicious bass on toast and a $2 appetite. Mr. Orlando Pickwick as president of the club and master of ceremonies took occasion to remark that three of Kaintuck's lovliest products were females, flowers and fish, upon which Mr. Trundle got a fish bone in his gills and Mr. Tupman got a quart of creek water hung in his throat, after which the lights went out and we went home, long to remember the evening of May 21, 1898.

Mound Field Farm.
(North Hebron.)

May 23.—As it has been some time since any items were reported from Mound Field Farm, it will take the liberty, if agreable to you and your many readers, to occasionally send in a few, as they come under my observation. However, it is not my intention to conflict with your regular Hebron correspondent in any particular. In several districts the males and females are equal in numbers. In the county are seventeen pairs of twins and one set of triplets. The number of white pupils is twelve less thau last year. Ten of the white, and seven of the colored districts are known as paupers—that is they have less than 45 pupils within the school age, and draw more money thau the prorata would give them.

A series of very interesting sermons was preached at Mt. Pleasant Baptist Church, last week. The basket meeting on Sunday was attended by a large crowd. Elder Scott, of Illinois, preached a splendid sermon Sunday morning to as many as the seating capacity of the large church would accommodate. At the conclusion of the morning services a splendid dinner was served to which all were invited, and partook freely. The afternoon services were conducted by Elder Curry, and he delighted the congregation with another good sermon. The day was one long to be remembered as both profitably and pleasantly spent.

Messrs. A. B. Rouse, Elmer Beall and F. A. Hall, visited Camps Bradley and Collier, at Lexington, last Sunday, and saw about 3,500 Kentucky troops that have been mobilized there, and who expected to be moved to Chickamauga Park some time this week. These troops will not receive their guns and uniforms until they arrive at Chickamauga. They saw Boone Finnell, Mack Dulaney and Chas. Coe, who, with the others are anxious to get to the front. The boys are in good spirits and seem well pleased with their job. At Camp Bradley the soldier boys have tents for sleeping apartments, while those at Camp Collier, (the fair gounds) use the stalls in stables for bunks.

Following is the declaration made by the volunteers who are being mustered into the U. S. Army:

And that you will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that you will obey the orders of the officers appointed over you according to the Rules and Articles of War."

We passed Dr. Jacob Tanner's one afternoon, last week, and as his residence was approached the laugh of happy children rang out on the air as though a picnic was in progress in his shady and inviting yard. When close enough to see, the yard was discovered to be in possession of a bevy of bright-eyed little girls whom the Doctor was entertaining in a delightful manner.

The prospects for a potato crop is seldom as poor in this section as at the present time. The crop was planted very much later than usual, and the ground was so cold as to delay the sprouting of the seed when planted, until the crop has been almost put beyond redemption.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, May 20th, 1898.

Under the secret service policy that was this week put into operation the administration can change its war plans even oftener than once in every forty-eight hours, and the Naval Strategy Board can keep our fleets on a continuous wild goose chase, without being criticized. Under this policy Secretary Long is the only man who is allowed to give out a scrap of news concerning the movements of our warships, and nothing indicating their movements is to be allowed to telegraphed from any place any of these vessels go to The reason given for all this secrecy is that the Spanish have been regularly furnished with everything printed about the movements of our ships and that the knowledge thus acquired enabled the admiral of that Spanish fleet to avoid Admiral Sampson's fleet. This may be true, but had there been less criticism of recent movements of our warships it is probable that the new policy would be less strictly enforced. The policy is better than the motive which caused it to be adopted.

It is learned unofficially—there are always leaks, you know—that the Oregon, the Marietta, and the Buffalo, the dynamite cruiser brought from Brazil, have joined Admiral Sampson's fleet; that the swiftest vessels in the fleets of Sampson and Schley are to be sent after the Spanish fleet, while the monitors and the slower ships are to maintain the Cuban blockade; that the plans for the invasion of Cuba are to be again taken up and carried out within a short time; that another call for volunteers is probable in a few days, and that orders have been issued to cut all cables from Cuba, except the two to the United States, which are now under government control.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas, about stated the position of the Democratic party towards the war revenue bill, now before the Senate, in his speech this week on the bill. He opened by saying that he doubted whether there is a man in the Senate who is not ready to vote all the money and taxes necessary to carry on the war. He criticised the estimates made of the amount that would be needed, and quoted the Secretaries of War and the Navy to show that he was right in calling them excessive, and said that even if they were not, there was no good reason why this session of Congress should provide for all of it. In reply to Senator Aldrich's questions, Senator Jones said: "I am willing to fix the amount that ought to be produced by the pending bill at $150,000,000; but I believe it would be better and wiser for us to levy even more taxes rather than increase our interest-bearing obligations. If I had to take my choice between an issue of bonds and an increase of taxation, I would prefer to increase taxation."

Mr. W. Godfrey Hunter, of Kentucky, knew what he was about when he accepted the position of U. S. Minister to Guatemala. His contest for the seat in the House occupied by Hon. John S. Rhea was disposed of in two minutes without a word of debate, by the House adopting the report of the committee stating that Mr. Rhea had been legally elected.

Numerous state officials who have been in Washington this week would have strongly resented the intimation of War Department officials that state officials were responsible for the delay in getting the volunteer army into service had they not feared that to do so would make it appear to foreign countries that the state and Federal authorities were wrauglug over the formation of our army. Inasmuch as the greatest portion of the volunteer army that have been regularly enlisted under the U. S are to-day without proper equipments, it would seem that the War Department officials ought to keep very mum about the responsibility for delay.

Now that Secretary Alger has successfully pulled off an important family event—the marriage of his daughter—and has asked Congress to provide for an additional Assistant Secretary of War, it is hoped that he intends moving things a little faster in his department. That things connected with the army have not been satisfactory may be judged by Senator Chandler having openly expressed the opinion that influences were operating to prevent the army taking any part in the war, by retarding its preparation until our navy had destroyed the Spanish navy and Spain had sued for peace, and that the reason was to make it as easy as possible on the Spanish bondholders. Had Chandler been a Democrat such talk would have been regarded as near kin to treason.

THE NEW WAY.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "local examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. The introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," change of life. It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the Ladies' Advisory Department, The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

W. I. ADDISON, M.D., Cary, Miss., says: "I use Wine of Cardui extensively in my practice and find it a most excellent preparation for female troubles."

Hostilities have been resumed at the old stand between those sandal-footed cruisers of the turf, Robert Fitzsimmons and James J. Corbett.

When we stop to think of it, it seems surprising that the Klondike could be so completely forgotten in so short a time. It is seldom now that it can find a more prominent place in the newspapers than the fifth page of a four-page paper.

The Knoxville pension agency is creating interest by the astonishing revelation that there are 37,000 invalids and 16,000 widows in that territory who draw pensions. The district includes all the southern states except Kentucky and Maryland.

The island of Puerto Rico is rather a small affair, being but 37 miles wide and 107 miles in length. It has a population of over 800,000, however, and does quite a successful agricultural and mining business. San Juan, the capital of the island, has a population of something like 28,000.

The mayor of Fogia, Italy, recently granted a public holiday to the villagers of the old town in honor of the baptism of the children of a Signora Rosa Zurlo, who has presented her husband with four sons, all born on the same day, and who are to be called Dante, Petrarch, Tasso and Ariosto, after the four great Italian poets.

Men and women who had the good fortune to be schoolmates of George Dewey are making the fact known wherever a newspaper is printed in the English language. That old Vermont schoolhouse must have been an immense structure, or else young Dewey spent the first 25 years of his life in accumulating schoolmates.

The large number of rejections of volunteers has caused much comment in the army medical corps. However, the physicians who have conducted the examinations say that outside of the ranks of cigarette smokers there are even fewer rejections than there were in the days of the civil war. Among habitual users of the cigarette the rejections are about 90 per cent.

Admiral Dewey entered the naval academy at Annapolis in 1854. As a young ensign he was in the service of the United States during the civil war and was part of the naval operations at Mobile and New Orleans. But he had to wait 44 years for the great opportunity which came to him recently. He was at the time of the battle a commodore, but he was in fact an acting rear admiral.

It may not be known generally that the wife of Maximo Gomez, commander in chief of the insurgent forces in Cuba, is an American woman, but such appears to be the fact. Representative Gibson claims to represent the district in Tennessee where she was born. Her former name was Miss Pink Martin, a daughter of Henry Martin, who lived on Nail's creek, in a county of East Tennessee.

The United States is now shipping steel rails to Russia as well as to Australia. A recent announcement from Australia shows that American bidders were successful in obtaining a contract for the delivery of a large lot of steel rails for use in that country even against bids coming from England and Germany, and now come reports that the new Siberian railroad is to be metalled with American steel.

FOR DEWEY'S AID.

The City of Peking, With Troops and Supplies, Sails From San Francisco Saturday Night for Manila.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Advices received at the war department Friday indicate that [illegible] Saturday night the City of Peking, which is to carry troops [illegible] ies to Manila, will have [illegible]ched on its way from San Francisco. Over 1,000 men will be aboard. Following the Peking will be the steamers City of Sydney and Australia, which, the department was advised Friday, would be turned over Saturday ready for loading. This work, it is hoped, can be accomplished in a few days, so that the second portion of the expedition to reinforce Adm. Dewey will be close in the wake of the first.

Assistant Secretary Meiklejohn Friday chartered another vessel for transporting purposes across the Pacific. This is the Zealandia, of the Oceanic Steamship Co., which can carry 800 men. She is 377 feet long, 37 feet of beam and is of 2,600 tons burden. The Zealandia is now sailed under a foreign flag and Mr. Meiklejohn has communicated with congress with a view to legislation that will give her an American register.

THE NEW POWER.

What the Vorwaerts, the Organ of the German Social Democrats, Has to Say of the Americans.

BERLIN, May 21.—Vorwaerts, the organ of the social democrats, says:

"Into the putrid swamp of European politics has been cast a stone, and the turbid, slimy waters spout up.

"The great republic on yonder side of the ocean, without castles, nobles or a standing army has suddenly sprung out of her position of neutrality to Europe, and one European state which has slaughtered myriads of men wrestling for freedom is undone.

"Old Europe in consequence, is shaken to her foundations.

"It is a new power—no militarism, no huge fleet, yet a mighty, an overwhelmingly mighty elemental power.

"In Asia the same phenomenon has appeared. The new power has become the balance of the scales."

GEN. GOMEZ.

It is Reported That the Patriot Genera at the Head of 15,000 Men is Closing in on Havana.

NEW YORK, May 21.—A copyrighted special from Port Au Prince to the Evening World says that information has reached that place that Gen. Gomez, at the head of an army of 15,000 insurgents, is closing in on Havana. His advance guard, led by Quentin Bandera, the dispatch says, had a skirmish with and put to flight 800 Spanish troops. Santiago de Cuba, according to the same report, is menaced by 5,000 insurgents under Gen. Calixto Garcia. The dispatch also reports that Spanish warships have been sighted off Yucatan, convoying three transports carrying troops and provisions for Havana.

Important Order From the War Department.

CLEVELAND, O., May 21.—An important order from the war department was received by wire at the local United States recruiting office Friday. It directed that hereafter all recruits for heavy and light artillery should be sent immediately to Tampa, uniformed and completely equipped. "The demand is urgent," the telegram said, "especially for heavy artillerymen. Telegraph this office the number sent in each detachment. Separately note on the assignment cards the branch of service for which each man has enlisted."

A stock of uniforms and soldiers' equipment is now on hand here and all the new recruits will be fully equipped before they leave.

Spain's Navy Not Formidable.

DETROIT, Mich., May 21.—Hon. Thos. W. Palmer, ex-minister to Spain, in an interview Friday said he did not consider Spain's navy at all formidable. Mr. Palmer said he thought Adm. Cervera's squadron was no match for either of the squadrons commanded by Sampson and Schley. In regard to Spain's sea coast fortifications he said that while minister to Spain he inspected the fortifications at Cadiz and expressed the opinion that four 13-inch projectiles would completely shatter them.

Will Not Buy French Goods.

CINCINNATI, May 21.—There is but little doubt that the citizens of Cincinnati are patriotic to an unlimited degree and the latest exhibition of this feeling has cropped out among the shoppers of the big stores down town. Anything having a French trademark or even a French name is turned down these days and merchants have begun to look upon the matter as serious, so much so that several stores have employed an extra force of men to tear off the labels and printed matter on French goods and paste on an American name.

AT CHICKAMAUGA.

First Battalion of the 137th Indiana Infantry Arrived in Camp Sunday.

The Work of Completing the Third Army Corps Was Begun Sunday—Gen. Carpenter Assigned to the Command of First Division.

CHICKAMAUGA NATIONAL PARK, Ga., May 23.—This has been a quiet day at Camp Thomas. The Second Nebraska regiment, which reached Chattanooga Saturday afternoon, arrived Sunday morning and were assigned to the camp ground selected for the First division of the Third corps and the men have been busy getting into their tents during the day. Only two battalions arrived during the day. The Second battalion of the Second Nebraska, which had become separated from the regiment at St. Louis, reached here at 8 o'clock. They came in Sunday over the Cincinnati Southern. The belated battalion was commanded by Maj. W. C. Mace.

The First battalion of the 157th Indiana infantry arrived in Chattanooga at 9 o'clock accompanied by the regimental band of 24 pieces. The battalion spent the day on Lookout mountain and reached the park at 5:30 o'clock, sleeping under the stars on Lyttle Hill during the night. As a result of the few arrivals the railroad yards which have been enormously congested with loaded and empty cars for nearly a week, an opportunity to clear off the tracks and sidings to make room for the troops that will begin to arrive at a lively rate Monday morning was given.

Twenty-five cars of provisions arrived Sunday and were stored in the large warehouses now completed on the park grounds near the depot of the railroad company. Fifty-one of the latest and most improved ambulances, built with a special view to adaptability in a hot climate, arrived from South Bend, Ind., Sunday and will be distributed to the First corps.

The park force of men under the direction of Gen. Boyton was at work all day preparing for the engine and pumps to be used in piping water from the Chickamauga river to the various camps. It has been definitely decided to erect improvised water works, and a contract has been let and all the material ordered, the first consignment of pipe arriving Sunday. There is no scarcity of water now, but it is feared some of the wells are from "wet weather" springs, and that later they will dry up and the piping of water from the creek and Crawfish Springs is a precautionary measure. Gen. J. S. C. Bates, recently ordered to Mobile, left Sunday night at 8:30 o'clock to take command of a brigade at that point.

The work of completing the Third army corps was begun Sunday. Gen. Lewis H. Carpenter, who arrived Sunday and reported to Gen. Brooke, has been assigned to the First division of the Third corps. The organization so far as perfected is as follows:

First brigade, Col. Fred D. Grant commanding, 14th New York; Lieut. Col. H. L. Kline. Second brigade, Col. Hardin, 2nd New York, commanding; 2nd New York, Lieut. Col. Loyd; 2nd Nebraska, Col. Bills. The first regiment to arrive Sunday night will complete the brigade.

The Fourth Ohio regiment, under Col. Coit, has been assigned to provost guard duty in Chattanooga by order of Gen. Brooke, made necessary by the disorderly conduct of many of the young soldiers, who have been guilty of many lapses of discipline, in a number of cases to violence and insulting ladies in the street. Col. Coit will begin his duties Monday.

The four members of the First Missouri regiment injured in Saturday's accident, and who were sent to St. Vincent's infirmary, are doing well and will be out in a few days.

Gen. R. H. Williston, from the United States Third artillery, who has been assigned to the artillery brigade here, arrived Sunday and reported to Gen. Brooke. Gen. Williston states that he found his brigade about complete and equipped with the very important exceptions that they have neither field guns, horses nor ammunition. A part of these equipments arrived here on Saturday and Gen. Williston hopes to get all needed supplies by the middle of the week. Gen. Breckinridge and staff did not visit the park Sunday for inspection. They will inspect the Second and Third divisions Monday and hope to complete their inspection of all organizations perfected up to Wednesday evening, when they go to Tampa. The report that Lieut. Col. John Jacob Astor was injured in the railroad accident Saturday is absolutely false. Col. Astor was not even bruised.

Found Dead in a Canal.

DEFIANCE, O., May 23.—The dead body of Fred Deatrick was found in the canal three miles south of this city Sunday afternoon. A bullet hole in his right temple and the finding of a pistol has led many to believe that he was foully dealt with, while others think he committed suicide. He had been in a despondent mood since the death of his child, about six weeks ago. He left his home Wednesday night, and his whereabouts was unknown until the body was found. Deceased was highly connected here, and was the son of ex-Mayor J. F. Deatrick, and leaves a widow and three children.

A Fake.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The navy department posted the following bulletin at 11 o'clock Sunday morning: "No truth in the published statement concerning an engagement off St. Nicholas Hole, Hayti, in which 12 Spanish ships were sunk."

Demolished By an Explosion.

RED KEY, Ky., May 23.—During the absence of the family early Sunday morning the inside of the residence of Marion Ellis was completely demolished by an explosion of natural gas, entailing a loss of several hundred dollars.

CHANGING THEIR TONE.

Paris Press Has Nothing But Praise for America and Americans Since the Threatened Boycott.

NEW YORK, May 23.—A dispatch from Paris to the World says:

There are remarkable indications in Paris journals, hitherto inimical, of a complete reversal of the French disposition toward America.

The Gaulois, for example, extols the cleverness with which Adm. Sampson has manouevred, taking advantage of his opponent's slowness to effect a junction with Schley and thus enable him to divide the forces into two parts.

M. Jaures, in Petite Republique, writes in the same strain of America's "Admirable attack and defense, which have been directed with energy and life." M. Jaures derides Spain for allowing herself to be made the sport of clericalism and militarism.

There is also a strong article in the Echo De Paris, signed "Henry Bauer," calling French hostility to her ancient friends and clients beyond the Atlantic foolish and illogical.

"France," the writer says, "is naturally drawn to America as a republic, and should not give way to sudden tenderness for Spain."

On the other hand, Henry Fouquier, in the Dixneuvieme Siecle, writes in a vein hardly short of insulting to American women for their alleged snobbishness in seeking to make ont a long line of aristocratic ancestors.

CUBAN CAMPAIGN.

Steps Taken to Mobilize and Equip the Immune Regiments Authorized By Congress Recently.

NEW YORK, May 23.—A special to the Tribune from Washington says:

The intention of the war department to force the Cuban campaign was sufficiently indicated by the steps taken Saturday for the speedy mobilization and equipment of the immune regiments authorized by act of congress last week. This law which empowers the president to organize an additional volunteer force not exceeding 10,000 enlisted men, "possessing immunity from the diseases incident to tropical climates," will be immediately put into effect by the formation of six regiments of nearly 1,000 men each, to be recruited in the gulf states. Assurances from that section are to the effect that these men are practically ready for mustering in and are awaiting equipment. Nearly all of them have had military training, and confidence is expressed that they can be made ready for active service within ten days. It is significant that if immunes are needed at all in the Cuban campaign they are especially adapted for service there in the immediate future, and that if the campaign was to be abandoned until fall there would be no need to raise this force hurriedly in the month of May.

SOLDIER KILLED.

Military Train Collides With a Passenger Train Near Chattanooga—One Dead and Several Injured.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 23.—The train conveying the 1st Missouri infantry from the city to the park was wrecked in a collision at Rossville station, about five miles out, at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. One private was killed and several were injured, will die. The military train was run into by a regular passenger train running at a high rate of speed.

The list of fatalities is: George Walker, artificer. Company D, dead; Alfred M. Lane, private, both legs broken, will die; Harvard Barlaski, private, leg broken, internal injuries, will die; E. R. Richards, first lieutenant, Company H, was badly cut about the arms and shoulders, and many others were badly, but not fatally, injured.

ST. LOUIS, May 23.—The First Missouri volunteer infantry, whose train was wrecked near Chattanooga Saturday, is a St. Louis regiment. It is composed of the flower of the St. Louis younng men, who, to the number of 1,000 responded to the call of President McKinley for volunteers. Thursday evening the regiment under the command of Col. Edwin Batdorf, left Jefferson barracks, near this city, over the Illinois Central railroad in three sections for Chickamauga.

TO COMMAND A BRIGADE.

Col. C. B. Hunt, of the Ohio First Volunteers to Take the Place of Brigadier General Burt.

CHICKAMAUGA PARK, Ga., May 23.—Col. C. B. Hunt, of the First regiment, is in command of a brigade. Friday orders from the war department required Gen. Burt to report at Tampa, and detached him from command of the First brigade, consisting of the First Ohio, Fifth Illinois and Third Wisconsin, Col. Hunt, as senior colonel of the brigade, was notified at once to take command. It is possible that he may remain in command for an indefinite time, and in such case he will remove his headquarters to the spacious tents lately occupied by Gen. Burt and his staff.

Col. Hunt will undoubtedly appoint a new brigade staff should he remain in command of the brigade for any length of time. In such case Capt. Reeder, adjutant of the 1st, would be appointed assistant adjutant general. Friday the 1st was under command of Lieut. Col. Milliken.

Thirteen-Inch Projectiles.

READING, Pa., May 23.—On rush telegram from Washington the Carpenter steel works late Saturday night sent 150 13-inch projectiles destined for Sampson's fleet. These weigh 1,200 pounds each and will go through any thing Spanish afloat. Over eight hundred projectiles of somewhat smaller size were on hand and they were sent Monday to San Francisco for Dewey at Manila. The 13-inch projectiles are popularly known as "McKinley's peacemakers."

In Hungary whisky is distilled from turnips, maize, potatoes and molasses.

ON CUBAN SOIL.

Barring Accidents United States Volunteer Troops Have Been Landed.

It Could Not Be Learned What United States Officers Are in Command of the Expedition—Other Troops Will Be Rushed to Cuba.

CHICAGO, May 23.—A special to the Record from Macon, Ga., says:

Unless some accident has befallen the United States transport Florida there are now United States volunteer troops on the island of Cuba, or they will be there within a few hours. From accurate information obtained here Sunday it can be stated as a fact that the first expedition toward Cuban soil has started and the outlook is for a successful trip.

"Wednesday, May 18, the United States transport Florida left Port Tampa with several hundred volunteer troops on board. The passengers belonged to the regiment of Cuban volunteers organized in the lower extremity of Florida some weeks ago. It was thought best to send these men, as they speak Spanish and are more acquainted with the topography of the country which it is proposed to invade. It can not be learned what United States officers accompanied the regiment of volunteers. If this expedition is a success other troops will be rushed into the island as soon as possible."

OFF AT LAST.

The Charleston With Supplies for Adm. Dewey in Manila Bay Left San Francisco Sunday.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23.—The Charleston is well on her way to Manila. The big cruiser passed through the Golden Gate at 8:20 Sunday morning after having been anchored in the stream all night. She adjusted her compasses at an early hour and then passed up the bay through the Raccoon straits and past the docks on the northern frontage of the city. Every steam vessel in the harbor blew au revoir to Capt. Glass and his crew. None of the forts in the harbor saluted the vessel, but the demonstration made by the 6,000 soldiers gathered at the Presidio was tremendous. When the vessel was sighted coming down the bay the soldiers gathered on the beach to bid her bon voyage. They lined the beach for a mile and cheer upon cheer rang out from the men who are to soon follow the Charleston to the scene of Dewey's triumph. The Charleston's big siren answered the boys on the beach time and again and the whistling was heard from one end of the city to the other. Never has a war vessel leaving this harbor received such a sendoff as was given the Charleston, which was the first of the American fleet to be built on the Pacific coast. She was launched from the Union iron works in this city ten years ago, and was one of the "nest eggs" of the present American navy.

CHARACTERISTIC APPEAL.

Residence of Senator Mason Robbed of Valuable Jewelry—The Senator Asks for His Watch and Pin.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Saturday night the residence of Senator William Mason, of Illinois, 1432 Chapin street, this city, was entered by burglars and jewelry to the value of nearly $4,000 was stolen. Not a clew to either the burglars or the jewelry has been obtained. Sunday evening Senator Mason issued to the burglars a characteristic appeal which he hopes will be heeded. It is as follows:

"To the gentlemen who robbed my house last night:

"I will pay in cash more than any one else for the watch and pin you took last night and give you my word of honor that you shall not be prosecuted for the taking of them. The pin has a portrait of my little son who died years ago and it was, as was also the watch, a present to me. You can communicate with me by mail or in person and you can rely absolutely on my promise not to prosecute.

"WILLIAM MASON."

TO EXTERMINATE CUBANS.

The Destitution in Havana is Frightful—Spanish Grocers Will Not Sell Their Goods to Cubans.

KEY WEST, May 23.—Gustavo Aranguren, a brother of the late Cuban insurgent general, Nestor Aranguren, Sunday received letters from Havana, via Vera Cruz, dated May 7, stating that Gen. Blanco's orders impressing all Cubans into the Spanish army has had the effect of driving many into the insurgent's ranks.

A. Betancourt, an American citizen, and Gonzales Arango, the letter states, have been arrested and confined in the Cabanas fortress on charges of aiding the insurgents.

The destitution in Havana is frightful and is increasing. The grocers, all of whom are Spaniards, refused absolutely to sell food to the Cubans, as if determined to starve them. The Cubans say the Spaniards hate them more than they do the Americans.

Senor Aranguren's correspondents declare that the Spaniards realize that Cuba is lost, but that before yielding the Island they will endeavor to exterminate the Cubans.

At Fort McPherson.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 23.—About 2,000 recruits have arrived at Fort McPherson since that post was made the centralization point for that branch of the army. Every recruiting station in the country, from Maine to California, has sent some men and they are still arriving at a rate of 200 a day.

More Stringent Blockade.

NEW YORK, May 23.—A Washington dispatch says that no more vessels will be allowed to pass the blockade into Havana, as ships allowed in courtesy have informed Blanco of our movements.

Lecture of a Novelist.

A well-known novelist delivered a lecture recently in which he read selections from his own works. His reputation and the society that engaged him brought together an audience composed of the best people of the neighborhood. After the lecture, when people met, it was the proper thing for one to ask the other:

"Were you at the lecture?" And the answer in every case:

"Oh, yes! I was there, but I didn't hear a word. Did you hear the lecture?"

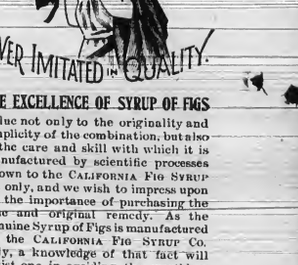
"Well, no! I was there, but I couldn't hear, either."

A friend who met the novelist a few days after his visit to the suburban town asked him what kind of audience he had, and how he liked the towns.

"It's a fine place," was the reply, "and I had the most attentive audience that I have ever spoken to. No one made a sound, and I did not have to raise my voice above a whisper."—Philadelphia Press.

Fast Time to Colorado.

A new through Sleeping Car line between St. Louis and Colorado Springs will be established over the Wabash-Rock Island Short Line, May 15th, 1898. The time will be the fastest made with through service between these two points by many hours. A through Sleeper will leave St. Louis on Wabash train No. 3, at 9.20 a. m., arriving at Colorado Springs the next morning at 11.00, with a direct connection for Denver, arriving at 11.30 a. m. This is the fastest regular through service ever established between St. Louis and Colorado. Returning, the Sleeper will leave Colorado Springs at 2.45 p. m., and arrive at St. Louis the next evening at 6.15.



Patrons of this line will avoid the only unpleasant feature heretofore attendant on Colorado travel, inasmuch as the trip through Missouri's fertile fields will now be by daylight, and the unattractive portion of Kansas will be traversed during the night, with the mountain scenery to greet the tourists in the morning.

The fast time of this line will naturally commend the Wabash Route to intending Colorado tourists.

Particulars will be gladly furnished on application.

MISERABLE COMFORTERS

Sympathy Irritatingly and Awkwardly Expressed.

Voluble People Who Open Wounds Afresh and Display a Lack of Tact Most Exasperatingly—Sermon by Rev. Dr. Talmage, D.D.

The awkward and irritating mode of trying to comfort people in trouble is here set forth by Dr. Talmage, and a better way of dealing with broken hearts is recommended. Text, Job xvi., 2: "Miserable comforters are ye all."

The man of Uz had a great many trials—the loss of his family, the loss of his property, the loss of his health; but the most exasperating thing that came upon him was the tantalizing talk of those who ought to have sympathized with him. And looking around upon them, and weighing what they had said, he utters the words of my text.

Why did God let sin come into the world? It is a question I often hear discussed, but never satisfactorily answered. God made the world fair and beautiful at the start. If our first parents had not sinned in Eden they might have gone out of that garden and found 50 paradises all around the earth—Europe, Asia, Africa and North and South America—so many flower gardens or orchards of fruit, redolent and luscious, suppose you, when God poured out the Gihon and the Hiddekel He poured out at the same time the Hudson and Susquehanna; the whole earth was very fair and beautiful to look upon. Why did it not stay so? God had the power to keep back sin and woe. Why did He not keep them back? Why not every cloud roseate, and every step a joy, and every sound music, and all the ages a long jubilee of sinless men and sinless women? God can make a rose as easily as He can make a thorn. Why, then, the predominance of thorns? He can make good, fair ripe fruit as well as gnarled and sour fruit. Why so much, then, that is gnarled and sour? He can make men robust in health. Why, then, are there so many invalids? Why not have for our whole race perpetual leisure instead of this tug and toil and hassle for all livelihood?

I will tell you why God let sin come into the world—when I get on the other side of the river of death. That is the place where such questions will be answered and such mysteries solved. He who this side that river attempts to answer the question only illustrates his own ignorance and incompetency. All I known is one great fact, and that is, that a herd of woes has come in upon us, trampling down everything fair and beautiful. A sword at the gate of Eden and a sword at every gate.

More people under the ground than on it. The graveyards in vast mnjority. The six thousand winters have made more scars than the six thousand summers can cover up. Trouble has taken the tender heart of this world in its two rough hands and pinched until the nations wail with the agony. In all the mounds of grave yards that have been raised were put side by side you might step on them and nothing else going all around the world, and around again, and around again. These are facts. And now I have to say that in a world like this the grandest occupation is that of giving condolence. The holy science of imparting comfort to the troubled we ought all of us to study. There are many of you who could look around upon some of your very best friends, who wish you well, and are very intelligent, and yet be able truthfully to say to them in your days of trouble: "Miserable comforters are ye all."

I remnrk in the first place that very voluble people are incompetent for the work of giving comfort. Bildad and Elipbaz had the gift of language, and with their words almost bothered Job's life out. Alas for these voluble people that go among the houses of the afflicted, and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk. They rehearse their own sorrows, and then they tell the poor sufferers that they feel badly now, but they will feel worse after awhile. Silence! Do you expect with a thin courtplaster of words to heal a wounded ep as the soul? Step very gently around about a broken heart. Talk very softly around those whom God has bereft. Then go your way. A firm grasp of the hand, a compassionate look, just one word that means as much as a whole dictionary, and you have given, perhaps, all the comfort that a soul needs. A man has a terrible wound in his arm. The surgeon comes and binds it up. "Now," he says, "carry that arm in a sling, and be very careful of it. Let no one touch it." But the neighbors have heard of the accident, and they come in, and they say: "Let us see it." And the bandage is pulled off, and this one and that one most feel it, and see how much it is swollen, and there is irritation, and inflammation, and exasperation, where there ought to be healing and cooling. The surgeon comes in and says: "What does all this mean? You have no business to touch those bandages. That wound will never heal unless you let it alone" So there re souls broken down in sorrow. What they most want is rest, or very careful and gentle treatment; but the neighbors have heard of the bereavement, or of the loss, and they come in to sympathize, and they say: "Show us now the wound. What were his last words? Rehearse now the whole scene. How did you feel when you found you were an orphan?" Tearing off the bandages here, and pulling them off there, leaving a ghastly wound that the balm of God's grace had already begun to heal. Oh, let no loquacious people, with ever-rnttling tongues, go into the homes of the distressed!

Again I remark: that all those persons are incompetent to give any kind of comfort who act merely as worldly philosophers. They come in and say: "Why, this is what you ought to have expected. The laws of nature must have their way:" and then they get eloquent over something they have seen in post-mortem examinations. Now away with all human philosophy at such a time. What difference does it make to that father and mother what disease their son died of? He is dead, and it makes no difference whether the trouble was in the epigastric or hypogastric region. If the philosopher be of the stocal school, he will come and say: "You ought to control your feelings. You must not cry so. You must cultivate a cooler temperament. You must have self-reliance, self-government, self-control"—an iceberg reproving a hyacinth for having a drop of dew in its eye. A violinist has his instrument, and he sweeps his fingers across the strings, now evoking strains of joy, and now strains of sadnes. He can not play all the tunes on one strings. The human soul is an instrument of a thonsand strings, and all sorts of emotions were made to play on it. Now an anthem, now a dirge. It is no evidence of weakness when one is overcome of sorrow. Edmund Burke was found in a pasture field with his arms around a horse's neck caressing him, and some one said: "Why, the great man has lost his mind." No; the horse belonged to his son who had recently died; and his great heart broke over the grief. It is no sign of weakness that men are overcome of their sorrow. Thank God for the relief of tears. Have you never been in trouble when you could not weep, and you would have given anything for a cry? David did well when he mourned for Absalom. Abrahnm did well when he bemoaned Sarah. Christ wept for Luzarus, and the last man that I want to see come anywhere near me when I have any kind of trouble is a worldly philosopher.

Again, I remark that those persons are incompetent for the work of comfort bearing who have nothing but cant to offer. There are those who have the idea that you must groan over the distressed and afflicted. There are times in grief when one cheer.ul face, dawning upon a man's soul, is worth $1,000 to him. Do not whine over the afflicted. Take the promises of the Gospel, and utter them in a manly tone. Do not be afraid to smi'e if you feel like it. Do not drive any more heavens through that poor soul. Do not tell him the trouble was foreordained; it will not be any comfort to know that it was 1,000,000 years coming. If you want to find splints for a broken bone do not take cast iron. Do not tell them it is God's justice that weighs our grief. They want to hear of God's tender mercy. In other words, do not give them aquafortis when they need valerian.

Again I remark, that those persons are poor comforters who have never had any trouble themselves. A larkspur can not lecture on the nnture of a snowflake, and those people who have always lived in the summer of prosperity can not talk to those who are frozen in disaster. God keeps aged people in the world, I think, for this very work of sympathy. They have been through all these trials. They know all that which irritates and all that which soothes. If there are men and women here who have old people in the house, or near at hand, so that they can easily reach them, I congratuinte you. Some of us have had trials in life and although we have had many friends around about us, we have wished that father and mother were still alive that we might go and tell them. Perhaps they could not say much, but it would have been such a comfort to have them around. Those aged ones who have been all through the trials of life know how to give condolence.

Cherish them; let them lean on your arms, these aged people. If when you speak to them, they can not hear just what you say the first time, when you say it a second time do not say it sharply. If you do you will be sorry for it on the day when you take the last look and brush back the silvery locks from the wrinkled brow just before they screw the lid on. Blessed be God for the old people! They may not have much strength to go around, but they are God's appointed ministers of comfort to n broken heart.

People who have not had trial themselves can not give comfort to others. They may talk very beautifully and they may give you a great deal of poetic sentiment, but while poetry is perfume that smells sweet, it makes a very poor salve. If you have a grave in a pathway, and somebody comes and covers it all over with flowers, it is a grave yet. Those who have not had grief themselves know not the mystery of a broken heart. They know not the meaning of childlessness, and they having no one to put to bed at night, or the standing in a room where every book and picture and door are full of memories—the door that where she sat, the cup out of which she drank—the place where she stood at the door and clapped her hands—the odd figures that she scribbled—the blocks she built into a house. Ant no, you must have trouble yourself before you can comfort trouble in others. But come all ye who have been bereft and ye who have been comforted in your sorrows, and stand around these afflicted souls and say to them: "I had that very sorrow myself. God comforted me and He will comfort you;" and that will go right to the spot. In other words, to comfort others we must have faith in God, practical experience and good, sound common sense.

But there are three or four considerations that I will bring to those who are sorrowful and distressed, and that we can always bring to them, knowing that they will effect a cure. And the first consideration is that God sends our troubles in love. I often hear people in their troubles say: "Why, I wonder what God has against me?" They seem to think God has some grudge against them because trouble and misfortune have come. Oh, no. Do you not remember that passage of Scripture: "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth?" A child comes in with a very bad splinter in its hand, and you try to extract it. It is a very painful operation. The child draws back from you, but you persist. You are going to take that splinter out, so you take that child with a gentle but firm grasp, for although there may be pain in it, the splinter must come out. And it is love that dictates it and makes you persist. My friends, I really think that all our sorrows in this world are only the hand of our Father extractions some thorn. If all these sorrows were sent by enemies, I would say, Arm yourselves against them; and as in tropical climes when a tiger comes down from the monntains and carries a child from the village, the neighbors band together and go into the forest and hunt the monster, so I would have you, if I thought these misfortunes were sent by an enemy, go out and battle against them. But no, they come from a Father so kind, so loving, so gentle, that the prophet speaking of his tenderness and mercy, drops the idea of a father and says, "as one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Again I remark there is comfort in the thought that God by all this process is going to make you useful. Do you know that those who accomplish the most for God and Heaven have all been under the harrow? Show me a man that has done anything for Christ in this way, in public or private place, who has had no trouble, and whose path has been smooth. Ah, no.

I once went through an ax factory, and I saw them take the bars of iron and thrust them under the terrific furnaces. Then beswented workmen with long tongs stirred the blaze. Then they brought out a bar of iron and put it in a crushing machine, and then they put it between jaws that bit it in twain. Then they put it on an anvil, and there were great hammers swung by machinery—each one half a ton in weight—that went thump! thump! thump! And that iron could have spoken it would have said: "What all this beating? Why must I be pounded any more than any other iron?" The workman would have said: "We want to make axes out of you—keen, sharp axes—axes with which to hew down the forest, and build the ship, and erect houses, and carry on a thousand enterprises of civilization. That is the reason we pound you." Now, God puts a soul into the furnace of trial, and then it is brought out and run through the crushing machine, and it comes down on the anvil and upon it, blow after blow, blow after blow, until the soul cries out: "O, Lord, what does all this mean?" God says: "I want to make something very useful out of you. You shall be something to hew with and something to build with. It is a practical process through which I am putting you." Yes, my Christian friends, we want more tools in the church of God; not more wedges to split with. We have enough of these. Not more bores with which to drill. We have too many bores. What we really want is keen, sharp, well-tempered axes, and if there be any other way of making them than in the hot furnace, and on the hard anvil, and under the heavy hammer, I do not know what it is. Remember that if God brings any kind of chastisement upon you, it is only to make you useful. Do not sit down discouraged and say: "I have no more reason for living. I wish I were dead." Oh, there never was so much reason for your living as now! By this ordeal you have been consecrated n priest of the most high God. Go out and do your whole work for the Master.

Again, there is comfort in the thought that nll our troubles are a revelation. Have you ever thought of it in that connection? The man who has never been through chastisement is ignorant about a thousand things in his soul he ought to know. For instance, here is a man who prides himself on his cheerfuiness of character. He has no patience with anybody who is depressed in spirits. Oh, it is easy for him to be cheerful, with his fine house, his filled wardrobe, and well strung instruments of musie, and tapestried parlor, and plenty of money in the bank waiting for some permanent investment. It is easy for him to be cheerful. But suppose his fortune goes to pieces, and his house goes down under the sheriff's hammer, and the banks will not have anything to do with his paper. Suppose those people who were once eagerly entertained at his table get so short-sighted that they can not recognize him upon the street. How then? Is it so easy to be cheerful? It is easy to be cheerful in the home, after the day's work is done, and the gas is turned on, and the house is full of romping little ones. But suppose the piano is shut because the fingers that played on it will no more touch the keys, and the childish voice that asked so many questions will ask no more. Then is it so easy? When a man wakes up and finds that his resources are all gone he begins to rebel, and he says: "God is hard; God is outrageous. He had no business to do this to me." My friends those of us who have been through trouble known what a sinful and rebellious heart we have, and how much God has to put up with, and how much we need pardon. It is only in the light of a flaming furnace that we can learn our own weakness and our own lack of moral resource.

CARLO DI RUDINI, son of the Italian prime minister, has been winning large sums at Monte Carlo. He is an inveterate gambler, and his father has tried in vain to reform him. He was started on an exploring trip to Africa, but slipped away at Aden and returned to Monte Carlo with the money for the expedition. He was then put up for the chnnber of deputies and elected, but immediately joined the opposition, and made his father buy his vote whenever it was needed. He is probably the person spoken of as sharing in the recent concession of coal lands made by China to an English and Italian syndicate.

Adm. Cervera's Fleet Thought to Have Left Santiago De Cuba—Destination Not Known.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The race for the Philippines is on. It will be the most thrilling sea chase of modern times. The United States will dispatch its transports for the relief of Dewey from San Francisco across the placid Pacific, 7,050 miles. Spain will send its fleet, which has for its object the reconquering of the islands, from Barcelona, through the Medlterranean, the Isthmus of Suez and the Red sea, across the Arabian sea, along the southern extremity of the Bay of Bengal, around the Malayan peninsula and up the China sea to Manila, a total distance of 8,000 miles.

The difference in distance the rival fleets have to go is but three or four days by sea travel. And again the administration realizes how unfortunate that the relief to Dewey was not sent two weeks ago.

The City of Peking and the City of Sydney were ordered by the navy department and the war department to crowd on all steam and make the best possible time in reaching their destination. The United States has the advantage. Transports taking troops to Dewey will maintain a greater rate of speed than the war vessels Spain is sending from Barcelona. The consequences of nn accident, however, en route might be of the most serious character.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The Spanish Cape Verde squadron has been definitely and officially located at Santiago De Cuba. Rr. Adm. Sampson, with a powerful fighting squadron will soon close in on the enemy on the south, coming from Key West by way of the Windward Passage east of Cuba.

Commodore Schley, with the flying squadron, is sailing around the island of Cuba, hemming them in on the west. Thus located, and being surrounded by two powerful American fleets, there now seems no possible help for the Spanish vessels.

Secretary Long received a cablegram from Rr. Adm. Sampson announcing that his scouts had located the Cape Verde fleet at Santiago de Cuba. The message was sent from a cable station in the West Indies, and indicated that the American commander was close on the heels of the Spaniards.

Secretary Long immediately summoned the members of the strategic board, and a long and important meeting was held. Believing it to be certain that Adm. Cervera would make a desperate effort to slip into Havana on the west, it took but a few moments for the board to decide on a plan. Knowing Rr. Adm. Sampson could be depended upon to prevent Adm. Cervera from sailing north, orders were quickly dispatched to Commodore Schley, at Key West, to put to sea. The instructions to the commander of the flying squadron were to sail around Cuba to the west and to find Cervera's fleet and capture or destroy it.

Commodore Schley was instructed to use his utmost endeavors to prevent the Spanish fleet from entering the harbor of Cienfuegos or Havana. Rr. Adm. Sampson and Commodore Schley were informed as to each other's movements. It is expected that Adm. Sampson will come up with Adm. Cervera first. He, it is calculated will appear off Santiago Sunday evening. If the Spanish fleet is still in the harbor Adm. Sampson will blockade the port and commence bombard ment in order to bring out the fleet. If the fleet has left the harbor it will, it is thought, proceed west for Cienfuegos. Commodore Schley should reach there in time to intercept it.

Rr. Adm. Sampson has scouts out watching for the fleet, and if it leaves the harbor of Santiago before he arrives they will be able to inform the admiral the direction it is heading. Should it sail west Adm. Sampson will follow in its wake. It is impossible with accuracy to state what ships Rr. Adm. Sampson and Commodore Schley have in their respective squadrons. The battle ship Oregon and the gunboat Marietta are now with Rr. Adm. Sampson's fleet. The cruiser Buffalo is thought to have arrived at Key West for repairs.

ST. PIERRE, Martinique, May 23.—Notice that the Cape Verde fleet, commanded by Adm. Cervera, would remain here for coal was received Sunday by the Spanish consul. This report, coupled with the statement that Spanish transports laden with coal are on their way to Fort de France, occasioned much excitement. It is now believed that Cervera's warships may appear in these waters at any hour. Although it is believed in many quarters that the fleet under Adm. Cervera will return to these waters, they will not be allowed to coal inside the harbor.

CADIZ, May 23.—It is stated here very positively that the Pelayo, Carlos V., three of the transatlantic steamers and two torpedo boats are about to sail for the Philippines.

The Pelayo is well armed, armored and manned. The Carlos V. is well armored and manned, and has good guns, but her heavy ones farward will not swing owing to defects in the machinery, and can only be fired directly ahead.

Grand Officers Installed.

WASHINGTON C. H., O., May 23.—Saturday morning the sixty-sixth annunl session of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. of Ohio, was closed after a most delightful week. The installation of the officers of the grand lodge took place Friday afternoon. The next meeting of the grand lodge will be held at Toledo.

WAR SITUATION.

The Navy Department Has Received Information of the Arrival of the Spanish Fleet at Santiago De Cuba.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—All of the news given out [illegible] at the navy department was [illegible]ed in the one short bulletin [illegible] at the close of the day, stating that the department had information believed to be authentic, that Adm. Cervera, with his Spanish flying squadron, was at Santiago De Cuba. This went to confirm the newspaper reports and also the Madrid cablegram published Friday morning, the latter a rather unusual circumstance, for the Spanish bulletins have been notably deceptive ever since the flying squadron left Cadiz.

Accepting this statement as correct it indicates there is little probability of a hostile meeting between Sampson or Schley and Cervera immediately. Looking over the charts of Santiago harbor, the experts soon discovered that the place would be a veritable rat trap for the Spaniards, with its narrow entrance in which a single American monitor could bottle up the whole Spanish fleet.

The naval strategy board, rechristened of late the war board, is to lose one of its most active and valuable members in the person of Capt. Barker. He leaves Washington Saturday for Hampton Roads to take command of the fine protected cruiser Newark, which has just been extensively repaired at the Norfolk navy yard. It is expected that the Newark will join Sampson's squadron in the West Indies as soon as she can get there. It has not been determined who will succeed Capt. Barker as a member of the war board, a place requiring the very highest professional qualifications and involving a knowledge of strategy as taught scientifically, which is not the possession of all naval officers. It may be that the vacancy will not be filled at present, though there has been favorable mention of the name of Adm. Ramsay, retired, in that connection.

Another loss to the department occured Saturday, when Lieut. Gibbon left to serve as one of Captain Barker's officers on the Newark. This young officer has displayed the greatest energy in securing for the services of the navy the various naval militia organizations of the states and as an incident to that work he was obliged to put forth his best efforts to secure the formation of new organizations where none existed and additional battalions in the states that already possessed a naval militia. The great value of this work is shown by the fact that many of the vessels of the auxiliary navy and most of the old monitors that have been commissioned for coast defense purposes are manned almost altogether by the naval militiamen.

Preparations go on steadily for the Philippines military expedition.

Gen. Merritt, who will command, stopped in Washington Friday morning on his way westward from New York and spent most of the day in consultation with the officials of the department arranging the details of the expedition. Another transport was secured Friday, and the department is showing a disposition to treat Gen. Merritt with the utmost liberality in the equipment of his force. It is expected that the advance guard on one vessel, under the command of Gen. Otis, will sail out of the Golden Gate Saturday bound for the Philippines.

The complaints of the shocless among the volunteers just brought into the army will soon be silenced, as the department just placed orders for 200,000 pairs of soldiers' shoes.

A beginning was made Friday toward the organization of the independent volunteer forces under authority conferred upon the president by special resolution. The national guard will have no part in these organizations, which will be made up of engineers, immunes and electricians.

The staff assignments are coming out rapidly in the general orders issued daily by the department, the appointments being made generally upon the request of the major general's and the brigadier generals yet to be provided for in his matter.

The navy department is about to call for bids for a steel floating dock, capable of flonting a ship of 15,000 tons, to cost $800,000 and to be located at New Orleans. This dock, when completed, will be one of the finest structures in the country. Provision for it was made in the naval appropriation bill, as a result of recommendations of the naval board, headed by Adm. Bunce. Although located at New Orleans, the dock will be of that floating type, similar to the floating dock at Havana, which can be towed to any point desired.

Another project for docks is contained in the deficiency appropriation bill now before congress This provides for the immediate purchase of two floating docks. As soon as the bill becomes a law the department knows where it can purchase these docks, ready for service. They are at New York, and although of wood, and comparatively small, they will be of inestimable service on being towed to Key West, where they will accommodate all but the largest battle ships and cruisers. The department hopes to own these docks within a few weeks, perhaps days, as the need of docking and scraping the war ships which have been in southern waters for a long time is becoming imperative.

Cervera Going to Havana

LONDON, May 21.—The Daily Mail's Madrid dispatch says an official telegram from Adm. Cervera announcing his safe arrival at Santiago de Cuba, stated that his vessels had not met any mischance. The squadron will recoal and then proceed to Havana.

Spanish Colonel Deserts.

HAVANA, May 9 (via Vera Cruz, Mexico, May 13).—A colonel of the civil guards, Senor Mello, who appears to have gambled away large sums of money belonging to the regiment, has gone over from Colon to the insurgent ranks.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—SENATE.—The last of the war revenue measures now under consideration by congress was begun in the senate Monday. The opening statement for the committee on finance was made by Mr. Allison (ia.), the ranking member in the absence of Mr. Morrill (Vt.). It was estimated that the bill as it came from the house of representatives would raise about $160,000,000 a year. As reported from the senate committee, Mr. Allison estimates that it will raise $161,000,000. Appended is a recapitulation of the amount of revenue to be derived by the government at the present law and under the bill as it was reported from the senate committee on finance. At the conclusion of Mr. Allison's statement the bill was made the unfinished business. It will be pressed to passage as soon as possible.

HOUSE.—The house Monday received its first veto from President McKinley and voted unanimously to sustain the executive. The veto was of a bill conferring upon the court of claims jurisdiction in a private claims case of long standing. The day was given to the consideration of bills under suspension of the rules the measures of chief importance being one ratifying an agreement for the allotment and opening to settlement of the Cheyenne, Kiowa and Apache lands in Oklahoma; and to establish an assay office at Seattle, Wash.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—SENATE.—Considerable progress was made by the senate Tuesday in considering the war revenue measures. Mr. Jones (Ark.) presented in a general statement the views of the democratic members of the finance committee. He maintained that the taxes imposed by the pending bill ought to be levied upon property and not upon consumption; that the policy of the republican party always had been to impose taxes upon consumption, while that of the democratic party was to impose it upon property. He believed that taxation that would raise the money necessary for the support of the government could be carried by this bill, and that if the licenses of the war should demonstrate that more money was needed congress could provide it later. He opposed the proposition to issue bonds and certificates of indebtedness as far in excess of the requirements of the war and held that the expenses should be paid by the government as the war progresses.

HOUSE.—The house held a brief session Tuesday. Two important bills affecting labor were passed, one limiting the hours of men employed upon government works and in government service to eight hours daily and the other providing for the equipment of a non-partisan labor commission to consider existing problems affecting labor.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—SENATE.—The feature of Wednesday's session of the senate was the speech of Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) on the war revenue measures. He strongly contended that a bond issue was unnecessary, that the funds required for the prosecution of the war could be realized from the proposed inheritance tax, by taxing corporations, by the coinage of the silver seigniorage and by the issue of legal tender notes. He contended that these sources of money would yield to the government during the next year, he maintained, fully $60,000,000, an amount in excess of the estimated sum necessary for the conduct of the war. His speech was characteristically beautiful in diction and close and forceful in reasoning. Senators on both sides of the chamber gave it undivided attention. Considerable progress was made in the reading of the bill, which included, naturally, the consideration of the amendments reported by the committee. Through the influence of Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.) the imprisonment penalty was stricken out of some of the sections relating to violations of the stamp tax. During the course of the debate, part of which occurred in executive session, the conference report on the bill suspending certain parts of the existing law relating to the purchase of silver and the war department was adopted. The bill permitting officers of the regular army to accept staff appointments in the volunteer army without losing their rank or places in the regular service was passed.

HOUSE.—The house adjourned Wednesday after a session lasting only a few hours. An ineffectual effort was made to pass a bill prohibiting the publication of information concerning the strength of the country's fortifications. Without a word of debate the deficiency pension bill was passed.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—SENATE.—While several important paragraphs in the war revenue measure were passed over Tuesday for future consideration, excellent progress was made by the senate in the consideration of the bill. Two-thirds of the measure has been read, the committee amendments generally having been agreed to. Mr. McLaurin (dem., S. C.) opened the discussion of the bill Thursday with a carefully prepared speech touching all of its features. He expressed the hope that the bill would pass as reported by the majority of the committee on finance, with the exception of the stamp tax, which he thought quite unnecessary. The proposition to place a stamp tax upon proprietary articles and perfumery articles now in stock aroused a lively discussion. It was regarded as retroactive legislation and, as such, was opposed by many senators. The paragraph has not been disposed of finally.

HOUSE.—The adjournment of the house to Monday was welcomed as a week's respite before consideration of the Hawaiian resolutions. On the opening of the day's session Chaplain Goodwin referred feelingly to the late William E. Gladstone. "In the death of this grand old man," the chaplain said, "Our hearts go out in gratitude to Thee for his great character as a writer, statesman and Christian, which has been felt throughout the world." Mr. Grosvenor (rep., O.) called up the labor arbitration bill as amended and passed in the senate. It was rejected to the amendments as they either saluted or unnecessary, saying they had been approved by the friends of the bill outside of congress. He moved to concur in the senate amendments. After debate, confined to the proposition to send the bill to conference, in which many members participated, a roll-call upon agreeing to the senate's amendments, thus enacting the bill's passage, was ordered, resulting in yeas 219, nays 4.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—SENATE.—At the conclusion of Friday's session of the senate the reading of the war revenue measure had been completed. About seven-eighths of the amendments proposed by the senate committee have been agreed to. Those remaining to be acted upon, naturally, the most important in the bill and will provoke a deal of discussion. The principal amendments yet to be passed upon are those relating to the issue of bonds and certificates of indebtedness, the tobacco tax, the tax on proprietary articles, the issue of greenbacks, the coinage of the silver seigniorage, the issue of silver certificates, the inheritance tax, and the tax on corporations. The action upon some of the amendments will be dependent upon that on others. Mr. Aldrich (rep., R. I.) Friday offered as a substitute for the paragraphs relating to the coinage of the seigniorage, the issue of silver certificates and the issue of legal tender notes, the bond provision prepared by the republican minority of the committee on finance. If the bond provision should be accepted by the senate, the amendments offered by the democrats in lieu of it will naturally be rejected. Mr. Daniel (dem., Va.) delivered an extended speech opposing an issue of bonds and supporting the substitute paragraphs proposed by the democratic majority of the finance committee.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

Cincinnati Will Be the Next Meeting Place.

In 1885, while it was not a May frost, things were in growth just as now. The wheat blackened considerably, many farmers plowed it down and planted corn, but those that had faith made fair crops.—Interior Journal.

If all reports are true, Williamstown will soon lose several citizens who have made this their home for many years. There will also be several changes in business circles.

Tim Needham, cashier of the Bank of Williamstown, left Tuesday morning in company with Dr. Duncan, of Walton, for Black Hills, in South Dakota, where he expects to remain on a prospecting and business trip for the next month.

Bruce Cunningham went to Lexington Monday and enlisted in the United States army as one of Uncle Sam's soldiers, and will go to the front with the Kentucky brigade.

The biggest real estate deal made in Williamstown for a long time is to go to the credit of last week. D. C. Points sold to the Grant County Deposit Bank the store and office building opposite the county clerk's office for $7,000 cash. The building is rented so as to pay 11 per cent. on that amount of money.

The Michigan soldier boys who passed through here on last Monday had evidently never seen any Kentucky girls before, and two or three of Williamstown's beauties who had gathered at the depot to watch the soldier boys pass on their way to the South found themselves kissed by rough mustached lips from Michigan before they knew what had happened. They raised a "holy howl" about it, but then we suppose they didn't mind it very much anyway.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1898. NO. 32

WHERE is Cervera?

THE toll gate raiders were getting in their work again last week.

IS Cervera working the snipe-hunter's racket on Uncle Sam?

THE President intends to give all the eligibles an opportunity to enlist.

ON an average every woman carries forty to sixty miles of hair upon her head.

THE colored men who want to enlist will be given a chance under the seventy-five thousand call.

THE huge guns of modern navies can be fired only about seventy-five times. After that they become worn out.

DEWEY wants reenforcements and he wants them badly. Those started last week will be gladly received by him.

SPAIN seems to have forgotten that President McKinley gave her only forty-eight hours to get out of Cuba.

COVINGTON had her Dewey day last Friday. It was the greatest demonstration ever witnessed in that city.

THE President is contemplating another call for volunteers. It is said he will call for seventy-five thousand.

AND Mr. Alger, it is thought can not stay in the cabinet much longer. A cabinet office must be a great health destroyer.

THE enlistment of 75,000 more volunteers will require three additional Major Generals and about twenty-four Brigadier Generals.

THE Hanna-McKisson fight is on again in Ohio, and upon the success which of either in Cleveland depends will control the State Convention.

EX-SECRETARY SHERMAN'S contemplated trip to Klondyke indicates that there is yet considerable vitality about the discarded statesman.

IN the last week Spanish warships have been seen at diver places in Cuban waters, but at no time have the American ships been able to engage them.

THE time necessary for the conversion of a forest tree, or a part of it, into a printed paper in a recent test made in Germany was two hours and twenty-five minutes.

THE Spaniards' fleet that sailed from Cape Verde was so successful in eluding the American fleet that many concluded the latter was not anxious to meet its adversary.

THE Second regiment of Kentucky Volunteers are now stationed at Chickamauga Park. Their departure from Lexington, last Wednesday, was witnessed by 10,000 people.

THE first claim for a pension in the war with Spain has been made. An Illinois woman's husband died after having been in camp two weeks. She will get a pension of $12 per month.

THE soldiers at Tampa are being put on transports for shipping to some unknown destination. That move indicates that the bluffing business is not panning out, and that there is going to be some genuine war after all.

SOME of those who pledged themselves to go to the front in case of war with Spain, have seemingly forgotten to enlist, but it may be that the very slow progress that has been made toward the front has thrown a damper on their patriotism.

ACCORDING to the latest in the newspapers the army of invasion is to leave Tampa, Florida, for Cuba, immediately. But come to think about it the daily papers have been dealing in a very unreliable class of war news ever since the scrap began.

AT last reenforcements have been started to Admiral Dewey, who is evidently very much in need of additional force. His dispatches since he destroyed the enemy's fleet at Manilla have been in the nature of hurry up order which failed to hurry up.

IT is suggested that the proper way to cut off Blanco's communication with Spain is to keep him so busy dodging shells as to have no time for framing dispatches, but Blanco has about concluded that shells are not used by the the United States navy.

GOV. BRADLEY will give Eastern Kentucky the privilege of furnishing the greater part of Kentucky's quota of volunteers under the seventy-five thousand call Congressman Colson has been commissioned as a colonel by the Governor, and will proceed at once to organize a regiment to lead against Spain.

THE President has made a second call for volunteers, placing the number at seventy-five thousand, making an aggregate of two hundred thousand that have been called. The volunteers are to serve for two years, unless sooner discharged. Kentucky's quota under the second call will be about two thousand.

LAST week the Recorder's Gasburg correspondent mentioned the fact that this is Boone county's centennial year, and suggested that a centennial celebration would be the proper thing some time this summer. Boone is one of the best counties in the State, and her people are able to celebrate the centennial in an appropriate manner. What do you think of the suggestion?

IT is claimed that the Spanish Amiral, Cervera, and his fleet are bottled up in Sandiego de Cuba harbor on the southern coast of the island. The harbor is stronly fortified, and any attempt to enter it would be exceedingly hazardous, and Uncle Sam's men of-war will content themselves by guarding the entrance to the harbor and keeping them therein until their supplies are exhausted and hunger compels them to run up the white flag.

How glad these thousands of staving concentradoes were to see the ships and soldiers sent by this country to Cuba to relieve their suffering. How they rejoiced when Morro Castle was leveled and the blue coats swarmed in Havanna, and a generous supply of provisions was issued to them at the cost of a war. Even the waves that surged about the wreck of the Maine seemed pleased because of the transformation that had taken place on the island. Nit.

IT is true that the people were clamoring for a war with Spain for some time before the war was declared, but they did not desire a war of conquest. They never suspicioned the seizure of islands on the other side of the Pacific ocean would intervene and prolong the suffering of those whom it was desired to relieve. The agonies of the starving thousands in Cuba are no longer the incentives of war as they were at first proclaimed. But whatever the country does is right, and the cruel, haughty Spaniards will finally have to leave American soil.

IT is claimed that the best material of which to make fighting soldiers is found in boys from sixteen to twenty-one years of age. In the civil war were many captains under twenty-one years old. Gen. Grant was under forty when he entered the war. Stonewall Jackson had won immortal fame at the age of thirty-eight. Sheridan was a general at thirty. At twenty-nine Fitzhugh Lee was a Major General. Before he was thirty-three Alexander had conquered the world. Napolean became master of Egypt, crossed the Alps and fought the battle of Marengo at thirty.

THE desire to acquire additional territory that this country has developed since the beginning of the war with Spain is not prompted by a necessity for the extension of the public domain. Statistics show that the government has 600,000,000 acres of unoccupied land, enough to give each of its 73,000,000 inhabitants eight acres of land and still have 16,000,000 left. Something over half of this land is in Alaska, and will never be available for farming purposes, but the development of its vast mineral wealth will give remunerative employment to a great many thousands of people.

THE very successful voyage of the battle ship Oregon, from San Francisco around to Key West, proves that the idea that the great battle ships of the navy could not be relied on for a long run is a mistaken one. The notion that the discharging of the immense guns carried by the warships would soon destroy the vessels carrying them has also proven erroneous. So it seems that the navy of the United States has been constructed, so far, on correct principles, and the only trouble with it is its numerical weakness, but the brush with Spain will demonstrate the imperative necessity for a strong and extensive navy, and in a few years the United States will have the best naval outfit afloat.

IN his address to the soldiers of Kentucky just previous to their leaving Lexington for Chickamauga, Henry Watterson said:

"You are about to make history. It may prove that this will not be history merely repeating itself. For the first time since the Crusades war has been levied for no cause of a purely material kind, and with no selfish purpose. I scarcely like the shibboleth, "Remember the Maine.' It seems to me too revengeful to be quite worthy. I do not forget the circumstances to which it owes its origin. The scene of that awful tragedy under the shadow of Morro Castle is yet before my eyes. I can see, as I close them, the very faces of our murdered sailors with the ghastliness of death upon them. But I also see the myriads of starving men, women and children, ruthlessly sacrificed to feed the lust and to fill the pockets of professional plunderers masquerading in Cuba as Spanish officers and gentlemen. Behind them I see three centuries of wanton pillage, of frightful corruption, of cruelty unsurpassed in human annals. The time was long ago come for some great power to stretch forth its hand, to interpose its authority, and to say to the world, 'This barbarism shall proceed no farther.' What power except that of the United States was to do this? Cuba is our next door neighbor. Time out of mind these atrocities have been perpetrated before our eyes. Whilst Spain has required us to spend millions of money policing our coasts against filibusters, she has shown herself unable, or unwilling, in our protection, to police one of her own harbors. Was this to go on forever? You yourself are the answer to the question. You are going to fight a battle waged by man for man. You are going therefore in the name of that of Christ who died for men. You are going to fight a battle for the glory of God and your native land. You are going, therefore, under a flag which is the symbol at once for freedom and humanity, and having God's blessing upon it, has never yet known defeat. Look to it that you carry yourselves as soldiers equally of the cross and of the flag."

THE KING'S SUN HORSE

(From the German of J. WENZIG.)

THERE WAS once a land as black as night, for it had never seen the sun. The inhabitants would have fled, leaving the land to owls and bats, had not the king possessed a horse with a sun on its forehead. To enable his subjects to dwell in this dark and dreary region, the king caused his horse to be led daily through the country, for wherever this wonderful horse went the land on all sides was bathed in light; but when it had passed, thick darkness hurried back to resume its sway.

One day the sun horse disappeared, and darkness deeper than night covered the land. Discontent and terror spread among the people; want pressed them sore, for they could work at nothing, and soon dreadful disorder arose. The king grew alarmed, and to avert the threatened danger set forth his army to seek the sun horse.

Arrived at the borders of his kingdom, the king entered vast forests, the growth of thousands of years. Journeying through these forests with his army, the king came at length to a miserable hut. He entered and saw a middle aged man seated at a table, reading from a large book that lay open before him. When the king bowed, he rose and courteously returned the salutation. He was tall of stature, his features were thoughtful, and his glance piercing; indeed, his whole appearance proclaimed him a seer, and no ordinary man.

"I was reading of you," said he. "You seek the sun horse. Do not trouble further, you cannot regain it. Rely on me. I will find it for you. Return home with your army. You are needed there; only leave me one of your warriors as servant."

"So be it, oh, Unknown," replied the monarch. "Richly will I reward you if you restore my sun horse."

Next morning he departed with his servant. The way was long; they traveled through six countries, and still had further to go. Passing through the seventh country, they came to a stately palace; here they halted. Three valiant brothers ruled this land, and had as wives three sisters, whose mother was a wicked witch, named Striga. Then the seer addressed his servant:

"Remain here, whilst I enter the palace and ascertain if the kings are at home; they stole the horse. The youngest rides it."

Saying this, he changed himself into a green bird, flew to the window of the oldest queen, and fluttered and knocked with his beak against the glass, until she let him in. His great beauty and sweet, caressing ways delighted her, and she rejoiced like a child.

"What a pity my husband is absent. This beauteous bird would have pleased him. Still he returns to-night; he has only ridden forth to review a third part of the land.

Thus spake the queen, caressing the gentle bird.

Suddenly, old Striga entered the room, and, perceiving the bird, cried: "Strangle the accursed bird; he will cover you with blood!"

"Cover me with blood? Nonsense! See how innocent, how loving he is," replied the queen.

But Striga cried: "Deceptive innocence! Give him here instantly, that I may strangle him!"

She sprang forward, but the bird prudently changed into a man, and was out of the room and out of sight in a moment.

Taking again the form of a green bird, he flew to the window of the second queen, and knocked, until she opened it. Directly she let him in, he perched on her snow-white hand, and from thence flew to her shoulder, where he rested, looking confidingly into her eyes.

"Alas!" she cried, "alas! that my husband is from home. He would have delighted in you, beauteous bird. However, he will return to-morrow evening; he has but gone to review two-thirds of the kingdom."

At this moment Striga entered, crying: "Strangle that accursed thing—strangle it this moment; it will cover you with blood!"

"That is impossible, mother," replied the queen. "He is so gentle."

"The gentleness is feigned!" screamed Striga, trying to seize the bird. But the seer, as before, changed himself into a man, and disappeared.

After a time, the seer flew as a green bird to the window of the youngest queen. On her opening it, he perched on her white hand, and caressed her so prettily that she felt quite a childish delight in playing with him.

"It is a thousand pities that my lord is absent," cried the young queen in her joy. "This sweet little bird would have pleased him as much as it does me. Still, he is sure to return the evening after next, when he has reviewed the whole land."

But even as she spoke old Striga rushed excitedly into the room.

"Strangle that accursed bird!" she cried, whilst still in the doorway. "Strangle it, I say; it will cover you with blood!"

"Cover me with blood, mother? Impossible! Look. See how innocent, how beautiful it is," replied the queen. But Striga stretched forth her withered hands, exclaiming:

"Delusive innocence! Give it me this moment, that I may strangle it!"

But ere she could see him the seer changed into a man and vanished.

Having gained the required information, the seer returned to his servant, whom he ordered to purchase provisions for three days and then follow him to the forest. His servant having joined him, the two proceeded to the bridge over which the three kings must pass. Here they waited.

Towards evening the sound of a horse's feet was heard on the bridge. The eldest king was returning. In crossing, his horse stumbled over a beam.

"To the gallows with the good-for-nothing who made this bridge!" exclaimed the enraged king.

Then the seer sprang forth, and threw himself on the king, crying:

"How dare you curse an innocent man!"

They drew their swords, but the king was no match for the seer, and after a short struggle he fell lifeless to the ground. The seer bound the king on his horse, and sent the animal home with its dead master.

Then concealing himself beneath the bridge, he waited the coming of the second king. He came the next evening, and seeing the blood stains on the bridge, exclaimed:

"Someone has been slain here! What scoundrel has dared usurp my kingly office?"

"How dare you thus revile me?" cried the seer, throwing himself on the king, his drawn sword in his hand. "You are a child of death."

The king defended himself bravely, but in vain after a short struggle he fell by the sword of his mighty antagonist. The seer bound the corpse on the horse and sent the animal home; then, again concealing himself, he awaited the arrival of the third brother.

The third evening, at sunset, the youngest king approached the bridge, riding the sun horse, and rode fast, for he was late. Seeing the red blood on the ground [illegible] ed, exclaiming:

"Some wretch has presumed to snatch a victim from my kingly arm!"

Scarcely had he spoken, when the seer rushed at him with drawn sword.

"Good!" said the king, and drawing his sword, he defended himself manfully.

They fought long and furiously, until at length their swords broke. Then the seer spoke:

"With swords we can strive no longer. Now listen to me. We will become wheels, and roll down yonder mountain. The wheel that breaks is vanquished."

"Agreed. I will be a wagon wheel. Be you any other wheel you like," said the king.

"Not so," replied the cunning seer. "You can be any wheel you like, but I will be the wagon wheel."

The king consenting, they ascended the mountain. There they changed into wheels. But as they rolled down the steep incline the wagon wheel crashed against the other wheel, and broke it. The wagon wheel then became the seer, and cried, joyfully: "You are lost! The victory is mine!"

"Not so fast, my friend!" said the king, and he stood in his own shape before the seer. "You have only broken my finger. Now I have a suggestion. We will be flames, and the flame that consumes the other is the victor. I will be a red flame, you can be a white one."

"No, no," replied the seer; "you can be a white flame, I will be a red flame."

The king again consented, they placed themselves on the road to the bridge and began to burn each other pitilessly, but without result. Then a white-haired old beggar passed by. Seeing him, the white flame cried;

"Old man, bring water, and pour it on the red flame. I will give you a penny for your trouble."

But the red flame said: "I will give you a ducat if you pour water on this white flame."

The beggar naturally preferred the ducat to the penny; he brought water and poured it on the white flame. Thus the king died. The red flame now became the seer; he mounted the sun horse and, after thanking the beggar for his help, rode away, followed by his servant.

Deep was the sorrow in the palace at the death of the royal brothers. The walls were hung with black, and loud wailing resounded through the building. Striga moved restlessly from room to room. Suddenly she stopped, stamped her foot on the ground, shook her fist, and rolled her glittering eye; then, mounting a broomstick, she seized her three daughters under her arm, and, hey, presto! they were in the air.

The seer and his servant traveled fast, for they feared Striga's revenge. They passed through gloomy forests, crossed barren heaths, and had already accomplished a good part of their journey. But, alas! their provisions were exhausted. Hunger tormented them, and they could find nothing with which to still its pangs.

At length they came to a tree laden with apples of rosy hue, whose weight bore the wide-spreading branches to the ground.

"Heaven be praised!" exclaimed the servant, hastening to the tree.

"Stay!" cried the seer. "Pluck not the fruit!" Then drawing his sword he smote the tree, and forth gushed a stream of red blood. "It would have been death to have eaten those apples," said he; "that tree was the eldest queen. Her mother placed her there to hurry us out of the world!"

Though vexed at the disappointment, the servant was glad his life had been saved, and he followed the seer in the hope of soon finding other refreshment.

It was not long ere a stream of clear fresh water crossed their path.

"Well," said the servant, "if there is nothing solid to be had, we can at least drink, and cheer our hunger."

"Drink not!" exclaimed the seer, dismounting, and smiting the stream with his sword. Immediately the sparkling water was darkened by blood-red waves.

"That was the second queen," said the seer, "placed there by her mother for our destruction."

The servant thanked him for the timely warning, and, in spite of thirst and hunger, followed him without a murmur whither he would.

Presently they came to a bush covered with beautiful red roses that filled the air with their fragrance.

"What beautiful roses!" exclaimed the servant. "I will pluck some, and refresh myself with their sweet perfume."

"Gather not the roses!" said the seer, thrusting his sword deep into the stem of the tree. Immediately a stream of blood issued from the wound. "That was the youngest queen," continued the seer; "her mother placed her there, hoping to destroy us not [illegible] the beauty of the roses." [illegible] filled all

After journeying for a long [illegible] tend, the seer said: [illegible] ot a

"Our worst danger [illegible] r, for we have passed Striga's dominions. Still, great caution is necessary, for she will surely seek the aid of other powers." And even as he spoke, a boy came along carrying a thorny stick. Creeping behind the sun horse, he pricked it with his stick. The next moment the seer lay on the ground, and the boy, who had mounted the animal, was galloping away swift as an arrow. "Did I not say so?" exclaimed the seer.

"What boy was that?" asked the servant. "Who could have suspected such a trick? Let us try to overtake him."

"Nay," replied the seer, "I will overtake him alone. You must return to the borders of your own country. I shall be there to meet you."

Taking the form of an ordinary traveler, the seer hastened after the little magician, and soon came up with him.

"Whence came you, my friend?" said the magician, looking round.

"From the far distance."

"And whither go you?"

"I seek service."

"Then come with me and tend this horse. I will pay you well."

And thus the seer became the magician's servant.

One day the magician called his servant.

"Listen!" said he. "In the midst of yonder sea is an enormous poplar; on the top of this poplar is a castle; in this castle dwells a princess. This princess I desire for my wife. Many efforts have been made to gain possession of her, but in vain. Bring her to me, and I will reward you handsomely; fail, and it will be the worse for you."

"The lord commands, the servant must perform, or at least try," replied the seer.

Procuring a boat, he filled it with ribbons and stuffs of divers colors, and sailed, disguised as a merchant, to the castle on the summit of the poplar.

Arrived at the tree, he hung out the most beautiful of his wares, so that they could be seen from the castle. They soon attracted the attention of the princess.

"Go down to yonder boat," said she, addressing her handmaiden, "and see if you cannot purchase some of those beautiful ribbons and stuffs."

The maid obeyed.

"I sell nothing," said the merchant, "unless the princess comes herself to choose."

The maiden repeated the merchant's words. The princess came, turned over the beautiful merchandise, and chose and bargained, never noticing that the boat had been pushed off, and was sailing toward the shore. It was only when, her business ended, she turned to leave the boat, that she discovered what had happened.

"I know where we are going," said she. "You are taking me to the wicked magician. Now may Heaven have mercy on me!"

When the seer found the princess did not wish to marry the magician, he conversed with her softly, and said that if she would ascertain wherein the magician's strength lay, and confide the secret to him, he would help her to obtain her liberty.

When the seer returned with the princess the magician was delighted, and when she appeared to return his love, he was beside himself with joy. He would have given her everything, done anything to please her. What wonder, then, that he confided to her the secret of his great strength.

"In yonder forest," said he, "stands a great tree. Beneath this tree a stag feeds, in this stag is a duck, in the duck a golden egg, and in the egg is my strength, for there, my love, is my heart."

The princess at once repeated this secret to the seer.

Then the seer took bow and arrow, hastened to the forest, and found the tree with the stag feeding beneath. He shot an arrow, and the stag fell to the earth. Springing forward he took the duck out of the stag, and the egg out of the duck. He broke the egg, and the magician's strength was gone forever; it had passed to the seer, leaving at once the mighty magician weak and helpless as a child. Then, having freed the princess, the seer mounted the sun horse and hastened with it to the king to whom it belonged.

He had to travel over a great part of the world ere he reached the borders of the dark kingdom and met the servant he had sent on before him. As he crossed the borders the rays from the sun horse shone forth, illuminating the land that had so long been veiled in impenetrable gloom, and rejoicing the hearts of the distressed inhabitants. Everything lived again; the fields laughed in their spring dress, and the people hastened from all parts to thank their kind benefactor. The king knew not how to reward him, but offered him half of his kingdom. But the seer refused.

"I desire no reward," said he, "least of all do I desire the half of your kingdom. Be you king and reign, as is meet. I will return to my solitary hut."—Standard Magazine.

FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.

How Republican Financiers Sacrifice the People of "Business Interests."

The present secretary of the treasury, Lyman Gage, is one of the most dangerous men that ever floated on the surface of doubtful and disturbed politics. He is dangerous because he is both ignorant and unscrupulous. His ignorance of the laws and history of the country by which he is tolerated is so dense that he declared, in a recent speech, that the gold standard was established by a democratic administration in 1834, when every schoolboy knows, or ought to know, that the famous enactment of that year was the change of ratio from 15½ to sixteen to one. The sole object of this act, as explained by Benton, in his speeches and writings, was to establish bimetallism. It was a Benton-democratic law, and it accomplished its purpose, as explained in previous papers of this series. It gave us nearly 30 years of actual and practical bimetallism, and the equal and free circulation of both gold and silver; and that was the only period in the whole history of our government when the two money metals worked side by side, in doing the business of the country. Neither before nor since the beginning and ending of that era of unequaled national prosperity and happiness have the people enjoyed the privileges and benefits of the double standard. Rising from the lower levels of the mass of common people, by the fortuitous windings of doubtful circumstances, and the special privileges of plutocratic legislation, the secretary now looks down with undisguised contempt on the stem that produced him. He never speaks of the common people without a sneer at their supposed ignorance and incapacity for self-government. Those who may take the trouble to examine his portraits will find indelibly stamped on his face the smirk of the self-satisfied hypocrite and the sardonic smile of the smooth-poley man. Taking Hamilton as his model, he has neither the sense nor the education to imitate the great founder of the monocratic party.

This dangerous creature of circumstances, this soulless and cold-blooded worshiper of the almighty dollar, is now in a position to do his country infinite harm, and even is show that he does not hesitate to use his opportunities. The war now in progress between the United States and Spain ought to be a cash war. There is no reason under the sun, or the necessities of this government, present or prospective, for the increase of our bonded debt. The last treasury statement, issued the first of the month, shows an excess of $200,000,000 of gold in the treasury, including the unnecessary and dangerous $100,000,000 of reserve. This is idle money, and idle money, like idle men, is always dangerous. Money that is hoarded and not allowed to go into circulation is a pernicious menace to the liberties of the people. It had better not be in existence. The most extravagant estimate of the expense of the war yet published places the amount at $1,000,000 per day. We have, therefore, now in the treasury, money enough to prosecute the war for nearly seven months. In addition to this, the government has an unused and idle seigniorage in silver of more than $42,000,000, and the capacity to safely and beneficially absorb $1,000,000,000 of greenbacks if necessary.

Yet, in spite of these facts, the secretary of the treasury proposes to issue $500,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds, and the plutocratic press, obeying the commands of its masters, approves the traitorous proposition, on the ground that it is necessary to sustain the credit of the government. It is a new thing in political economy when a government can strengthen its credit by borrowing money when it has a useless surplus on hand. How long would an individual pursuing a similar course, retain the confidence of his neighbors or escape bankruptcy? The subservient press goes to the length of accusing such sturdy patriots and defenders of the people's rights as Richard P. Bland and those who support him, of "copperheadism" and disloyalty because they dare to raise their voice against this bond conspiracy. The old silly and frazzled cant of a 50-cent dollar is also thrown in their teeth, and they are accused of wanting to pay the volunteers in depreciated money. The people who make such stupid accusations mistake the spirit, and cast reflections upon the intelligence of the splendid young men who are volunteering to fight the battles of this war. They are not enlisting for $13 a month. Every one of them has left a good position and risked life, health and happiness, home, love and ambition—everything that is dear to humanity, to fight the grandest and most unselfish war that the nations of the earth have witnessed. They have staked all in the game of battle to make strangers and aliens free; to protect virtuous womanhood; to put bread into the months of helpless and starving fellow creatures. Little do these chivalrous heroes of our own time and generation care for the pitiful stipend that the government pays them for their services; and none but the basest and most sordid minds could think of suggesting such a proposition.

And after the war is over, its purposes accomplished, the boon of liberty and the right to live guaranteed to a people unallied to us by the ties of blood or political associations, these unselfish champions of justice and right will be required to return to the plow, the desk and the workshop and spend the remainder of their lives in slavish labor to pay interest to greedy bondholders who are too cowardly to risk their own lives in front of Spanish guns. This is a true picture of the situation!

The plutocratic classes cared nothing for the destruction of our ships, navies to our citizens, and the murder and outrage of hundreds of thousands of helpless human beings. They were as nothing in comparison to the safety of "business interests." It is the old story of slavery through the agency of debt; and the scheme of villainy comes down to us in an unknown chain from the early colonial period. Thus wrote Jefferson on the line of this subject: "Virginia certainly owed £2,000,000 to Great Britain at the conclusion of the war. Some have conjectured the debt as high as £3,000,000. I think that state owed nearly as much as all the rest put together. This is to be ascribed to peculiarities in the tobacco trade. The advantage made by the British merchants, on the tobacco consigned to them were so enormous that they spared no means of increasing these consignments. A powerful engine for this purpose was the means of giving good prices and credit to the planter, till they got him more emersed in debt than he could pay, without selling his lands or his slaves. They then reduced the prices given him for his tobacco, so that let his shipments be ever so great, and his demand for necessaries ever so economical, they never permitted him to clear of his debt. These debts had become hereditary from father to son, for many generations, so that the planters were a species of property, annexed to certain mercantile houses in London." And our modern plutocrats propose to make of the heroes of this Spanish war a species of property, annexed to the Hannas, the Gages and the rest of their vulture crew. This is their game.—W. S. Bryan, in Journal of Agriculture.

PATRIOT BRYAN.

In spite of the fact that William J. Brynn promptly offered his services to the government when war was declared, the republican press has been bitter in its attacks because he has not entered the military service. President McKinley ignored Bryan's offer, as might have been expected, and appointed a large number of rich nobodies to military positions. Of course, a republican administration would naturally do all it could to discredit the democrat who secured 6,500,000 votes at the last presidential election. Now William J. Bryan has begun active work recruiting a regiment of soldiers in Nebraska, which he will command, and it is understood that he will ask to be sent to the front, where he and his regiment can engage in active service. It goes without saying that Bryan's motives will be maligned by the administration press. Doubtless every effort will be made to keep Bryan out of the army. As long as he waited for an acceptance of his services the administration organs jibed at his delay and urged him to go to the front. Now that he has become convinced that he can expect no recognition from McKinley as a patriotic citizen, and has entered upon the independent work of raising a regiment, he will be abused worse than ever. There is very little patriotism and a vast deal of politics in the republican conduct of war. The administration wanted peace even at the expense of dishonor, and it was forced into taking a manly stand by the loyal and patriotic people. If the republicans can secure political capital out of war they will consider that they have made some gain, but simply to preserve the honor of the nation, to make Cuba free and to revenge the destruction of the Maine would be considered small reward by them.

FALLING PRICES.

A Goldbug Theory That Lacks Anything Like Reasonable Backing.

The gold men say that a fall of prices harms no one, because, if the producer has to sell more cheaply, he can also buy more cheaply, and thus keep even. That sounds plausible, but in practice it doesn't work. If everybody had the same amount of money, everything fell in the same ratio and everyone occupied precisely the same position in all aspects, then the policy would hold good. But if a man's wealth be entirely in the form of money and prices fall one-half, it makes him, in effect, just twice as rich; and when such a change of relation takes place somebody must have sustained a loss. If one man gets more than his share others must have less. It is a singular circumstance that the gold men will persistently claim that a fall of prices will do no harm because the losses of the sale are offset by the gains on the purchases, and at the same time declaring that a rise of prices is going to work dire ruin. They ought to be able to see that the rule which they invoke applies just as well to a case of rising prices as of falling. If a person sustains a loss by being compelled to pay more for what he buys, it would seem as if he should be able to keep even by getting higher prices for what he sells.

MAMMOTH MAGNETS.

The Important Naval Departure Which Great Britain Is About to Undertake.

Among the latest propositions of naval experts is one looking to the recovery of sunken warships by means of large magnets. After exhausting all other means of recovering the magnificent battleship Victoria Great Britain has decided to make the attempt with big magnets. The Victoria went down in collision with the Camperdown in the summer of 1893 off the Bay of Tunis. She sank in 450 feet of water, too far under the surface for hydraulic pressure to avail, and also too far under for the best divers to get to her. But Britain is determined to get the ship afloat once more if science can produce this result. The plans as formulated are as follows:

Above the spot where the Victoria is known to be will be moored a fleet of wrecking pontoons. Monster magnets, shaped in the form of a horseshoe, will be let down from the sides of the pontoons and sunk until the attraction of the steel sides of the Victoria will draw them to the ship, to be attached in a strong embrace by the mysterious force that every boy has seen exerted on a small scale.

On the estimate made by the inventors of the scheme it is believed that the lifting capacity of each magnet will be not less than 100 tons, and as the weight of the wreck is at least 7,000 tons it is estimated that upward of 70 magnets will be required.

Only when the magnets have been fixed can the work of raising the wreck be begun. Each pontoon will be furnished with hydraulic rams and dynamo machines. Each lifting cable will be attached to the lifting pontoon by means of a sheave on the head of a hydraulic lifting ram having a stroke of 12 feet, which would give an effective lift of 24 feet. The hydraulic cylinders will be connected with each other, a balancing accumulator regulating the amount of pressure.

By this means it is proposed to raise the vessel 24 feet at a time until she can be towed into shallow water and then beached.

On a small scale a test of the efficacy of raising boats by this particular method has already been made. Into a depth of water that represented comparatively with the size of the model boat the depth of the Mediterranean were lowered a number of magnets of relative power. The experiment was entirely successful.

One objection raised by naval experts has yet to be overcome by the actual experiment. It has been suggested that the sides of the Victoria have long been incrusted by barnacles and other matter which would almost destroy the magnetic attraction of steel to steel. The electric experts, however, declare that the water of the Mediterranean is comparatively clean and pure and that the magnets would in all probability attract themselves readily to the steel sides of the ship.

There is little doubt that the experiment will be tried. The Victoria cost $3,000,000. The small hole in her sides can readily be repaired. The cost of raising the ship will not exceed $500,000, and if the test proves successful the British government in particular and science generally will be the gainers.—Chicago Chronicle.

English Nurses in Bombay.

To-day, for the first time in his memory, the Englishman in Bombay, in taking his morning ride, meets English ladies on their way home from a night's nursing duty, under the escort of an armed guard. We are sure that we will have many with us when we say that on the day on which an Englishwoman who has come out to nurse the poor of Bombay has to pass through the streets behind a loader rifle her mission should be brought to an abrupt end. Now that the violence of the people whom they have come to tend and to care for has come in as a supplement to the risks of pestilence, and the strain of labor and night watching, it seems to us that the time has come to tell the poor of Bombay that English nurses will no longer thrust themselves upon their indulgence.—Bombay Advocate.

DIVIDING THE BURDEN.

People of Cities and Towns Should Bear Their Share of the Cost of Improving Roads.

In the states in which a system of state-aid has been inaugurated the urban resident bears his share of the expense of improving and maintaining the highways, instead of leaving them, as heretofore, to be cared for by the rural population. Under the old theory that the maintenance and care of the roads should depend wholly on the districts through which they passed, great injustice was done many persons whose interest in the roads was less than that of others who bore no expense. To remove this injustice and provide an equable system is the purpose of the state-aid.

Speaking on this subject recently, Gen. Stone said that the farmers of

A MODEL HIGHWAY.

Maine own one-fifth of the property of the state, and that one-fifth of the property has paid the entire expense of building and maintaining the roads of the state, which are just as necessary to the people who live in towns, and the people of other occupations than farming, as they are to the farmer. Concerning New York, he said that there the farmers own only one-fourteenth of the property of the state, and that every farmer has been making roads for 13 other men to travel on, and he is getting tired of doing it. He is now about to stop it, and he finds the people of the cities and large towns, the manufacturing people and the commercial people, ready to bear their share of the expense of improving the country roads. The only drawback is that the farmers themselves have been afraid to let any change be made in the road laws of the country, for they imagined that the people of the cities design to impose heavier burdens on them, instead of being ready to help them carry existing ones.

By degrees all classes of the people will begin to better understand each other on the subject and will get closer together. It was not strange, at first, that country people should be suspicious of city people who took the trouble to tell them how much they would be benefited by better roads—it was natural for them to think that such philanthropy was not wholly disinterested. But as it becomes daily more evident that all classes, trades and occupations will reap the advantages resulting from improving the highways, that the ultimate burden will not be increased and that all are ready to share it, the movement will acquire an impetus that will insure its future success.—Good Roads.

The Color Question Again.

Butter should be colored to suit the person for whom it is intended. The general market demands that butter should have a color, the year round, about like that of grass butter in June. Doubtless any of the standard butter colors are good. The coloring matter should be put in the cream after it is all ready for the churn. When the butter will be nearly white if not colored as is often the case in winter, about a teaspoonful of color is usually needed for eight pounds of butter. In summer, in times of drought and in the fall, when cows are partly on dry feed, some coloring may be needed, but very little. One will soon learn by experience how much to use. It is well to be cautious, as it is better to have too little color than too much. — Dakota Field and Farm.

Avoid Raising Plug Horses.

Never in the history of horse raising was there a wider difference between plugs and good horses. Farmers must give as much thought to the selection of both dam and sire as they do in the breeding of cattle and other live stock. A coach horse that will bring $300 is as easily raised as a plug that will bring but $45. Such a horse is useful on the farm until the time when he is ready for the market, and can be used both to the plow and on the wagon. In case he lacks the style or action necessary to bring a fancy price, he is still a general purpose horse and will bring a price that will be profitable to the raiser.—A. B. Clark, St. Louis Dealer.

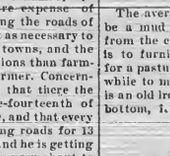
FEEDING THE CALVES.

Unless They Make a Good Growth During the First Summer They Will Not Amount to Much.

The entire future of the animal usually depends on its first summer. This is true of all farm stock and especially so of the calves. Unless they can be made to make a good growth the first summer they will never make as good animals as they might and should, for every man should try to do the best he possibly can with his stock and crops.

The new-born calf should be allowed to get his first feed from his dam's udder, as the accumulated milk in that organ is in just the proper condition for the first few days. After about three days the milk assumes its natural condition as it becomes fit for use, when the calf should be removed from its dam, and after that it usually has only skim milk for its sole diet until it learns to eat grass. The calf that has plenty of skim milk gets along pretty well, but as a rule there are other uses for this on the farm, and it is more profitable to feed the milk to something else and furnish the calf with a substitute.



Fortunately it is possible to furnish a substitute for skim milk on which the calf will thrive wonderfully with but little milk added to his ration. Have some oats ground into a fine meal and feed the calf oatmeal gruel. This will make him grow wonderfully, and he will soon learn to like it better than any other kind of feed. The oatmeal should be sifted to free it from hulls and two tablespoonfuls will be about the proper amount to begin with. Cook this thoroughly in two quarts of water and then mix the gruel with skim milk, which will bring the heat down to the proper point for feeding.

Gradually add a little more oatmeal and reduce the quantity of milk, and soon the milk may be dispensed with altogether. Always give calves an opportunity to get grass to eat and they will soon learn to pick it. Oil meal is sometimes recommended for calves, but it is no improvement over the oatmeal gruel. —Farmers' Voice.

THE PASTURE SPRING.

How to Have a Supply of Pure Water for the Stock on Hand All Through the Season.

The average pasture spring is apt to be a mud hole because not protected from the cattle's feet. Where a spring is to furnish the sole supply of water for a pasture year after year, it is worth while to make the most of it. If there is an old iron kettle with a break in the bottom, it can be utilized after the fashion shown in the cut, provided the source of the spring is a little higher than the point where it issues from the ground. With rough stones and cement build a water-tight wall about the spring, setting the rocks well down into the ground. Set the kettle with the opening in the bottom so that the water will rise to its top. A pure supply will thus always be at hand for the stock and a permanent improvement made to the pasture.—Orange Judd Farmer.

GARDEN AND ORCHARD.

Keep the weeds down in the early garden.

The quality of fruit is much improved by severe trimming.

Give a thorough preparation before and cultivation after plantlug.

In the garden and small fruit plat, use a line to make the rows straight.

Remember that one acre well tended is worth half a dozen neglected.

Long, straight rows in the garden are easily cultivated and kept free from weeds.

Give currants plenty of room and good cultivation. Use white hellebore to keep off the worms.

There is danger of injury to plants by allowing a heavy mulch to remain on too late in the spring.

Propagation by root cuttings is practicable and easy with plums, cherries and all stone fruits.

By keeping the soil firm and mellow you make the plant food available so it can be used by the plants.

It is not too late yet to remove all small, imperfect canes and dead branches from fruit plants.

Maturing fruit tends to exhaust a tree; hence the necessity of feeding bearing trees by fertilizing the ground.

Dwarf pear trees are much inclined to over-bear, and over-bearing is a prolific cause of poor fruit.—St. Louis Republic.

Miss Rella C. Harber, of Trenton, Mo., state organizer for the Good Roads and Public Improvement association, has had such great success with her work that the association is more than pleased with her. Miss Harber is a remarkable woman. President Cleveland appointed Miss Harber's father, the late Judge T. B. Harber, postmaster of Trenton. Miss Harber was commissioned deputy, and succeeded to the postmastership when the judge died in 1896. Miss Harber resigned in 1897 and went to St. Louis, where she was employed in the good roads office. Since then she has been promoted to her present position, and has organized 15 societies, all of which are steadily increasing in membership.

UNFORTUNATE COLORS.

Jaundiced Man with Red Necktie Is Taken for a Spaniard and Has a Narrow Escape.

The man with the yellow jaundice leaned up against the drug store at the corner of Harrison and Halsted street and wiped the perspiration from his forehead. He was badly out of breath and he consequently talked rather spasmodically to his friend.

"I tell you, I've had a mighty narrow escape," he gasped.

"Why, how's that?" asked his companion. "They purty near mobbed me just now down here on Blue Island avenoo."

"Mobbed you? Why, what in the deuce are you talkin' about?"

"That's right. That's what they purty near did. They just liked to got my pelt. I tell you an' I hadn't done a thing, either.

"What did they have ago in you?"

"You see th' red necktie I got on? Well, that was it. 'Twas one of the whole trouble. I was goin' down Blue Island when I came to a crowd in front of a saloon talkin' w[illegible] stopped to hear what the latest was. [illegible]ddin' a thing when some one sings out: 'Look at dat Spaniard right here in the crowd.' Everybody turns on me an' a brick just [illegible]zes my ear. I says: 'I ain't no Spaniard. What you talkin' about?' 'You bet he is,' says the Spanish flag on 'im right now.' Yells another. But I didn't catch on yet. 'That's right,' shouts another man, 'the yaller's on his face and the red's in his necktie. Lynch him

Miss Mary Riley has made a very large United States flag which will be erected Decoration day.

On going by W. M. Baisly's the other day I noticed three hoes on the fence. Now, what does he want with three hoes, when there are only two men to use them? Ah! a bright idea, he is teaching Snukes to hoe.

One afternoon, last week, Ira Hodge's wife harnessed Ira to the plow and plowed the garden. She was more successful than Sut Lovingood, as she did not get into a hornets' nest, and from appearances Ira made a pretty good horse.

Bullittsville.

Mrs. Kirtley's school will close this week, and she proposes to give the scholars an outing on Thursday in a fishing party on Woolper.

A vacuum is left in our social circle by the absence of Miss Bessie Cropper, who left Wednesday on a visit to her cousin, Mrs. Dr. Jasper in Richmond. Miss Bessie's absence always has a depressing effect upon the spirits of her numerous admirers, who long for one alluring smile from her sweet coral mouth and her bright charming eyes.

On the first Saturday in June the Mount Pleasant Grange will entertain the Golden Grange from Union in the Christian church at Bullittsville. A secret session of the Grange will be held in the forenoon. At 1 p. m., the doors will be thrown open to the public and an open session will be held. To which everybody is invited. The principal subject to be discussed in the open session will be, "What has the Grange done for the agricultural classes.

The latest sensation we have to report is the return to society of one of our old bachelors, who retired about a quarter of a century ago. He made his debut No. 2 at the Mt. Pleasant Baptist church a few Sunday's ago in a brand new buggy, roan gelding, new harness and very gaudy fly-net. He had his handsome and well preserved person clothed in a neat fitting cutaway, tan shoes and black derby. But the most sensational feature in the case was the presence of a very handsome young lady in the buggy with him. He was the lion of the day—the ladies flocked around him and made so much over him that one of his friends suggested that he should carry salt in his pockets to prevent his being spoiled.

Another of Bullittsville's commendable enterprises is an art class taught by Miss Mamie Gedge, of Covington. She is teaching the art of embroidery which consists in ornamentation by raised figures of needlework executed in colored silks. This is a very ancient art. Homer refers to it as the occupation of Helen and Andromache. Judging from the work of some of her pupils of a former class, Miss Gedge is fully conversant with the art she is undertaking to teach. It was not her fault that she failed to meet with her class last Thursday; she had made an engagement with the 'bus driver to wait for her in Ludlow Wednesday evening until half past 3 o'clock, Sim thinking any other day would suit her as well, hurried away at a quarter past three.

The notice given in your paper last week of the Strawberry Supper and Lawn Fete to be given by the Ladies' Aid Society of Bullittsburg, failed to do justice to the entertainment the ladies propose to give. They propose, on the afternoon and evening of June 3d, between the hours of 4 and 11 o'clock, at the handsome home of Mr. and Mrs. Legrand Gaines, to give an entertainment that all who will be so fortunate in being present will rejoice that it was their privilege to do so. They will be permitted to feast on strawberries, ice-cream and cakes at will. The Bullittsville orchestra with its collection of instruments of varied compass and quality of tone will favor the guests with a concerted instrumental music that will repay them for the 25 cents their presence will cost them. In addition to this they will be favored with vocal music, consisting of solos, duets, quartets and choruses. They will also be entertained during the evening with a dramatic performance. I am not advised as to who will constitute the dramatis personae nor as to the character of the plays—all of this you will be permitted to enjoy for the fourth part of a dollar.

Walton.

Walton May 30.—The ladies of the town are very indignant at the communication sent in from this place last week, in regard to "the ladies running after the men," as your correspondent was ungracious enough to say of them. It is true that the ladies gathered along the side of the Southern railway to see the soldiers as they were being transported to the South. They also showered bouquets of flowers upon the passing trains, but as to "running after the men," such a thought never entered their minds. Their motive was simply to show the respect and admiration for the brave men who were going to fight for the honor of our nation, and cheer them on to what we hope may be a glorious victory.

Quite a number from this place were at Independence on Decoration day.

The party given at Mr. Ira Percival's was well attended, and all report a good time.

The public school will close to-morrow, Thursday, with a flag raising. The school children will take part in the exercises.

The flag raising at the depot, last Saturday afternoon, was a success. S. W. Adams was the orator of the occasion. The Christian Endeavor Society had a lunch on the ground for the benefit of the Baptist church, and the ladies saw that all were provided with refreshments.

Tom Burkett wants the owner of a large Thiuriud boar that strayed into Union and to his premises, several weeks since, to come and get it and pay for this advertisement and the hog's keep.

The Blade Club held a meeting at 1005 next door to "Elm Hole," one day last week, and the agricultural editor addressed the club on the question of Mark Hanna's origin and introduction into American politics and the downfall of political respectability from now on and forever.

Burkett brothers were on the road with a strong delegation of strong hustlers and made dirt fly the last few days. We will go around the circle and see how George is doing the job and if it is not up to the standard, will tell Mr. Emily Roouse on him and he can fix him up in short order.

Golden Grange will give an entertainment on the evening of June 11th, beginning at 8 o'clock. Refreshments, consisting of ice cream and strawberries will be served at 5c per plate; a good musical and literary program will be arranged for the evening. All are cordially invited. Admission, 10 cents.

There seems to be a fair prospect for the farmers in this section, as wheat was never more promising, oats look well and corn is doing not the moderate crop of apples are called all reaches are beginning to bear tends is already and blackberries [illegible] a 35, raspberries, cherries, strawberries and all kinds of berries are doing well; tobacco is a good price; hogs are in demand and horses are out of sight; in fact man has good cattle and mules he's in it and no mistake. So it is fortune seems to be smiling on the farmer and to our feeble vision and dull understauding, there seems a fair chance for them to prosper until the war is over at least, and the gold standard financiers can renew their grip and get a new squeeze on the real estate values.

Henry Quick had a close call for his life last Thursday evening. The following are the particulars as near as we could get them: He was doing some work in his aunt's pasture field near the cliffs on Elijah's creek, when his dog attracted his attention by loud barking some little distance from him. Thinking the dog had some varmint treed he went to his assistance, when to his great surprise he found what he thinks was an Anaconda snake in the act of swallowing a yearling calf; at his approach the snake dropped the calf and attempted to swallow Henry, and from what he says would have succeeded had he not happened to have an ax in his hand with which he gave it an under curve blow that settled his snakeship As near as he can remember it measured 15 feet in length minus the head part, which his dog made off with—that he did not measure. The conflict lasted half an hour and was the most exciting experience of his life.

The suit of Cleorn S. Myers vs. M. C. Norman, &c., was reversed in the Court of Appeals, last week. This suit grew out of the settlement of the late Sam'l Lindsay, who sold drugs in Florence for many years. The case of Morrow vs. Southern News Co., was affirmed.

F Ridddell is having the residence occupied by Judge Roberts overhauled. The building is an ancient frame, and the timbers used for sleepers under the lower floors are sound and about 12 inches in diameter. Old architicts had but slight conception of the real strength of timbers.

Next Monday is County Court day, and those who desire to take action in regard to the great tobacco trust that is being organized in this country, should meet in the court house and appoint delegates to the State Convention. This is a matter in which all tobacco producers are interested, but they can accomplish nothing unless they unite in an effort.

Judge Roberts was out hunting, two days, last week, and made the following scores: First day—1 squirrel, 1 raccoon, 1 black snake. Second day—3 squirrels, 1 black snake. This justifies the conclusion that his fresh meat bill for the past week was very considerably below the average.

Atty. Castleman has removed the capillary growth that has ornamented his upper lip for many years. It is charged that he anticipates making a hand at several ice cream and strawberry festivals, this spring, and thought a smooth shaven person enjoyed many advantages on such occasions.

C. N. Cropper, of Louisville, was in town yesterday. He is buying cavalry horses for the government, and if he does not buy all he wants this week, he will be in Burlington next Monday, so if you have a good horse you desire to sell you may find Mr. Cropper here next Monday. So bring your horse to town that day.

Chas. Stephens' little boy, between seven and eight years old, fell out of a cherry tree, last Thursday morning, and was unconscious when found. The parents thought that he was dead, and sent a messenger for Dr. Furnish, who found the child coming around all right when he arrived. The doctor made a close examination, but failed to find any injuries of consequence.

At the close of the morning services at the Bellevue Baptist Church, last Sunday, a splendid dinner was spread in the pleasant maple grove in the yard, and the large crowd was fed most sumptuously. The dinner was the beginning of the Odd-Fellows' part of the programme, which cousumed the remainder of the day.

J. H. Clore, of the Limaburg neighborhood, sent to each of several of the best farmers in Burlington, last week, an ear of copper-colored seed corn, which produces seven or eight ears to the stalk. To secure the seed of this corn Mr. Clore paid $3 for 100 grains a year or so ago. It is said the original seed was discovered a few years ago beneath the ground where it is supposed to have been deposited by Indians many thousand years ago.

Rev. G. W. Hill, of Williamstown, lectured on Odd-Fellowship at the Baptist church in Bellevue, last Sunday afternoon, to an audience that packed the house. His lecture, besides an expolition of the objects of the order, was an uncontrovertable answer to the many groundless objections to the organization. The lecture was delivered at the request of the local lodge, and its members were delighted with manner in which Bro. Hill handled his subject.

To the taxpayers of Boone county: If you want your taxes lowered demand a chance to vote for the old constitution which gives you back your privilege to say whether a tax shall be levied on you or not. If you want your tax raised, let the new constitution stand, which gives a few officers the power to say whether you shall pay a tax or not, and which tends to increase the corruption of our State.

A TAXPAYER.

The following is from last week's Hebron communicatiou, which reached the office one day too late for publication: "Married, Wednesday, May 18, 1898, at the Lutheran Parsouage, by Rev. Max Lentz, Mr. John Manniug to Miss Artie Quick. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Will Graves. The bridal party was invited to the home of Mr. Frank Hoseman, where they were met by a number of friends, congratulations and music. A dainty supper was enjoyed by all. Quite a number of useful presents were received by the bride and groom with the best wishes of their loving friends."

In the latter part of the fifth month, Benjamin, whose surname is Menifee, jourueyed from the land of Grant into the land of Boone, and stopped at the chief city thereof. When in the land of Boone Benjamin went before John, whose other name is Lassing and who is the chief counsel for all the land of Boone, and he spake unto John many things of and concerning their brethren in the land of Grant, and the messages Benjamin did bear were exceedingly pleasing to John, and much did he expect to be profitted thereby. Beujamin sojourn in the land of Boone was brief because of his people of the town called Crittenden being much disturbed by reason of the absence of Benjamin their legal comforter.

The following is what Mr. W. J. Rouse told his people through his paper, the Monroe City (Mo.) Democrat, upon reaching home after his recent visit to this county: "After spending a few hours in the Queen City we journeyed on toward our 'Old Kentucky Home' about 15 miles distant from Cincinnati. From April 30th to May 16th the time was spent in seeing old friends and the scenes of our early childhood. The people extended the old time southern hospitality to all and it is quite a pleasure to be among them. The country is considerably broken but very productive and has an excellent market for all farm products. Owing to rains farm work is late. Wheat, oats, and grass look well; but little corn is up. Nearly every farmer keeps sheep as lambs sell at a good price. This year the price is much lower than usual."

A KILLING AT HAMILTON.

Col. Carrier, who was a terror in the Big Bone neighborhood, was killed last Saturday evening by having his skull crusbed by a rock thrown by Kite Story. The trouble that resulted in Carrier's death was caused by a game of cards in which the parties were engaged in the bushes on the river near Hamilton, Esq. B. H. Ryle, of Rabbit Hash, and the following jury, held the inquest Sunday morning: R. W. Alien, John Walsh, James Taylor, A. L. Miller, J. P. Hamilton, J. R. Briggs. The following is the substance of the testimony given at the inquest.

J. G. Finnell—Was present when the dispute over a game of cards in the bushes was begun by Carrier and Joe Story; saw Joe Story throw a club that struck Carrier on the stomach; saw a rock hit Carrier, when he fell; to the best of my knowledge Kite Story threw the rock; saw Carrier have a small knife; Story had a knife also; heard no threats; the men were about 10 feet apart when the rock was thrown and I was about 15 feet distant.

Geo. McIntire—Saw Carrier and Joe Story draw their knives; I started home; they came around toward me; I heard a lick and heard Carrier fall, but could not see him on account of some willow bushes; heard no threats made; saw a rock thrown by Joe Story; this happened Saturday about sundown, May 28, down below Huff's stable at Hamilton, in Boone county Ky.

Charles Robinson—Saw the dispute; Carrier and Joe Story each had a knife—Joe Story had a club; they proposed to go to an open space and fight a fair fight. When they got there Joe said he wouldn't fight that way and went on up the hill and got a rock, and meeting Carrier he threw the rock at him; Carrier dodged it and then went towards Joe with his knife, and Joe hit him with a club, and Carrier went on after him and Joe kept getting away. After the club was thrown, Carrier moved about 15 feet before the rock hit him and knocked him down; Joe did not throw the rock that knocked Carrier down; the rock came from Kite Story and there was no one near him at the time the rock was thrown, that I saw. Carrier lived about five minutes after he was struck.

The coroner returned the names of several other witnesses but no other testimoney. The jury returned the following verdict:

"We, the jury, find that the body now lying before us is that of Colonel Carrier, and that said Carrier came to his death by a rock thrown by Kite Story that hit Colonel Carrier just below the right ear."

Kite Story is 19 years old, and is a son of Johnson A. Story, of the Hamilton neighborhood. His father was in town Monday and said he would return in a few days and appear for trial.

Mux, Ward and Late, three colored men, will be before Judge Roberts, to day, charged with a breach of the peace. They came from Cincinnati Sunday afternoon, and besides being very noisy, they engaged in pistol practice, the dogs along the roads being their targets.

Mr. and Mrs. De Wolf Hopper have been divorced, and De Wolf is now a grass Hopper.

So many streets are being named for Admiral Dewey that when he returns he will be at home in almost every city in the union.

Everybody now knows the location of Rabia, Subig bay, San Juan and Cape St. Vincent. The American promises henceforth to be deeply versed in geography.

An international congress of medical women will be held in London this year. This is remarkable, considering the fact that it is only about 30 years since the fair sex broke into the medical profession.

The term "infantry" soldier originated with the Spanish and was first applied to the military force employed by an infante, or young prince of Spain, to rescue his father from the Moors.

The queen of Greece is the only woman admiral in the world. She holds this rank in the Russian navy, an honorary appointment conferred upon her by the late czar, because her father held the rank of high admiral.

Not long ago the king of Siam is said to have given to an Italian artist the Grand Cross of the Siamese Crown, saying: "That cross will entitle you to marry 12 wives. It is a distinction I seldom confer: I hope you will make good use of it."

There are at present in the United States senate 12 senators who served in the union army and 12 who served in the confederate army. There are 57 representatives who served in the union army and 20 who are ex-confederates.

The extent of American interests in Cuba may be judged from the fact that a company of Pennsylvanians have $6,000,000 invested in iron and manganese mines near Santiago. Several short railroads running out of the town were built by American capital.

Victims of "rose fever," "hay fever" and "ragweed fever," will be interested to learn that a German doctor has added "bean fever" to the list of these popular summer epidemics. His discovery has been christened "Favismus," and the cure for the disease is to beware of bean fields.

The doctors seem to be united on the point that cigarette smoking is responsible for most of the rejections of milltiamen who have come up recently for examination as applicants to enter the regular army. They ought to have included the cocktail habit and lack of exercise. The three combined would wreck a Sandow in six months.

The present generation has never witnessed such an outpouring of the sentiment of patriotism as the war with Spain has evoked. Never before have the national colors been so profusely, so universally displayed in city, town and village. Never before has the younger generation of men been so profoundly stirred by allusions to the country's cause.

A correspondent having asked where are all the girl violinists who started out in the profession with such high promises ten years ago, the Chatterer of the Boston Herald replies: "Well, we don't know where all of them are, but the best ones have married, and the fiddle and bow are hung up until the children are old enough to be taught to play as well as their mammas once did."

A New York detective says there are probably at least 1,000 men in that city living under names assumed after reaching the age of 21 years, many of them respected and trusted citizens. He adds: "Men who have been unfortunate in other cities, who have committed some petty crime, and want to hide from the world, come here to begin life anew, leaving their old names and reputations behind."

Miss Helen Gould's donation of $100,000 to the government's war fund has had the effect of stimulating other individual contributions, which, if on a much smaller scale, are creditable testimonies to the patriotism of the givers. Not that the United States government is now, or is ever likely to be, reduced to the necessity of passing around the hat, but as an evidence of good faith these mites of generous givers have their value.

The night before Admiral Dewey left Washington to take command of the Asiatic squadron he was guest of honor at a dinner. His hostess and others expressed regret that he was ordered to such a distant post. The commodore said: "I shall find plenty of work to do. You know the Spaniards have a fleet over there, and I'll have to destroy that, of course. Then there are the Philippines, Spanish territory. Some day you'll hear that I've captured Manila before breakfast."

Before long we will be quite independent of foreign countries for those fruits which we have been in the habit of importing. Fig culture is a pronounced success in Louisiana and Mississippi and is also being carried on in Texas, Alabama, Florida and California. Our raisins and prunes now surpass anything produced abroad. Southwestern Texas in oranges, limes and lemons has already eclipsed the most successful efforts of West India plantations. The pineapple, alligator pear and sapodilla thrive in Florida, Texas and southern Los Angeles.

MOSQUITO FLEETS.

A Number of Small Steam Craft to Be Added to This Branch of Service.

No Movement Will Be Made Against Cuba or Porto Rico Until the Spanish Fleet is Either Destroyed or Otherwise Rendered Helpless.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The navy department is making ready for the purchase of a number of small steam craft to supplement the Mosquito fleets on the coast. The chief of the Mosquito fleets, Adm. Erben, at New York, has submitted to the navy department a list of over one hundred such craft which have been examined and found suitable. The department was prevented from making any purchases on this score because it lacked the necessary authorization, but now that congress has passed and the president has approved an act appropriating $3,000,000 for the purchase of such vessels, it will begin at once to acquire them. They are needed very badly just at present, not so much for scouting purposes as for the protection of the elaborate mine fields which the engineer officers have laid in almost all Atlantic ports. The reckless conduct of the commanders of vessels entering and emerging from these ports has determined the authorities here to deal summarily hereafter with persons who disregard the repeated warnings the local engineers have given the shipping crossing the mine fields. The Mosquito fleet vessels will all be armed, and if any vessel disregards their warning and interferes with the mines, or even jeopardizes their workings, they will pay the penalty.

At the close of the cabinet meeting Friday it was authoritatively stated that although the government had no official information on the subject, there was no reasonable doubt that Adm. Cervera's fleet was in Santiago harbor and that Commodore Schley was on guard at the entrance. Although the information upon which this belief is based is regarded as entirely trustworthy, the government will make no important move or change its plans in the absence of direct confirmation from official sources. It was also stated that any contemplated movement against Cuba or Porto Rico would be held in abeyance until the Spanish fleet either was destroyed or otherwise rendered helpless to seriously interfere with our plans in any direction. The cabinet discussed the situation at length but nothing of great consequence was decided upon. The work of equipping and mobilizing the volunteer army will be pushed with all possible vigor with a view to being in perfect readiness for any call that might be made when the Spanish fleet shall no longer be a serious factor in the war problem. All of the members of the cabinet were present except Attorney General Griggs, who is at his home in New Jersey.

Three Brigadiers for the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Adj. Gen. Corbin announced Friday night that three of the brigadier generals appointed by the president Friday would be officially designated, as soon as the senate had confirmed their nominations, to command troops in the Philippines. The generals selected for the Philippines expedition are Geo. A. Garretson, of Cleveland, O.; Frances V. Greene, of New York, and Chas. King, of Wisconsin.

Hawaii and the War Revenue Bill.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Senator Lodge has offered the Newlands resolution for the annexation of Hawaii as an amendment to the war revenue bill. The senatorial friends of annexation declare that henceforth the two measures must travel together.

Well Pleased With the Amazonas.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 28.—The New cruiser New Orleans, formerly the Amazonas, excites the admiration of all naval men during her present cruise on account of her speed and apparent effectiveness as a fighting ship.

SAMPSON'S REPORT.

The Admiral Gives Reasons for His Recent Bombardment of the Forts in the Harbor at San Juan.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Following is a copy of the report made by Rr. Adm. Sampson concerning the action off San Juan, officially posted at the navy department Friday morning:

"Upon approaching San Juan it was seen that none of the Spanish vessels were in the harbor. I was considerably in doubt whether they had reached San Juan and again departed for some unknown destination, or whether they had not arrived.

"As their capture was the object of the expedition, and as it was essential that they should not pass to the westward, I decided to attack the batteries defending the port in order to develop their position and strength, and then without waiting to reduce the city or subject it to regular bombardment, which would require due notice, turned to the westward.

"I commenced the attack as soon as it was good daylight. It lasted about three hours, when the signal was made to discontinue the firing and the squadron stood to the northeast and out of sight of San Juan, when the course was to the westward, with a view to communicating with the department at Port Plata and learn if the department had obtained information as to the movements of the Spanish vessels.

"At Cape Haitien I received word from the department that the Spanish vessels had been sighted at Curacon on the 14th inst. As stated in my telegram, no serious injury was done to any of the ships and only one man was killed and seven wounded slightly."

FROM MANILA.

The Captain of the Cruiser Olympia and Two Officers Ill, and Taken to Hong Kong for Treatment.

HONG KONG, May 28.—The United States auxiliary gunboat Zafire, formerly a British merchant steamer, but now commissioned, mounting four guns, and in charge of a lieutenant commander of the United States navy, has just arrived here from Manila, having on board the captain of the first class cruiser Olympia, flagship of Rr. Adm. Dewey, and two officers who have been invalided.

The situation at Manila is unchanged. The insurgents are quiet. Beef costs $2.50 per pound at Manila. The report that the commander of the Spanish gun boat Callao was tried by court martial and shot for not firing on the American ship which captured the Calloa is untrue.

The Zafire will return to Manila on Monday next.

TRAINS COLLIDE.

Accomodation and Freight Train on the Southern Come Together—Engineer and Two Brakemen Killed.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 28.—The southbound Oakdale accommodation train on the Cincinnati Southern railroad collided with a freight engine near Dayton, Tenn., Friday morning. From the best information now obtainable Engineer Hudson of the accommodation train and two brakemen named Sevarson and Matthews were killed. Baggagemaster Dressback and the engineer of the freight train were badly injured.

IN SANTIAGO BAY.

Commodore Schley Sends Information of Cervera's Whereabouts.

The Admiral is Cooped Up and Schley Has Seen and Recognized the Spanish Vessels—American Ships Guard the Mouth of the Harbor.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—The navy department has just received at 12:30 o'clock this (Monday) morning a dispatch from Commodore Schley stating that the Spanish fleet is in the bay of Santiago De Cuba, and that he has seen and recognized the vessels.

While the naval officials have been morally certain for several days that Cervera's squadron was in the harbor of Santiago, the official announcement from Commodore Schley was received by the officers on duty at the department with intense satisfaction. Assurance is now doubly sure that the Spanish fleet is bottled up and that the cork is in the bottle.

It is not believed that Adm. Cervera will attempt to escape from the predicament in which he now finds himself as such a course would surely result in the destruction of his vessels and the loss of many lives precious to Spain. The suggestion is made however, that the Spaniards may blow up his ships rather than have them fall into the hands of Schley, as they certainly will if they remain in the harbor.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, May 30.—The United States auxiliary cruiser, formerly the American line steamer New York, arrived here Saturday morning after having left the American fleet at noon Friday.

Twelve American war ships are now outside the harbor of Santiago De Cuba and Adm. Cervera and the Spanish fleet are almost certainly inside. But nothing certain is known as to the communication which Commodore Schley has had with the shore, or as to the number of Spanish fighting vessels which are bottled up in the harbor of Santiago De Cuba.

It is to be presumed that the Harvard has important dispatches for the naval authorities at Washington.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 28.—It is now almost certain that Commodore Schley has the Spanish fleet bottled up in the harbor of Santiago De Cuba. There is so little doubt about this that the naval campaign is proceeding upon the assumption that Adm. Cervera is incapable of doing any harm. Within a few days the exact conditions at Santiago De Cuba will be known without a shadow of doubt. In spite of assertions to the contrary, Commodore Schley was not absolutely sure of his game when he last communicated with Rr. Adm. Sampson, and the commodore will not take active steps to block up the entrance of Santiago harbor until he is perfectly certain that Adm. Cervera's ships are inside.

However, he may have done this already, as Commodore Schley's last communication, forwarded on Thursday, only reached Rear Adm. Sampson Friday. The commodore stayed three days at Cienfuegos. He signaled to his ships: "I believe the Spanish fleet is in the harbor." On this belief a message was sent to the American admiral. The details of how Commodore Schley found out that he was mistaken are not yet known. At any rate, acting on the admiral's instructions, the commodore then moved east, arriving outside Santiago De Cuba Wednesday morning, May 25. The topography of Cienfuegos and Santiago De Cuba is almost identical. Both harbors are about six miles long, with narrow entrances about 300 yards wide and protected by high land.

A whole fleet could lie in the harbor of either place and be invisible from the outside. After his experience at Cienfuegos, it is probable that Commodore Schley was very conservative in deciding whether or not he had caught Adm. Cervera. From the tone of his dispatches it is evident that the commodore soon gained much secondhand and external evidence which pointed to Adm. Cervera's presence in the inner harbor. The evidence was apparently strong enough to make the commodore feel certain the object of his trip had been accomplished, but in view of his previous experience, he would not risk a decisive statment until after ascertaining the fact for himself. Before this dispatch is published it is likely that Commodore Schley has sent some vessel into the entrance of the harbor of Santiago De Cuba, or has obtained from a reliable source ashore information as to the exact number and the names of the Spanish war ships sheltered by the hills about that place. Contrary to the generally expressed opinion, the harbor of Santiago De Cuba is poorly protected.

The Cruiser Columbia in a Collision.

NEW YORK, May 30.—The United States cruiser Columbia reports at 7:38 p. m. Saturday, off Fire Island, during thick fog, she was run into by steamer Foscolia (British), hence for Bordeaux, grain laden. The Foscolia struck the Columbia on starboard quarter just forward of the after barbette, cutting clean into the hull, making a hole about ten feet, filling a compartment with water. The Foscolia sunk almost immediately, but the Columbia succeeded in rescuing all of her crew and landed them at St. George, S. I.

Sued the Sheriff.

AKRON, O., May 30.—The wife of Col. A. L. Conger has sued Sheriff Williams and the Peoples' savings bank for $30,000 damages because of the Conger family's ejectment from their magnificent home and because the chattels in it were sold to satisfy the claims of creditors.

A Terrible Threat.

MADRID, May 30.—The Epoca, in an inspired article says: "Should the Yankees cut the Cuban and Porto Rican cables, we will cut all the cables uniting the United States with the rest of the world."

WAR SITUATION.

No Forward Movement of Troops Until the Spanish Squadron is Located—This is Stated in a Positive Manner.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The military situation as at present determined upon by those in authority is to make no forward movement of troops either upon Porto Rico or Cuba until full and definite information is received as to the location of the Spanish squadron and its possibilities as a factor in the aggressive movements of Spain. That being the positive determination there is no present purpose to hurry forward the troops now at the several points of concentration, but the interval prior to an aggressive forward movement will be employed in seasoning the men. Steps have been taken to secure early information as to whether Adm. Cervera's squadron is inside Santiago harbor and whether the American squadron has such advantage of position outside the harbor as to make the escape of the Spaniards practically impossible. For the last few days army circles have shared public belief that the Spanish ships were trapped in Santiago harbor and that has given impetus to arrangements by which large bodies of troops at Chickamauga and elsewhere might be moved forward rapidly to Tampa for embarkation. The presence of 30 or more transports in Florida waters added to the conviction that a movement on a large scale was about to occur. All this has been going on with the understanding that Adm. Cervera's career as a possible menace in the rear of our troops had been cut off by his being securely held within Santiago harbor, but in the absence of positive information on this point, together with the certainty that he can be held inside the harbor, there is no purpose whatever on the part of the war department to make an aggressive forward movement on Cuba or Porto Rico. This was stated Friday night in the most positive manner, and from an authoritative source.

Unless the navy department succeeds in securing some direct and official information respecting the Spanish and American fleets within the next 24 hours through the aid of the West Indian cables, it will resort to the use of dispatch boats. It can again be affirmed on the highest authority, and notwithstanding all rumors to the contrary, that at the close of the day the department had nothing more than a belief, founded upon unofficial advices, that the Spanish squadron was lying in Santiago harbor and no news as to Commodore Schley's whereabouts. However, the great majority of the officials of the navy department entertain no doubt that Cervera is within Santiago harbor, and they have succeeded in impressing this belief upon the president and the members of the cabinet. The reports from newspaper dispatch boats as to movements of Sampson's and Schley's squadrons during the past week are very mystifying, even to the naval officers here, and one of them called attention to a statement coming from the West Indies to the effect that 12 war vessels were seen for a short time off Cienfuegos Wednesday. This he thought was Schley's squadron, and in that case he could scarcely have covered the distance between Cienfuegos and Santiago with a slow moving fleet of iron clads in less than two days, in which case Schley would not be due off Santiago until some time Friday. Of course all this is speculative but it shows that there is still an element of doubt in the department's calculations as to the whereabouts of the fleets.

It was announced Friday that Holland, the inventor of the sub-marine boat of that name, was expected here Saturday to discuss with Capt. O'Neil, chief of ordnance, the feasibility of using that novel craft in an attack upon the Spanish squadron at Santiago if the vessels are still there. The officials are disposed to receive in a kindly spirit any suggestion that might prove to be valuable in this line and they will talk with Mr. Holland over the details of his scheme, probably on the basis of a compensation to be paid to him for each Spanish vessel destroyed.

An important phase to the military programme is a decision not to take up the details of organizing the new force of 75,000 volunteers for at least a week or ten days. At the cabinet meeting Friday inquiry was made of Secretary Alger as to what steps he proposed taking on the organization of this large additional force of volunteers. His reply was that he had not even considered the details of this question and that his plan was not to take up the matter for a week or ten days.

SPANISH PRISONERS.

Of the 440 Persons Captured on Prize Vessels 444 Will Be Held as Prisoners of War.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 28.—Of the 440 persons captured on all the prizes of war, 444 attached to the Spanish navy in various capacities will be held as prisoners, by instructions from the attorney general Friday. The others will probably be paroled. All are to be treated with the fullest consideration and accorded every possible privilege.

The ships held to be legitimate prizes will be sent north to be sold.

A New Volunteer Company.

PRINCETON, Ind., May 28.—A volunteer company of United States infantry recruited here have signed the muster roll and forwarded it to the governor. The company is made up of the finest body of young men in Southern Indiana. The company will doubtless be assigned to a regiment at Indinapolis under the late call by the president.

The Imparcial Admits It.

MADRID, May 28.—The Imparcial reiterates Friday that Adm. Cervera is at Santiago De Cuba, which port it says, possesses advantages over Cienfuegos.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Symbolic of the Soul's Flight to Its Home Above—Cleansed and Prepared the Soul May Soar Upward as Did the Turtle Dove.

From a scene of old Dr. Talmage, in this sermon, presents the old Gospel under another phase. Text: Leviticus xiv., 5-7:

"And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel, over running water. As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water; and he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleased from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean and shall let the living bird loose into the open field."

The Old Testament, to very many people, is a great slaughter house strewn with the blood, and bones, and horns, and hoofs of butchered animals. It offends their sight; it disgusts their taste; it actually nauseates the stomach. But to the intelligent Christian the Old Testament is a magnificent corridor through which Jesus advances. As He appears at the other end of the corridor we can only see the outlines of His character: coming nearer we can descry His features. But when, at last, He steps upon the platform of the New Testament, amid the torches of evangelists and apostles, the orchestras of Heaven announce Him with a blast of minstrelsy that wakes up Bethlehem at midnight.

There were a great many cages of birds brought down to Jesusalem for sacrifice—sparrows, and pigeons, and turtle-doves. I can hear them now, whistling, caroling and singing all around about the temple. When a leper was to be cured of his leprosy, in order to his cleansing two of these birds were taken; one of them was slain over an earthien vessel of running water—that is clear, fresh water, and then the bird was killed. Another bird was then taken, tied to a hyssop branch and plunged by the priest into the blood of the first bird; and then with this hyssop branch, bird-tipped, the priest would sprinkle the leper seven times, then untie the bird from the hyssop branch and it would go soaring into the heavens.

Now, open your eyes wide, my dear brethren and sisters, and see that the first bird meant Jesus, and that the second bird means your own soul.

There is nothing more suggestive than a caged bird. In the down of its breast you can see the glow of southern climes; in the sparkle of its eye you can see the flash of distant seas; in its voice you can hear the song it learned in the wildwood. It is a child of the sky in captivity. Now the dear bird of my text, captured from the air, suggests the Lord Jesus, who came down from the realms of light and glory. He once stood in the sunlight of Heaven. He was the favorite of the land. He was the king's son. Whenever a victory was gained and the bone set up, he was the first to hear it. He could not walk incognito along the streets, for all Heaven knew him. For eternal ages he had dwelt amid the mighty populations of Heaven. No holiday had ever dawned on the city when he was absent. He was not like an earthly prince, occasionally issuing from a palace heralded by a troop of clanking horse-guards. No; he was greeted everywhere as a brother, and all Heaven was perfectly at home with him.

But one day there came word to the palace that an insignificant island was in rebellion, and was cutting itself to pieces with anarchy. I hear an angel say: "Let it perish. The King's realm is vast enough without the island. The tributes to the King are large enough without that. We can spare." Not so," said the Prince, the King's son; and I see Him push out one day, under the protest of great company. He starts straight for the rebellious island. He lands amid the execrations of its inhabitants, that grow in violence until the malice of earth had smitten Him, and the spirits of the lost world put their black wings over His dying head and shut the sun out. The hawks and vultures swooped upon this dove of my text, until head, and breast, and feet ran blood—until, under the flocks and beaks of darkness, the poor thing perished. No wonder it was a bird that was taken and slain over an earthen vessel of running water. It was a child of the skies. It typified Him who came down from Heaven in agony and blood to save our souls. Blessed be His glorious name forever!

I notice in my text, that the bird that was slain was a clean bird. The text demanded that it should be. The raven was never sacrificed, nor the cormorant, nor the vulture. It must be a clean bird, says the text, and it suggests the pure Jesus—the holy Jesus. Although He spent His boyhood in the worst village on earth, although blasphemies were poured into His ear enough to have poisoned any one else, He stands before the world a perfect Christ. Herod was cruel, Henry VIII. was unclean, but point out a fault of our King. Answer me, ye boys who knew Him on the streets of Nazareth. Answer me, ye miscreants who saw Him die. The skeptical tailors have tried for 1,800 years to find out one hole in this seamless garment, but they have not found it. The most ingenious and eloquent infidel of this day, in the last line of his book, all of which denounces Christ, says: "All ages must proclaim that among the sons of men there is none greater than Jesus." So let this bird of the text be clean—its feet fragrant with the dew that it pressed, its beak carrying sprig of thyme and frankincense, its feathers washed in showers. O thou spotless Son of God, impress with Thy innocence!

"Thou lovely source of true delight,
Whom I, unseen, adore,
Unveil Thy beauties to my sight,
That I may love Thee more."

I remark, also, in regard to this first bird, mentioned in the text, that it was a defenseless bird. When the eagle is assaulted with its iron beak it strikes like a bolt against its adversary. This was a dove or a sparrow; we do not know just which. Take the dove or pigeon in your hand, and the pecking of its beak on your hand makes you laugh at the feebleness of its assault. The reindeer, after it is down, may fell you with its antlers. The ox, after you think it is dead, may break your leg in its death struggle. The harpooned whale, in its last agony, may crush you in the coil of the unwinding rope. But this was a dove or a sparrow—perfectly harmless, perfectly defenseless—type of Him who said: "I have trod the wine press alone, and there was none to help." None to help! The murderers have it all their own way. Where was the soldier in the Roman regiment who swung his sword in the defense of the Divine Martyr? Did they put one drop of oil on His gashed feet? Was there one in all that crowd manly and generous enough to stand up for him? Were the miscreants at the cross any more interfered with in their work of spiking Him fast than the carpenter in his shop driving a nail through a pine board. The women cried; but there was no balm in their tears. None to help! None to help! O, my Lord Jesus, none to help! The wave of anguish came up to the arch of His feet—came up to His knee—floated to His waist—rose to His chin—swept to his temples—yet none to help! Ten thousand times ten thousand angels in the sky, ready at command to plunge into the bloody affray, and strike back the hosts of darkness, yet none to help, none to help!

Oh, this dove of the text, in this last moment, clutched not with angry talons. It plunged not a savage beak. It was a dove—helpless, defenseless. None to help! none to help!

As, after a severe storm in the morning you go out and find birds dead on the ground, so this dead bird of the text makes me think of that awful storm that swept the earth on crucifixion day, when the wrath of God, and the malice of man, and the fury of devils wrestled beneath the three crosses. As we sang just now—

"Well might the sun in darkness hide
And shut his glories in,
When Christ, the mighty Maker, died
For man, the creature's sin."

But I come now to speak of this second bird of the text. We must not let that fly away until we have examined it. The priest took the second bird, tied it to the hyssop branch, and then plunged it in the blood of the first bird. Ah! that is my soul, plunged for cleansing in the Savior's blood. There is not enough water in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans to wash away our smallest sin. Sin is such an outrage on God's universe that nothing but blood can atone for it. You know that life is in the blood, and as the life had been forfeited, nothing could buy it back but blood. What was it that was sprinkled on the doorposts when the destroying angel went through the land? Blood. What was it that went streaming from the altar of ancient sacrifice? Blood. What was it that the priest carried into the holy of holies, making intercession for the people? Blood. What was it that Jesus sweat in the Garden of Gathsemane? Great drops of blood. What does the wine in the sacramental cup signify? Blood. What makes the robes of the righteous in Heaven so fair? They are washed in the blood of the Lamb. What is it that cleanses all our pollution? The blood of Jesus Christ, that cleanseth from all sin.

I hear somebody saying: "I do not like such a sanguinary religion as that." Do you think it is very wise for the patient to tell the doctor, "I do not like the medicine you have given me?" If he wants to be cured he had better take the medicine. My Lord God has offered us a balm, and it is very foolish for us to say, "I don't like that balm." We had better take it, and be saved. But you do not oppose the shedding of blood in other directions and for other ends. If a hundred thousand men go out to battle for their country, and have to lay down their lives for free institutions, is there anything ignoble about that? No, you say; glorious sacrifice, rather." And is there anything ignoble in the idea that the Lord Jesus Christ, by the shedding of His blood, delivered not only one land, but all lands, and all ages, and bondages, introducing men by millions and millions into the liberty of the sons of God? Is there anything ignoble about that?

As this second bird of the text was plunged in the blood of the first bird, so we must be washed in the blood of Christ, or go polluted forever.

"Let the water and the blood,
From thy side a healing flood,
Be of sin the double cure.
Save from wrath, and make me pure."

I notice now that as soon as this second bird was dipped in the blood of the first bird the priest unloosened it and it was free—free of wing and free of foot. It could whet its beak on any tree branch it chose. It could peck the grapes of any vineyard it chose. It was free; a type of our souls after we have washed in the blood of the Lamb. We can go where we will and do what we will. You say: "Had you not better qualify that?" No; for I remember that in conversation the will is changed, and the man will not will that which is wrong. There is no strait-jacket in our religion. A state of sin is a state of slavery. A state of pardon is a state of emancipation. The hammer of God's grace knocks the hoppies from the wrist, opens the door into a landscape all ashimmer with fountains and abloom with gardens. It is freedom.

If a man has become a Christian he is no more afraid of Sinai. The thunders of Sinai do not frighten him. You have, on some August day, seen two thunder showers meet. One cloud from this mountain, and another from that mountain, coming nearer and nearer together, and, responding to each other, crash to crash, thunder to thunder, boom! boom! And then the clouds break and the torrents pour, and they are emptied perhaps into the very same stream that comes down so red at your feet, that it seems as if all the carnage of the storm battle has been emptied into it. So in this Bible I see two storms gather, one above Sinai, the other above Calvary, and they respond one to the other—flash to flash, thunder to thunder, boom! boom! Sinai thunders. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" Calvary responds, "save them from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom."

Sinai says, "Woe! Woe!" Calvary answers, "Mercy! Mercy! and then the clouds burst, and empty their treasures into one torrent, and it comes flowing to our feet, red with the carnage of our Lord—in which, if thy soul be plunged, like the bird in the text, it shall go forth free—free! I wish all people to understand this: that when a man becomes a Christian he does not become a slave, but that he becomes a free man; that he has larger liberty after he becomes a child of God than before he became a child of God. Gen. Fisk said that he once stood at a slave block where an old Christian minister was being sold. The auctioneer said of him: "What bid do I hear for this man? He is a very good kind of a man; he is a minister." Somebody said, "Twenty dollars" (he was very old and not worth much); somebody else, "Twenty-five—"Thirty"—"Thirty-five"—"Forty." The aged minister began to tremble. He had expected to be able to buy his own freedom, and he had just $70, and expected with the $70 to get free. As the bids ran up the old man trembled more and more. "Forty"—"Forty-five"—"Fifty"—"Fifty-five"—"Sixty"—"Sixty-five." The old man cried out "Seventy." He was afraid they would outbid him. The men around were transfixed. Nobody dared bid, and the auctioneer struck him down to himself—done—done!

But by reason of sin we are poorer than that African. We can not buy our deliverance. The voices of death are bidding for us, and they bid us in, and they bid us down. But the Lord Jesus Christ comes and says, "I will buy that man; I bid for him my Bethlehem manger; I bid for him my hunger on the mountain; I bid for him my aching head; I bid for him my fainting heart; I bid for him all my wounds." A voice from the throne of God says, "It is enough! Jesus has bought him." Bought with a price. The purchase complete. It is done.

Why, is not a man free when he gets rid of his sins? The sins of the tongue gone; the sins of action gone; the sins of the mind gone. All the transgressions of 30, 40, 50, 70 years gone—no more in the soul than the malaria that floated in the atmosphere a thousand years ago; for when my Lord Jesus pardons a man He pardons him and there is no halfway work about it.

Here I see a beggar going along the turnpike road. He is worn out with disease. He is stiff in his joints. He is ulcered all over. He has rheum in his eyes. He is sick and wasted. He is in rags. Every time he puts down his swollen feet he cries: "Oh, the pain!" He sees a fountain by the roadside under a tree, and he crawls up to that fountain and says: "I must wash. Here I may cool my ulcers. Here I may get rested." He stoops down, scoops up water in the palm of his hands enough water to slake his thirst; and that is all gone. Then he stoops down and begins to wash his eyes; and the rheum is all gone. Then he puts in his swollen feet, and the swelling is gone. Then, willing no longer to be only half cured, he plunges in and his whole body is laved in the stream, and he gets upon the bank well. Meantime the owner of the mansion up yonder comes down, walking through the ravine with his only son, and he sees the suits of rags, and asks: "Whose rags are these?" A voice from the fountain says: "Those are my rags." Then says the master to his son: "Go up to the house and get the best new suit you can find and bring it down." And he brings down the clothes, and the beggar is clothed in them, and he looks around and says: "I was filthy, but now I am clean. I was ragged, but now I am robed. I was blind, but now I see. Glory be to the owner of that mansion; and glory be to that son who brought me that suit of clothes; and glory be to this fountain, where I have washed, and where all who will may wash and be clean!" Where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound. The bird has been dipped now, let it fly away.

The next thing I noticed about this bird, when it was loosened (and this is the main idea), is, that it flew away. Which way did it go? When you let a bird loose from your grasp, which way does it fly? Up. What are wings for? To fly with. Is there anything in the suggestion of this directly taken by this bird to indicate which way we ought to go?

"Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings,
Thy better portion trace;
Rise from transitory things
To Heaven, thy native place."

We should be going Heavenward. That is the suggestion. But I know that we have a great many drawbacks. You had them this morning perhaps. You had them yesterday, or the day before; and although you want to be going Heavenward, you are constantly discouraged. But I suppose when that bird went out of the priest's hands it went by infections—sometimes soaring. A bird does not shoot directly up, but this is the motion of a bird. So the soul soars toward God, rising up in love, and sometimes depressed by trial. It does not always go in the direction it would like to. But the main course is right. There is one passage in the Bible which I quote oftener to myself than any other: "He knoweth our frame, and He remembereth that we are dust."

The smallest flower known to the botanist is said to be that of the yeast plant. It is microscopic in size, and is said to be only one hundredth part of a millimeter in diameter.

AN ALLIANCE.

Preliminary Steps Taken by England and the United States.

Great Britain to Recognize the Monroe Doctrine and Uncle Sam to Build the Nicaragua Canal and Allow England to Use It in Case of War.

LONDON, May 30.—The Washington correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, telegraphing Sunday says: "I have just learned from a high authority in the state department that important preliminary steps toward an anglo-American alliance have already been taken. How far these negotiations, if they can yet be called that, have proceeded, it is not easy to ascertain, for, naturally, strict secrecy is maintained, but my information is that the preliminary suggestions have been made and that the subject of such an alliance is practically before the two governments in some shape.

"The recent visits of Sir Julian Pauncefote to the state department have not it seems had reference altogether to the Canadian negotiations. According to my authority the features of the proposed alliance now being considered are these:

"England is to recognize the Monroe doctrine, to attempt no increase of her territorial possessions in the western hemisphere, and to indorse the American construction of that doctrine. The United States is to build the Nicaragua canal and Great Britain is to have the use of it in time of war.

"The United States is to have all the territory taken from Spain in the present war and Great Britain is to protect the United States in the possession if this should be threatened. The United States is to stand by England in her policy in China and the east, and all the British ports in the east are to be opened to the United States under the most favored nation clause.

"The main features of an arbitration treaty are to be incorporated. It has been provided that all matters in dispute not involving the Monroe doctrine or the Nicaragua canal, are to be submitted to a non-partisan commission. The existing understanding bearing upon the relations between the two governments on the great lakes are to be abrogated and the United States are to be given the use of the Welland canal in case of war.

"The alliance is to be offensive and defensive. It proceeds on lines such as the foregoing. As a matter of course, all that has been done so far is purely tentative, but my informant gives the above as the general outline suggested."

CADIZ FLEET.

According to Report it is in Bad Shape to Go Manila or Anywhere Else for Some Weeks to Come.

NEW YORK, May 30.—A dispatch to the World from London says: The chief officer of a steamer just in from Cadiz said Friday night:

"When we left Cadiz last Friday the only Spanish warships there were the battle ship Pelayo, the cruiser Emperador Carlos V., one torpedo catcher and the converted cruisers Patriota and Rapido. The cruisers were at the arsenal.

"Everything bore the appearance of unreadiness.

"The Pelayo's boilers, recently put in at Toulon, had just been condemned by the superintending engineer at Cadiz on the ground that they were of insufficient strength. She was, however, coaling.

"The Rapido and the Patriota had not been fitted with guns, and neither had a crew.

"There was no belief in the reports that the fleet was going to Manila or anywhere else for some weeks at least."

BRIG. GEN. OTIS.

Editor and Proprietor of the Los Angeles Times—Served With Distinction in the Civil War.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 30.—Harrison Gray Otis, who has been appointed brigadier general of volunteers, is the editor and proprietor of the Los Angeles Times, one of the leading journals of the Pacific coast.

He was born in Ohio in 1837, and served on the union side during the entire civil war, entering as a private and rising by successive promotions to that of lieutenant colonel. The final promotion was given him at the close of hostilities upon unsolicited recommendation of Maj. Gen. R. B. Hayes, subsequently President Hayes. During his 49 months of service in the war, Gen. Otis took part in 15 engagements, received two wounds in battle and was promoted seven times.

Blanco's Dell to Gen. Miles.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 30.—Charles Thrall and Hayden Jones, the correspondents captured by the Spaniards, were brought here by the auxiliary ship Woodbury Saturday, having been exchanged for Col. Cortijo and three others. They speak well of the treatment received at Cabanas and say that Blanco is still boastful and apparently anxious to meet the Americans. "Tell Gen. Miles I have men, guns and ammunition galore and the courage to give him as pretty a fight as he can ask," was Blanco's message.

To Build Russian War Ships.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 30.—Irving M. Scott, of the Union iron works, has gone to St. Petersburg to consult with the czar's government regarding the building of Russian war ships in this city. On Tuesday last he received a message from St. Petersburg congratulating him on the performance of the Oregon and asking him to go to that city.

Corea Opens Three Ports.

YOKOHAMA, May 30.—The Corean government has decided to open three more ports and also to make Pinh Yan an open market.

GLADSTONE'S FUNERAL.

Last Honors Shown the Grand Old Man by the Highest Nobility and All the People of London.

LONDON, May 30.—The obsequies of Gladstone took place Saturday. The simple ceremonies were impressive, appropriate to the unostentatious grandeur of the statesman, whose memory they honored.

In the center of Westminster hall, a plain oak coffin lay upon a seven plain dais. Not a flower or a bit of draping softened its rigid outlines. Huge wax candles flickered at each corner and a brass cross stood at the head.

A folded pall lay at the foot of the coffin.

Shortly after ten o'clock the procession began to form. There was a long file of Great Britain's foremost men clad in mourning costume.

First came the speaker of the house of commons in robes and wig. He was preceded by a mace-bearer and followed by some 400 members of parliament. Then came a group of privy councillors, and after these the lords chancellor, preceded by a mace-bearer and followed by a number of peers and bishops. Immediately in front of the coffin stood the duke of Connaught, the duke of Cambridge and the earl of Pembroke, representing the queen.

On either side of the coffin were ranged the pallbearers—the prince of Wales, the duke of York, the marquis of Salisbury, the earl of Rosebery, Arthur J. Balfour, Sir William Harcourt, the duke of Rutland, the earl of Kimberley, Lord Rendel and Mr. Amistead. Behind the coffin were the Gladstone family, the sons, young grandsons, private secretaries, physicians and servants. There were no ladies. Last of all came a pathetic group of old villagers of Hawarden. When all had taken their places the duke of Norfolk, the earl marshal of England, conducted the bishop of London to the coffin, where he offered a brief prayer. Then the coffin was raised upon the shoulders of the bearers and the procession moved slowly from the hall to the abbey.

Outside a vast throng filled the whole neighborhood and every roof and window was crowded with spectators.

After a short service in the church the remains were conveyed to the grave. It is in the very center of the north transept. It was at the feet of the statue of Gladstone's greatest rival, Lord Beaconsfield.

GEN. BROOKE'S ARMY.

It is Being Put in Good Shape—Brigade and Regimental Drills Occur Daily in All the Camps.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 30.—The various commands composing Gen. Brooke's army of 45,000 men are rapidly being put in good shape and the work of the whole army is being thoroughly systematized. Brigade and regimental drills occur daily in all the camps and the job of making fighting soldiers goes bravely on. Despite statements to the contrary the men are fairly well provided for and none are undergoing any great hardships. The great drawback is lack of uniforms, shoes, clothing and equipments, but this drawback will be all eliminated during the next few days as immense amounts of these supplies are now en route.

Maj. Frank E. Nye, a commissary of subsistence of the regular army, arrived Friday night from Tampa, Fla., and Saturday took charge of the commissary department in the city. He will have charge of the immense amount of rations now arriving. Fifty-five cars of provisions arrived Friday and 50 more are scheduled for Saturday. Col. Kingsley, paymaster for Pennsylvania, Saturday paid the men from the Keystone state the amounts due them for service before being mustered into the government service. The total amount was over $70,000.

The Chattanooga, Rome & Southern railway has made a satisfactory settlement with the First Missouri for damages sustained in the wreck last Saturday. The money will be used to resupply the regiment with horses and lost articles in connection with their baggage.

No great amount of drilling and maneuvering was done Saturday. Saturday was set aside as a day of inspection in all the regiments, and the work of cleaning up and putting things in shape about the camps required most of the time of the men.

ORDERS ISSUED.

Troops to Be Put Aboard Transports at Once—War Ships Will Convoy the Expedition.

NEW YORK, May 30.—A special dispatch to the Tribune from Washington says: Orders have at last gone forward to Maj. Gen. Shafter, at Tampa, to embark the greater portion of his corps, including all the regulars and a few of the most efficient volunteer regiments on board the transports gathered at that place, and the aggressive military movement which has been so frequently predicted and as often delayed for one cause or another, will be an accomplished fact before the end of this week.

The strongest units of Adm. Sampson's reorganized squadron will convoy the expedition and cover its landing at a point now definitely designated.

Sampson's Fleet is Alert.

KEY WEST, Fla., May 30.—The greatest vigilance is being exercised to guard against the possibility of the Spanish fleet getting into Havana. Adm. Sampson is operating just as though there was no likelihood of the Spanish fleet being bottled up at Santiago de Cuba.

Gen. Miles Leaves Washington.

NEW YORK, May 30.—A Washington dispatch to the Herald says: "It was reported early Monday morning that Gen. Miles will leave during the day for the south to direct the movement of the troops to Cuba."

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—SENATE—For five hours Monday the senate had the war revenue measure under discussion. The entire time was occupied by Mr. Chilton (dem., Tex.), Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.), and Mr. Turley (dem., Tenn.). While Mr. Lodge confined himself to a discussion of the proposed tax on corporations and bank deposits, strongly urging that such taxes be imposed; Mr. Chilton and Mr. Turley covered pretty fully the general features of the bill. Their speeches dealt comprehensively with the theories of taxation and were therefore, in the very nature of things legal and technical discussions upon the subject. No action of any kind was taken upon the bill.

HOUSE—The day in the house was devoted chiefly to the consideration of District of Columbia legislation. Two bills of some importance affecting the volunteer military were passed.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—SENATE—That feature of the war revenue measure placing a tax of one quarter of one per centum upon the gross receipts of corporations was under discussion in the senate throughout Tuesday's session, to which only the proposed tax on bank deposits was adverted to. The principal speeches were delivered by Mr. Platt (rep., Ct.) and Mr. Lindsay (dem., Ky.) both of whom vigorously attacked the corporation tax. The weight of the former's argument was thrown against the tax on the ground that it was unconstitutional because the tax was not levied alike upon all corporations engaged in a particular lines of business. He maintained that an occupation tax could be levied, provided that the conditions were fair and uniform; that the organization of a corporation could not be taxed, simply because it was conducted by a corporation. Mr. Lindsay vigorously antagonized the proposed issue of legal tender notes, declaring that it accentuated the existing menace to the gold reserve of the treasury and was, besides, the dearest money ever devised. He held that such an issue would be a blow to the nation's financial credit. He also presented an argument against the proposed corporation tax, maintaining that if enacted into law it would breed a batch of lawsuits instead of providing what the government needed—ready money with which to conduct the war operations.

HOUSE—The session of the house Tuesday was brief. Several bills were passed, notably those for the organization of the naval hospital corps; to facilitate military trials for small offenses; and to authorize the appointment of a commission to allot certain lands and to secure the cession of others from the Utah Indians, in their reservation in Utah.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—SENATE—Late Wednesday afternoon Mr. Allison (ia.), in charge of the war revenue bill in the senate, endeavored to secure unanimous consent that a final vote on the measure be taken on Saturday next immediately after the adjournment. Mr. Pettus (Ala.) objected. Mr. Daniel (Va.), in reiterating Mr. Teller's objection, sounded the first note of delay against that measure that has been heard since the war began. He declared that there was no emergency which required the immediate passage of the bill and frankly announced that it certain provisions of the bill put into it by the democrats on the finance committee were not agreed to by the senate he would offer some amendments to the measure that probably would precipitate debate. He strongly intimated too, that if the senate should not be prolonged, it might not be necessary to provide so much revenue as the pending bill would raise and a desire to await developments that in all likelihood were close at hand before passing upon a bill that meant so much to the people as this one. Speeches on the general features of the pending bill were delivered Wednesday by Mr. Stewart (pop., Nev.); Mr. Allen (pop., Neb.), and Mr. Caffery (dem., La.) Before the revenue bill was taken up Wednesday morning the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was passed. It carried nearly $9,000,000.

HOUSE—After the passage of a bill granting certain public lands to the territory of New Mexico, the house devoted Wednesday's session to eulogies upon the late Senator George, of Mississippi.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—SENATE—No substantial progress was made by the senate Thursday towards the disposition of the war revenue measure, although it was under consideration for three hours. Speeches were delivered on the bill by Mr. White (dem., Cal.) and Mr. Teller (Col.). The former opposed the issue of bonds and strongly advocated the coinage of the silver bullion, and the tax upon corporations. In his discussion of the last feature Mr. White drew out the fact that an amendment was to be offered to the bill by Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.), placing a tax of one-half of one per cent. upon certain large corporations. Mr. Teller dwelt largely upon the proposition to levy an income tax and he had succeeded in his argument when the bill was laid aside in order that eulogies might be pronounced upon the late Senator Walthall, of Miss.

HOUSE—After a long session Thursday the houses passed few bills but the discussion involved a wide range of subjects. After a brush over civil service brought on by a paragraph in the deficiency pension bill, providing for some temporary clerks in the war department, the house considering a bill to amend the internal revenue laws, listened to lengthy speeches from Mr. Shafroth (Col.) and Mr. Grow (Pa.) upon the free coinage of silver and greenbacks as legal tender respectively. Pending a yea and nay vote upon the internal revenue bill the house adjourned. The vote will be taken immediately after the house meets Friday.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—SENATE—A notable speech on the war revenue measure was delivered in the senate Friday afternoon by Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.). In the course of an argument in support of a tax on corporations he denounced as "infamous" the decision of the supreme court against the income tax law of 1894 as unconstitutional. Mr. Teller (silver rep., Col.) concluded his speech begun Thursday advocating the coinage of the seigniorage, the issuing of an income tax, and the issue of legal tender notes, and opposing the issue of bonds. Mr. Nelson (rep., Minn.) presented a carefully prepared argument against the issue of legal tender notes. In a speech of two hours, Mr. Cockrell (dem., Mo.) discussed the financial question in contention between the democratic and republican parties. He urged that the bill as reported by the majority of the finance committee ought to be enacted into law.

HOUSE—The house was Friday afternoon in active session for an hour when a call of the roll was taken, and the sergeant-at-arms was engaged in bringing in absent members to make a quorum, the absence of which was disclosed by the roll call. The suspension was caused by a wrangle growing out of Mr. Tongue's (Ore.) attempt to deliver a general peroration speech when the house was considering a private pension measure. Mr. Dalzell (Pa.) in the chair. Mr. Richardson (dem., Tenn.) made the point of order that the speech of Mr. Tongue was not germane to the pending bill. Mr. Cannon (rep., Ill.) took issue with the Tennessee member. The speaker sustained the support of order and Mr. Cannon appealed from the decision. Upon the motion of Mr. Richardson to table the appeal 87 voted in the affirmative and 11 in the negative. Mr. Cannon made the point of no quorum and a call of the house followed. The appeal was then taken upon the main issue, but Mr. Hays, a second speaker, of private bills proceeded.

Second Assistant Secretary of War.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Soon after the senate convened at 11 o'clock Friday morning, Mr. Carter reported from the military affairs committee a bill providing for a second assistant secretary of war to be named by the president, and to receive a salary of $4,000. The bill was passed.

Notable Lexington Betrothal.

Tuesday evening, John Williams while in a drunken condition, stabbed his brother-in-law, Samuel O. Kirby, with a pocket knife, inflicting a severe and painful wound in the left breast. Fortunately the knife struck Mr. Kirby's suspender which kept the blade from penetrating deeper, and as the wound is in the region of the heart probably prevented more serious consequences. There was no apparent cause for the murderous attack except. Williams was filled with whisky Mr. Kirby was sitting in the door way of his home, when without provocation, Williams applied a vile epithet to him and made the assault on him. When Williams stabbed Kirby the latter knocked him down and was administering a deserved threshing to him when he was pulled off by bystanders. The Town Marshal arrested Williams and lodged him in jail to await trial. He had a hearing before Police Judge Ed Lamkin, Wednesday, and was held over to the July term of the Gallatin circuit court, in the sum of $550 to answer to the charge of cutting with intent to kill.

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1898. NO. 33

MONDAY'S war news was as follows: American troops landed at Agandores east of Santiago harbor early Monday morning, while Sampson was bombarding the Spanish batteries at that point.—The American fleets made another attack on Santiago Saturday night, but nothing was accomplished. The bombardment lasted three-quarters of an hour.—It is expected that the landing of troops at Santiago will be heard of in a few days.—It is reported from Kingston, Jamaica, that the Spanish torpedo boat destroyer, Furor, was sunk by the Oregon. The Furor was sneaking along the coast toward Santiago Harbor. Not heeding a warning shot from the Oregon, a projectile was sent from the American's 13 inch gun. It struck the Spaniard amidship and she went down. The entire crew is reported lost.—A Mole St. Nicolas cable says that advices received from the flagship New York today say that there is no truth in the report that the Oregon sank a Spanish torpedo destroyer.—It is reported that all of Cervera's cruisers, except the Cristoval Colon, have escaped from Santiago Harbor. Only one torpedo boat and two auxiliary cruisers are reported to be there.—A Washington dispatch says enough information has reached there from Tampa and Mobile, where a strict censorship is enforced, to indicate that most of the troops mobilized at those points are now on the way to Cuba or Puerto Rico.—A cable from Kingston, Jamaica, this morning is confirmatory of Saturday's dispatches that the first division of the American army, consisting of 5,000 men, had landed near Punta Cabrera. A gunboat of Sampson's fleet put several troops of cavalry to flight.—Two Spanish warships are said to be off San Juan. The navy officials say that if this is so they will soon be ours. The invasion of Puerto Rico is to be inaugurated immediately, as the Administration wants to take the island before Spain shall sue for peace.—The State Department has information of negotiations pushed by Russia in the interest of peace between Spain and the United States. France has agreed to support Russia in her movement.—A Washington dispatch says that the navy officials place no credence in reports that the Cadiz fleet is a week on the road to America, or that it has reached Martinique.—The proposition has been revived to send an American fleet to the Canary Islands and on to Spain as soon as Cervera's fleet can be captured or destroyed. It is said that the New York, Brooklyn, Minneapolis, Columbia, St. Paul, St. Louis, Harvard and Yale are among our ships likely to be sent to Spanish waters. —The Navy Department gives out the following: "Admiral Dewey reports that the insurgents have been actively engaged within the province of Cavite during the past week. They have won several victories, taking prisoners about 1,800 men, 50 officers of the Spanish troops, not native. The arsenal of Cavite has been prepared for occupation by the United States troops upon their arrival on transports."—Fully 25,000 American troops are now in Cuba or Santiago.

THE eighth page of this issue is devoted, this week, to the premium list as arranged for the next county fair. By looking over it you will find that the premiums have been increased in many instances while a great many new rings have been added. The next fair will be a record breaker in the way of a county fair.

THE news comes by the way of Aurora, Indiana, that a cavalry company is being organized in this county to go to Cuba. If that be true those who have the matter in hand are keeping it very quiet on this side of the river.

THE Merrimac was not sunk by the Spanish, but was sunk by the Americans in obedience to the order of Admiral Sampson, who had it done to obstruct the channel leading into Santiago.

WITH the earth quaking and balls of fire capering about in the heavens, it begins to look like the machinery is getting out of repair.

IF the weather is any warmer in Cuba than here, the boys from the north will suffer intensely.

ON the morning of the sixth inst an earthquake was felt in Central and Eastern Kentucky.

IT seems impossible to get strictly reliable news from the front during a war.

STATE NEWS.

Farmers all over the State are complaining of cutworms and grasshoppers.

Henry Wilson has disappeared from his home in Leslie county. It is feared that he has been murdered. His father has employed detectives.

Mat Belcher, a noted desperado, was shot and killed by Talton Napier, of Pike county. It is said that the quarrel arose over a game of cards, when Napier shot Belcher in the breast with a 44-caliber colts revolver, killing him instantly.

Judge W. E. Settle, of Bowling Green, has ordered Deputy Clerk Roup to make a copy of the Bible. It was filed as an exhibit in a case, and the owner wants to withdraw it. Roup thinks he can copy that part of it in about two years.

Dick Hewlett was accidentally killed by his brother near Fallsburg, Lawrence county. His brother was repairing a pistol in a blacksmith shop, when it was accidentally discharged, the ball taking effect in Dick's neck, causing death in about twenty minutes.

A Hart county farmer who makes a specialty of raising fine apples, has the following ad. in the Munfordsville News: Wanted—To buy a good Jersey bull, with large head, good horns and vicious habits, to graze in apple orchard. Will pay $9 for one delivered at Rowlett's.

The State Election Commissioners will not hear anyone in person in recommending persons for appointment as county election commissioners. All recommendations must be in writing and every recommendation will have consideration from the commissioners. They will have no certain named day to make county appointments, but they will have all the appointments complete for every county in the State previous to Sept. 1, 1898.—Argus.

A peculiar case of poisoning is reported in this county. Four years ago tenants on Uncle James Humble's lands used paris green in tobacco culture and not having used it all deposited it in an old hollow stump. This gradually rotted away and some cattle belonging to James B. Humble found it and upon eating of same resulted in the death of three of them, one bull worth $35, a two-year-old heifer worth $50 and another worth $25, and another barely escaping.—Mt. Olivet Advance.

Mr. William Jennings Bryan is in the enviable plight of that man of song who "would be damned if did and be damned if he don't."

When the manhood of the Nation responded with patriotic fervor to the call to arms, Bryan's self constituted critics rang the cry all over the county, "Where is Bryan?" Then when they learned that he was willing to serve his country in any capacity to which he might be assigned, offering to enlist as a private and march to the front, they denounced this as a palpable exhibition of demagoguey, declaring that no man of his standing need to prove his loyalty and patriotism in that way. Now that Mr. Bryan is raising a regiment at his home in Nebraska and expects to go out as its colonel if a second call is made by the president, his detractors are making merry over the incident and heaping much ridicule upon him.

All of which goes to show that Mr. Bryan cannot hope to please his fool critics. When he did not proclaim in hot haste his eagerness to shoulder a gun and march on Cuba alone, they said he was a coward. When he enlisted as a private in a company composed of his neighbors, they said he was a demagogue. Now that he is raising a regiment, they say he is a self-seeking politician, and are already reviling his command with the epithets of the "Silver Legion," Willie's Wonders," and other similar titles of detraction.

It can be safely predicted, without any attempt to defend Mr. Bryan from the silly attacks of his detractors, that if he goes into the war he will display the same qualities of heart and mind that have endeared him to millions of his countrymen. He has youth, personal magnetism, ambition, courage, good sense and a natural power of command attested by an experience, that falls to the lot of few Americans.

Mr. Bryan's fool critics would better keep quiet until as a soldier he commits some of the numerous errors for which they are fondly hoping.—St. Louis Republic.

Pith of the Press.

When Mr. Schley gets ready he is going to celebrate by cracking a small bottle.—Anaconda Mont. Standard.

General Alger is Secretary of War, but General Hesitancy seems to be running the department.—Salt Lake Herald.

Sagasta must be feeling pretty blue when he sums it up as a fight "for national existence."—Boston Record.

Hon. Tom Watson, of Georgia, has been holding his mouth in check with great ability.—Chicago Tribune.

Gomez may with confidence trust to history. History will have no story of American treachery to tell. —N. Y. Journal.

An occasional bubble on the Pennsylvania surface marks the spot where Hon. Bill Harrity went down.—Washington Post.

Hon. Teddy Roosevelt and his men have started for Tampa. Now watch the Florida coast tip up.—Pittsburg Post.

Anxious correspondent: Yes. Dewey's blockade of Manilla Harbor is, of course, a Pacific blockade. —Boston Globe.

Sagasta says America is fast drifting toward hell. Well, good-by senor. Look us up when you come down our way.—Denver Post.

Blanco may not realize the fact, but he is bottled up as effectually in the west of Cuba as Cervera is in the east.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

As disappearing quantities in this war General Weyler and the Spanish Treasury has just about reached the jumping-off place.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A disposition to mingle in Ohio politics again would indicate that the excitement of war is not sufficient for ex-Secretary Sherman.—Washington Star.

Senator Elkins says this country has gone ahead 100 years in the past four weeks. And we haven't really got steam up yet, either.—Cleveland Leader.

If ex-Secretary Sherman is grieved at his shameful treatment by Boss Hanna, he is not telling the newspaper correspondents.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The Governor of Kansas says Jerry Simpson is more useful in Congress than he could possibly be in war. This seems to call for a diagram.—Washington Post.

General Miles has heard all about the unhealthful condition of Cuba but when he invades that island he, expects to take a trocha every morning before breakfast.—Chicago Record.

This would be a good time for Mr. Reed to remember that it was Mr. Cleveland who first devised the scheme of blowing down the muzzle of the Hawaiian question.—Detroit Tribune.

One of the most pathetic spectacles of the war is "Fighting Bob" Evans roosting on the bridge of the Iowa, plaintively singing "Mr. Sampson, Turn Me Loose." —Washington Post.

Dewey has captured another Spanish gunboat and added it to his fleet of fighters. If this thing keeps on Dewey will presently have a fleet as numerous as Sampson's.—N. Y. World.

If any one supposes for a moment that General Blanco is not wide awake and fully prepared to make a showing when occasion requires that person is entitled to the booby prize for knowledge.—Washington Post.

As General Agulnaldo has promised Admiral Dewey that the insurgents will be obedient to the United States authority, our troops when they reach Manilla will be welcomed by an effective ally.—N. Y. Herald.

With each succeeding day the peril of Admiral Dewey from the possible dispatch of an armoured fleet against him has been diminishing, until now it is doubtful whether any such danger exist.—N. Y. Sun.

Now that the Board of Strategy has discovered the position of Cervera it ought to get to work and discover the position of Mark Hanna. He seems to have been lost to sight in the maneuvering.—Louisville Dispatch.

Did Blanco compliment his own race and nation when he appealed to Gomez to sell out his cause? To ask a Spaniard, because he is a Spaniard, to betray his friend is not saying much for Spanish character.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

Senator Allen, of Nebraska, refuses to allow his son to enter the army as a Lieutenant Colonel. He says the young man must go as a private and grow up. This is the first oasis so far discovered in the military desert.—Denver Times.

The President's memorandum made war measures fast by, I suppose the House of Representatives, as a war measure, rise in mass and reverse the situation? That is, sit on Mr. Thomas B. Reed instead of being sat on by him.—N. Y. Journal.

Previous events have done much to encourage Mr. Reed to assume that he is competent to do the country's thinking for it. But he might at least announce the intellectual process by which his conclusions are reached.—Washington Star.

CROP AND STOCK.

Covington, Arnold & Co., of Richmond, have bought 7,700 bushels of wheat at $1 05.

Last week a Christian county farmer sold his 1898 crop of wheat, consisting of 600 acres, to be delivered after harvest, at $1 per bushel.

J. S. Wilson, of Paris, bought of S. D. Goff, of Clark county, his 1897 crop of blue grass seed, about 10,000 bushels, at 60 cents per bushel.

It will do your soul good to make a visit to the country now and see the unmistakable prospects for abundant crops on all sides. Woodford's great product, wheat, never looked finer at this time of year and it is estimated the yield will exceed that of last year. An immense quantity of tobacco has been set, and the plants are doing splendiddly. Corn is coming up nicely, and other crops never appeared better. Altogether the Woodford farmer has much to delight his heart. —Bluegrass Clipper.

FROM OWEN COUNTY.

[News]

T. T. Vallandingham still leads the van. He has set thirty acres of tobacco, all of which is growing nicely.

At the sale of Attilla Crouch dec'd., last Saturday stock brought excellent prices. Yearling heifers brought as high as $28 per head.

John Holeman refused to wait to muster in a company from Owen for the Cuban war, and Monday morning left for Lexington where he will enlist, it is supposed with the Louisville Legion.

The Owen county Fair Co., has fixed dates for the fall meeting for the last week in September. They have decided not to have any races this fall, but will increase the premiums on exhibition stock.

Gran See, living near Walnut Grove, was terribly injured and perhaps fatally, by a kick from a horse about ten days ago. He had just traded for the animal and was hitching it to a wagon, when it kicked, with both feet striking him in the face, mashing it into a jelly.

Owen county has plenty of good fighting material. In the Mexican and civil wars she furnished more soldiers in proportion to population than any county in the State, and there is no reason why she should not stand in the first ranks in this war. The effort to get up a company is all that is necessary.

The new Baptist church at Sparta was dedicated last Sunday in the presence of an immense audience. Rev. Hunt, of Louisville preached the dedicatory sermon in the new church while Rev. Anderson held an overflow meeting in the Christian church. The ladies prepared an elegant dinner and served it on the grounds. One hundred and thirty-five dollars was raised on the ground which more than pays the indebtedness.

Last Friday morning at 5 o'clock, Samuel Waldrop, the oldest citizen in Owen county, with one exception, passed away. He was born in Louisa county, Va., April 16, 1808, being the last survivor of a large family of ten children.

[Herald.]

The blackberry crop will be immense.

There is some complaint of horse-stealing in the county, and heroic measures to stop it are talked of.

Out of thirty-five applicants for teachers' certificates, 11 received first class, 14 second, six third and four failed.

The Owen County Teachers' Institute will be held the last of August, conducted by Hon. Ed Porter Thompson.

Twenty thousand men are enlisted in the United States navy and the number will go to 35,000 if the war continues.

Portugal has just celebrated the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Cape route to India by its great navigator, Vasco da Gama.

Among the curious things which remain in the memory of Mrs. Nancy P. Knight, of Woburn, Mass., who recently celebrated her ninety-third birthday, is the phenomenally cold summer of 1816. The family of Admiral Sampson lives in Glen Ridge, N. J. The members of it are Mrs. Sampson, two stepdaughters, Olive and Hannah, and two sons, Ralph and Harold. Two daughters are married—Margaret, to Lieut. Roy C. Smith, of the Indiana, and Kate, to Ensign R. H. Jackson, commanding the torpedo boat Foote.

Maria Christina, queen regent of Spain, is very tall, fair, extremely graceful, just 40 years of age, but looking younger, with the most engaging manners. A census was taken lately in Algeria, and it was found that the youngest Arab married man was 12 years old, and that there were many boys who were married at 13 and 14, while some at 15 had several wives. There is a youthful Algerian widower of 15, and a divorced husband of the same age. Girls are still more precocious, and are sometimes married when only 11 years old, though 12 is the more usual age.

It fell into the hands of officers and caused James some trouble, and until a day or two ago, he never entered a photographer's.

It is said that a rolling stone gathers no moss. As a matter of fact it is the rolling stone that keeps the world on the move. The man who sits down in the spot where he happens to find himself and goes to gathering moss contributes nothing to the bustle, the activity, the well-directed energy that goes to make the prosperity of a country. Inventions, discoveries, commerce, science, art and literature get no assistance from the stone that never rolls. It is the rolling stone that discovers, invents, produces.

When the war with Spain began the price of sulphur was $22 a ton, but as the result of Spain's action in declaring this article contraband of war the price has risen to $35 a ton, and predictions are freely made that it will be $100 before many more months have passed. Here is an opportunity to develop another of the wonderful resources of the United States. There are sulphur mines in this country; yet we have always depended upon Sicily for practically our entire supply. The American product should now be given a great chance. "There's millions in it."

dispatches from Cape Haytien and Port au Prince, the former saying 3 o'clock and the latter 5. It is possible that this arises from a confusion between the figures 3 and 8).

BALTIMORE, June 4.—The Merrimac was purchased by the government from the Lone Star Steamship Co. The transfer was made in this city early in April. She was formerly the Norwegian steamer Solvèig, and was nearly destroyed by fire at Newport News in 1896. She was built at Newcastle, Eng., in 1894, was 330 feet long, 44 feet beam and had a net register of 2,193 tons. The Merrimac left Norfolk where she was fitted for government purposes about a month ago.

CAPE HAITIEN, Haiti, June 4.—A second dispatch from Santiago de Cuba states that it is believed that the Merrimac was sent into the neck of the harbor by Sampson [illegible] purpose of closing the port [illegible] to prevent the escape of the [illegible] squadron. From information conveyed by the prisoners it is [illegible] they volunteered for this [illegible] perilous work and that none perished, as they were prepared for the explosion when it occurred.

NEW YORK, June 4.—A Washington dispatch to the New York Herald says:

No official information has been received at the navy department of the report that the collier Merrimac had been sunk in the entrance to Santiago harbor. The officials of the navy department however, are of the opinion that the cablegram from Porto Rico is correct, and that Adm. Sampson has taken effective means to prevent the Spanish fleet from giving him the slip and running out under cover of a dark and rainy night before the land forces can reach Santiago and co-operate with him in the contemplated land and sea operations. It is thought probable that he engaged the shore batteries with the guns of his fleet while the Merrimac was being sunk in the channel. The Merrimac is a collier of 6,000 tons burden, and was purchased by the government from the Lone Star Steamship Co. of Galveston, Texas, a few days ago. She was formerly the Norwegian steamer Solvèig, and was built at Newcastle, England, in 1894. She is 330 feet long, 44 feet beam and has a net register of 2,193 tons. She was fitted out at Norfolk navy yard, and left there on May 24 for Key West, where she was to receive her supplies and ammunition. She was then to proceed to Guantanamo bay, where she was to coal the fleet. She left Key West on May 26, and was last reported at Cape Haytien on May 29. She was then proceeding slowly, as her machinery was out of order.

An American vessel, the Merrimac, described in the advices from Santiago de Cuba as an auxiliary cruiser, making a dash to force the entrance, succeeded in passing the first line of defenses, but was torpedoed about five hundred feet up the channel.

She went down "perpendicularly" (a pic). An officer, an engineer and six seamen were taken prisoners. The number of victims is unknown.

There is great excitement in the city. A part of the population assisted in the fighting on the heights. Everybody is astounded at the audacity of the American vessel.

The American squadron was cruising all the while in the offing.

CAPE HAYTIEN, Hayti, June 4.—The American fleet, according to advices received by cable from Santiago de Cuba, the cable being under Spanish control, opened fire again at 2 o'clock Friday morning on the fortifications and war ships.

The cannonading was well sustained until 4 o'clock a. m.

One of the United States auxiliary cruisers "well armed" attempted to force the passage into the harbor.

The Spanish allowed the cruiser to cross the first line of torpedoes, but before she arrived at the second line they discharged at her a torpedo, which broke a great hole in her side and caused her to sink almost instantly, bow first.

The name of the vessel is not known, nor is the number of victims reported.

One officer, one engineer and six sailors were made prisoners.

A dispatch from Santiago says that the vessel sunk is understood to be the Merrimac. Only the extremities of her funnel and two masts are visible above the water.

The Santiago advices to Cape Haytien, in referring to the sunken vessel as auxiliary cruiser, probably mistake her character. The Merrimac is a collier and always has been a collier.

(It will be noted that there is an important discrepancy as to the time at which the bombardment is said to have begun Friday morning between the and during the engagement ran the Merrimac into the narrow entrance of the harbor and opened her sea valves, allowing her to sink. Just inside the entrance the channel is so narrow that a vessel as large as the Merrimac sunk there would make it impossible for Adm. Cervera's ships to pass on either side of her. It is hoped that the report that one of her officers and some of her crew were captured by the Spanish is incorrect, yet it is realized that it was a dangerous task which they had to perform, and, though Adm. Sampson doubtless took every precaution possible to enable them to escape, they may have been unable to get off the sinking vessel and get safely past the Spanish batteries at the entrance to the harbor in a small boat to where they could be picked up by one of the vessels of the American fleet.

Now that Adm. Sampson has thoroughly blockaded the entrance to Santiago harbor and penned Adm. Cervera and his ships inside, he can leave Commodore Schley in front of Santiago with a few ships, and can take the remainder of his fleet to Porto Rico to operate with the military expedition against that island.

Will Hold Porto Rico.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The administration, backed by its most prominent advisor, has, it is said, come to the determination to permanently hold Porto Rico, when it shall have become ours. With Haiti and Cuba as independent republics, with Great Britain controlling Bermuda and Jamaica, and with the United States owning Porto Rico, the West Indies, with the exception of a few smaller islands, would be in safe hands and the gateway to the gulf would be well guarded.

Naval Game in West Indies Seems Played Out—Santiago Invites Capture by Military Action—Cervera's Fleet Will Be Scuttled or Captured.

LONDON, June 6.—All the papers refer in terms of the highest praise to Naval Constructor Hobson's daring exploit at Santiago de Cuba, but some doubts are thrown upon the statement that the Merrimac so completely blocks the channel as the American reports assert.

The Times in an article reviewing the operations of the week says:

"It is most probable that Adm. Cervera has a deliberate intention to stay at Santiago, therefore, to open the channel would be of very little use to him. It seems clear that his squadron was not prepared for war or fit for sea when it left the Cape Verde islands, and there is good reason to doubt whether the Cristobal Colon even shipped her big guns at all.

"Hobson's exploit is one of which the American navy may well be proud. The idea that the wreck can be removed by the use of a little dynamite is opposed to all experience. Madrid describes the affair as a brilliant Spanish victory, but from dreams of such victories there is an unpleasant awakening.

"Adm. Cervera's period of evasion is now ended and, beyond creating an unreasoning panic in America, he has accomplished nothing. The naval game in the West Indies seems played out, and little can be said of it except that events have conformed strictly to law and that no new and expected developments can be traced. Santiago now invites capture by military action, and Adm. Cervera's ships, unless scuttled, can not avoid capture."

The Times, commenting editorially on the exploit, says:

"The perilous operation was executed with splendid gallantry by a little band of volunteers who almost miraculously escaped. The destruction and fall of Santiago are now only a question of time, with the disappearance of all the hopes founded upon the Spanish fleets.

"Spain's sympathizers recognize that her case is hopeless, and America will not distress herself much about such warnings as that of the St. Petersburg Novosti Saturday, until the combination assumes a more tangible form than there is any prospect of at present.

"Peace is at Spain's disposal whenever she seeks it frankly and sincerely, but her game is clearly lost and it is quite out of the question to define as 'honorable peace' one restoring the statu quo."

The Daily Chronicle remarks: Added to the other dangers was the danger of sharks. The incident gives fresh luster to the renown of the American navy.

The Daily News says:

"All English sailors will join with the Americans in admiration of this exploit under the point blank fire of the Spanish batteries. Whether the Merrimac was intended to be sunk or to clear a fair way through the mines can not affect the praise due men who heroically volunteered to face almost certain death in the service of their country. If the United States can count on self-sacrifice of that kind in great emergencies, the Santiago forts will be powerless to prevent Adm. Sampson reaching the Spanish squadron, should that measure seem good to him."

The article proceeds to argue that it is premature however to suppose that the channel is absolutely closed or that it would be impossible to destroy the hulk. It says:

"English torpedo officers could devise many methods of floating out dynamite charges, unless the hulk lies far outside Morro Castle, in which case it can not be blocking the channel completely. If the Merrimac's masts and funnels are still visible, she sunk somewhere near the five fathom mark and has left the deep channel clear."

LEAVE MOBILE.

Five Transports Carrying United States Troops Sailed Under Sealed Orders Amid Scenes of Enthusiasm.

MOBILE, Ala., June 6.—Five transports carrying the 20th infantry, Col. Wheaton; 3rd infantry, Col. Page, and troops A, C, D and F of the 2nd cavalry, steamed down the Mobile river at 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning, en route presumably to Tampa, but really under sealed orders.

The transports are the steamers Matteawan, Stillwater, Breakwater, Arkansas and Morgan.

Scenes of enthusiasm all along the river front where thousands of people had congregated were witnessed. Whistles of all the river and bay craft and mills and ringing of bells kept up an increasing din as long as the transports were in sight.

HERO DEAD.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, commander of the cruiser Olympia, and one of the heroes of the brilliant victory at Manila, is dead. The announcement of his death was received by the navy department late Sunday afternoon in a cablegram from Paymaster Galt, of the navy, dated at Kobe, Japan, June 4, and directed to Secretary Long.

Capt. Gridley is the first American officer of great prominence whose death is a direct result of the existing war with Spain. As the commander of Adm. Dewey's splendid flag ship and one of the Admiral's chief advisors, Capt. Gridley achieved distinction at the battle of Manila bay and added to his previous laurels by winning high praise from his superiors in the service for distinguished gallantry and ability. He fought his ship from the conning tower, while Adm. Dewey directed the movements of his squadron from the bridge of the vessel. It was not known for several weeks after the engagement that Capt. Gridley had suffered from it; and even now the precise nature of his trouble is not disclosed. Upon the arrival of the Zafire at Hong Kong on May 20 the navy department was notified that Capt. Gridley had been condemned by a board of medical survey and "invalided" home. Subsequent advices received by the department indicated that Capt. Gridley was suffering from the effects of a rupture supposed to have been received during the battle at Manila, but no details were given.

Capt. Gridley was born in Logansport, Ind., in 1845, was appointed to the naval academy from Hillsdale, Mich., in 1860 by Representative Henry Waldron, the Gridleys having removed from Indiana to Michigan when their son Charles was only three months old.

NEGRO LYNCHED.

He Criminally Assaulted a Little Girl and Was Taken by a Mob and Hanged to a Tree—Body Bullet-Riddled.

TEXARKANA, Ark., June 4.—Thursday morning little Jessie Scott, daughter of the late Circuit Clerk J. V. Scott, was outraged by a Negro named Hayden near Fairview. He was arrested and lodged in jail Thursday night. At high noon Friday a committee of seven of the best men in this city took Hayden to Mrs. Scott's residence and placed him in the barn where the crime was committed. The young girl was taken to the scene, and upon entering the barn said, "That's the man." He was handed over to the mob. A rope was placed around his neck and the crowd began moving. An opening was made and through the lines the Negro was dragged and everybody hit him as he went. The rope was fixed so it would not choke him and a run made for a tree. Finally the crowd halted at the Iron Mountain crossing and the rope was thrown over the limb of a tree which stood within a few feet of where Ed Coy was burned for a like offense a few years ago. He was then jerked into the air, the rope tied and as the body oscillated it was riddled with bullets.

The crowds increased every minute and an Iron mountain train was held an hour as the crowd refused to get off the track. The body swung from the limb several hours and was viewed by thousands of people.

REMARKABLE CASE.

Wm. Taylor, of the Cruiser New York, Wounded in the Arm, Abdomen, Liver, Lung and Shoulder, Recovers.

NEW YORK, May 6.—One of the remarkable cases brought here by the big ambulance is Wm. Taylor, a Washington boy, and a first-class apprentice on the cruiser New York. Taylor's recovery is the most marvelous of any of those remarked upon by the naval surgeons. One day, soon after the bombardment of Matanzas, through which the men on the New York passed without the slightest injury, a revolver dropped from the belt of Boatswain Mullen and exploded. The bullet passed through Taylor's right arm at the elbow, entered the abdomen, passed up through the liver, grazed the lung and came out through the left shoulder. An operation for laparotomy was performed and Taylor recovered, although naturally he is still suffering from the effects of his multiple wound and the operation.

THE TERROR.

Spanish Torpedo Boat Destroyer, Reported Sunk by American Ships—Believed to Be the Furor.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 6.—A dispatch from Port Antonio says:

"A vessel that has arrived here from Santiago de Cuba reports that the Americans sunk on Friday night the Spanish torpedo boat destroyer Terror."

The assumption, based upon dispatches from Madrid, has been that the destroyer Terror, after leaving Fort de France, went to Porto Rico waters, and it is probable that the Port Antonio dispatch confuses her with her sister destroyer, the Furor, as has several times been the case in dispatches from other points.

Fast Time to Colorado.

A new through Sleeping Car line between St. Louis and Colorado Springs will be established over the Wabash-Rock Island Short Line, May 15th, 1898. The time will be the fastest made with through service between these two points by many hours. A through Sleeper will leave St. Louis on Wabash train No. 3, at 9.20 a. m., arriving at Colorado Springs the next morning at 11.00, with a direct connection for Denver, arriving at 11.30 a. m. This is the fastest regular through service ever established between St. Louis and Colorado. Returning, the Sleeper will leave Colorado Springs at 2.45 p. m., and arrive at St. Louis the next evening at 6.15.

Patrons of this line will avoid the only unpleasant feature heretofore attendant on Colorado travel, inasmuch as the trip through Missouri's fertile fields will now be by daylight, and the unattractive portion of Kansas will be traversed during the night, with the mountain scenery to greet the tourists in the morning.

The fast time of this line will naturally commend the Wabash Route to intending Colorado tourists.

Three Women Relieved of Female Troubles by Mrs. Pinkham.

From Mrs. A. W. SMITH, 59 Summer St., Biddeford, Me.:

"For several years I suffered with various diseases peculiar to my sex. Was troubled with a burning sensation across the small of my back, that all-gone feeling, was despondent, fretful and discouraged; the least exertion tired me. I tried several doctors but received little benefit. At last I decided to give your Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. The effect of the first bottle was magical. Those symptoms of weakness that I was afflicted with, vanished like vapor before the sun. I cannot speak too highly of your valuable remedy. It is truly a boon to woman."

From Mrs. MELISSA PHILLIPS, Lexington, Ind., to Mrs. Pinkham:

"Before I began taking your medicine I had suffered for two years with that tired feeling, headache, backache, no appetite, and a run-down condition of the system. I could not walk across the room. I have taken four bottles of the Vegetable Compound, one box of Liver Pills and used one package of Sanative Wash, and now feel like a new woman, and am able to do my work."

From Mrs. MOLLIE E. HERREL, Powell Station, Tenn.:

A FIERCE BATTLE.

Number of Killed and Wounded on the Spanish Side Was Enormous, No One Double—It is Not Thought Any Americans Were Killed.

NEW YORK, June 2 -An Evening Journal special from Cape Haytien says: The torpedo boat Porter arrived at Mole St. Nicolas at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning with dispatches for Washington. She left immediately. But before going to sea the following story of the bombardment of Santiago de Cuba, the refuge of Cervera and the Spanish fleet, was obtained by your correspondent at the Mole:

The American squadron augumented by the torpedo boat Porter, the auxiliary cruiser St. Paul and the protected cruiser New Orleans approached the entrance to the harbor of Santiago at about 12:30 p.m., the Iowa leading.

Inside the entrance to the harbor was seen one of the war ships of Cervera's fleet, stripped for action.

As the American fleet drew near the New Orleans was detached and steamed forward ahead of the Iowa, Texas and Massachusetts. One of the forts opened fire on her and she replied, the other two ships directing their fire at the battery on the Punta Gorda, which in the harbor and to westward of the position occupied by the Spanish ship.

The latter replied to the fire and immediately became a target for all the American ships engaged in the battle.

She retired behind a protecting headland and was not seen again during the engagement.

The Iowa, directed by Capt. "Fighting Bob" Evans; the Massachusetts, Capt. F. J. Higginson; Texas, Capt. J. W. Phillip, and the New Orleans, Capt. W. M. Folger, kept up their terrific fire against the Morro, Socapa and Punta Gorda forts for two hours, their projectiles, of enormous size, doing tremendous damage to the defenses of the harbor.

The masonry on Socapa and Morro was battered almost into dust, the forms of Spanish artillermen and infantry could be plainly seen flying to safety behind the neighboring hills. The auxilinry cruiser which joined Schley's fleet just before the battle took place was hit by shells from the forts, and it is thought she was seriously damaged.

That the number of killed and wounded on the Spanish side is enormous no one doubts, for time and again the American vessels hit the batteries squarely and amid the flying masonry and dismantled guns the forms of men were descried.

The damage done to the American fleet can not be learned, but is not thought any person was killed—if, indeed, any one was wounded.

PORT AU PRINCE, Hayti, June 2.—According to the intest advices from Santiogo de Cuba, when the Spanish cruiser Christobel Colon emerged from the harbor Tuesday to the entrance of the channel she was welcomed by such a furious fire as soon as the American squadron sighted her, that she was compelled to return into the bay.

The American squadron, which left Santiago waters at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, returned in front of the entrance of the bay Wednesday morning and fired two cannon shots, which are believed to have been a signal arranged with the Cuban troops, massed 6,000 strong, five kilometer (about three miles) from the city. Everybody expects grave events.

KINGSTON, June 2.—The outer forticatlons of Santiago de Cuba are practically in ruins, the once formidable Morro fort being particularly wrecked and Adm. Cervera's flagship battered and charred, with some of her great places broken and her machinery injured, is no longer the dangerous battle craft that crossed the Atlantic.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN.

The War Department Will Send 70,000 Troops to the Island of Cuba—Twenty Thousand to Go at Once.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—For the first time since the beginning of hostilities there appears to be something in the nature of an official statement of the plan of campaign of the United States government. This is contained in a letter of Secretary Alger to the speaker of the house transmitting certain recommendations and statements of Gen. Ludlow which disclosed the purpose of the war department to send 70,000 men to Cuba, 20,000 to start at once and the remainder just as soon as they can be made ready for departure. Then there was an estimate for establishing electrical communications in connection with the army in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines," showing for the first time officially an implied intention on the part of the government to land troops in Porto Rico. Of course all these movements have been anticipated by the press, but, nevertheless, a strong element of doubt existed, and, therefore, an official statement of the government's purposes made even in this indirect fashion created a profound sensation here. The three are to go together, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, and pass into the military occupation of the United States troops. Inasmuch as the secretary says that the second contingent of troops is to go forward as soon as they can be prepared, a good deal of interest attached to an order that was made Wednesday at the war department providing for the organization of the 75,000 additional volunteers called for. The order officially established the statement heretofore made in these dispatches that a large proportion of the new men are to be used to fill up the existing regiments of volunteers, which are in most cases deficient in numbers. It is to be presumed from Wednesday's order that the volunteer regiments collected under the first call will be detained until they are filled up in this fashion so that the order has some bearing upon the plan of campaign.

An additional evidence that the actual forward movement of the army and navy has begun was given in the action of the foreign naval and military observers. They have been sojourning leisurely in Washington for some time, but within the last week all of them have started for Florida. The British naval and military attache were the first to leave, and now they have been followed by the German, Austrian, Russian, Swedish, Norwegian and Japanese observers.

SCHLEY JOINED BY SAMPSON.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 2.—Developments of a most decisive nature are expected at Santiago within the next few hours. When the dispatch boat which left the scene of Tuesday's engagement reached this place it was learned that preparations had been made for another attack upon the forts and Cervera's Spanish ships.

It was stated that Adm. Sampson's squadron, including the formidable battle ship Oregon, was expected to reach Santiago Thursday to re-enforce Commodore Schley. From late advices which have been received however, it is now believed that the combined fleets are preparing to force an entrance to Santiago harbor and destroy or capture the Spanish armada which is now bottled up there.

The information brought by the boat to the effect that Sampson, with the Oregon and the other vessels of the fleet, would arrive Thursday places the stamp of truth upon the story which reached here Wednesday night from Santiago to the effect that the fleet of American warships is lined up for action against Santiago.

British General Assaulted by Spaniards.

LONDON, June 2.—A mob of Spaniards, according to a dispatch from Gibraltar, assaulted and stoned Maj. Gen. J. B. Richardson, commander of the royal artillery at Gibraltar, and another Englishman while they were walking at San Roque, seven miles northwest of Gibraltar.

The 34th Michigan Receive Orders.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The 34th regiment of Michigan volunteers have been ordered by telegraph by Adjt. Gen. Corbin to proceed to Camp Alger, Va., for duty under command of Maj. Gen. Graham, of the 2nd army corps.

LEAVE FOR TAMPA.

The 157th Indiana, 1st Ohio, 1st District of Columbia and 3d New York—More Will Follow on Thursday.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 2.—The first of the volunteer infantry ordered from Chickamauga to Tampa got away Wednesday. The regiments which left were the 157th Indiana, 1st Ohio, 1st District of Columbia, and 3d New York. Thursday the 3d Pennsylvania, 1st Illinois, 5th Maryland and 69th New York will leave. No other regiments are under orders to move, but the posted army officers intimate that more orders may be expected in the near future.

The 2d New York, under Col. E. G. Hardin, left camp at 5 o'clock and marched five miles to Rossville station, where Southern railway trains were taken. This regiment had been in camp in Chickamauga since May 20 and was one of the best drilled and best equipped there. Col. Hardin, its commander, was formerly a regular army officer, and is a skilled drill master. The regiment is composed of companies from the following cities in the Empire state: Troy, Cohoes, Schenectady, Saratoga, Hoosac Falls, Whitehall, Mohawk, Poughkeepsie and Amsterdam.

The next regiment to leave camp was the 1st Ohio which started on a nine mile march to Ringgold, Ga., at 6 o'clock. It boarded special Western & Atlantic trains at Ringgold about 9 o'clock. The regiment has been at Chickamauga since May 15. It is well drilled and fairly well equipped. Col. C. B. Hunt is in command.

The 157th Indiana left came at 9 o'clock and marched to Ringgold, where Western & Atlantic trains were boarded.

This regiment had been in camp in Chickamauga since May 16. It is fairly well equipped and unusually well drilled. It has a good hospital corps and a band of 23 pieces.

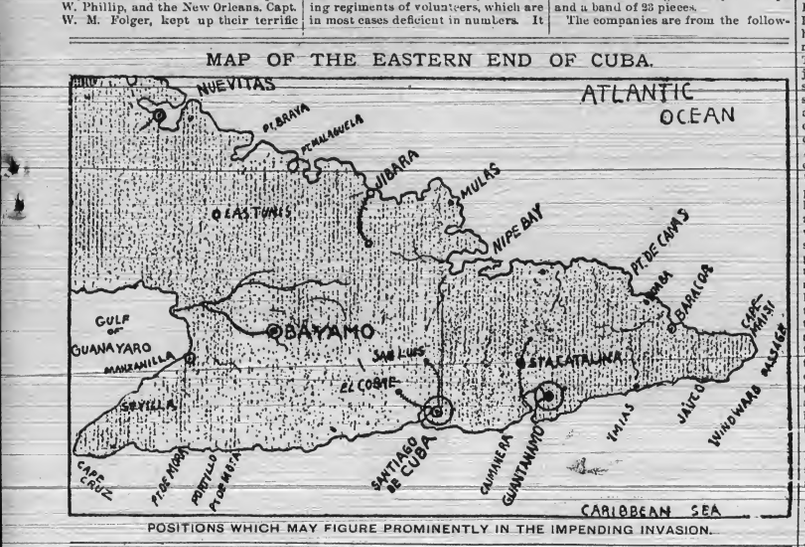
The companies are from the following Indiana towns: South Bend, Angola, Auburn, Waterloo, Fort Wayne, North Manchester, Ligonier, Elkhart, Plymouth, Knox and Goshen. Col. Geo. M. Studebaker is one of the youngest colonels in the army, being but 35 years of age.

The 1st District of Columbia left camp at 9 o'clock and marched to Roasville, where Southern railway trains were taken for Tampa. This regiment is composed of 1,050 men from Washington under Col. George Harries. It has been camped in the park since May 23 and thoroughly equipped and well drilled.

The 1st regiment Illinois cavalry arrived Wednesday morning on three trains over the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad. The command numbers 1,018 officers and men under Col. E. C. Young. With the exception of horses the men are well equipped.

Arrangements have been made to supply the horses and get the command in hard training during the next few days. Notwithstanding the fact that 4,000 volunteers left Wednesday morning there are still about 43,000 here. The order issued to recruit all the regiments to the standard of 1,307 men will largely increase the number and with the constant arrivals will keep the army near the 50,000 mark.

Wrecked a Block House.



KEY WEST, Fla., June 2.—The United States auxiliary gunboat Uncas arrived here Wednesday morning from the Cuban coast. She reports that on Monday last, when about a mile and a half west of Mutanzas lighthouse she sighted a Spanish blockhouse on shore. Taking up as position about 600 yards off shore, the Uncas fired two shots at the house and the two shells went clear through the building, which was wrecked. During the firing the auxiliary gunboat Leyden came up and also fired a couple of shots. It is not known whether any Spaniards were killed, but they probably fled at the first shot. The blockhouse made no reply.

Spain's Dilemma.

MADRID, June 2.—The attention of the public Wednesday was absorbed in the condition of the Bank of Spain which is considered more serious than any reverse of the war, inasmuch as the impossibility of the bank to help the government means impossibility to continue the war.

Spanish Ship Captured.

KEY WEST, Fla., June 2.—Commodore Watson received news that the St. Paul has captured the Alphonso XIII., a transport and mail ship. It was necessary to put 17 shots into the Alphonso before she surrendered.

POSITIONS WHICH MAY FIGURE PROMINENTLY IN THE IMPENDING INVASION.

A BOLD DEED.

Volunteer Crew Scuttles the Merrimac in the Mouth of Santiago Harbor.

The Heroes Attempted to Return But Under Heavy Fire Compelled to Row to the Spanish Flag Ship—They Will Be Exchanged.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—"The cork is driven in the bottle," was the comment of the naval officers at the navy department Saturday morning upon the news of the sinking of the collier Merrimac in the channel at the entrance of Santiago harbor.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 6.—Hobson and the hero crew of the Merrimac were saved in the following manner:

Unable, after the sinking of their vessel, to make their way back through the [illegible] of shot and shell, they were compelled to abandon the harbor and were picked up by the Spanish steamer Vizcaya and were taken on board unhurt. The Spanish admiral under a flag of truce on Friday sent word to the American admiral that he offered to exchange the prisoners, adding, that in the meanwhile Hobson and his party would be treated with the greatest kindness.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Information comes from the white house that the secretary of the navy has received a dispatch from Adm. Sampson stating that the Merrimac was sunk in the channel off Santiago harbor for the purpose blocking the passage.

ON BOARD DISPATCH BOAT DAUNTLESS, OFF SANTIAGO DE CUBA, June 6.—Via Kingston, Jamaica.—Rr. Adm. Sampson, during Friday morning decided to close the narrow harbor entrance of Santiago de Cuba by sinking the collier Merrimac, loaded with coal, in the channel. He called for volunteers to go to almost certain death and 4,000 men offered themselves. Lieut. Hobson and six men were chosen, and Friday morning the Merrimac, under her own steam, entered the channel under a terrible Spanish fire. The vessel was riddled with projectiles, but she anchored and swung around. Lieut. Hobson then set off an internal torpedo with an electric attachment, there was an explosion, the Merrimac sank, the channel was closed, and, apparently, Adm. Cervera will be unable to escape.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The war department was open for business in a limited way for half the day Sunday, and Adjt. Gen. Corbin was hard at work at his desk in telegraphic correspondence with army officers in all parts of the country and particularly regarding the Spanish military prisoners from whom selections will be made for exchange of the gallant little band that sunk the Merrimac. The commanding officer at Fort McPherson, Ga., has furnished the department a full list of the captives to facilitate the work of exchange. This is likely to occupy more time than was originally expected because of the difficulty of communicating with the Spanish admiral at Santiago.

Information afforded by the official records of the navy department as to the full names and antecedents of the gallant sailors who made up Hobson's little crew in sinking the Merrimac differs in some essentials from the data furnished through the dispatch boats Sunday morning. The naval list is about as follows:

Daniel Montage, first-class machinist on the New York, born in Ireland and 29 years old; last enlistment in December, 1896; next of kin Kate Goldsm. sister, 84 Horatio street, New York.

George Charette, first-class gunner's mate on the New York, born in Lowell, Mass., 29 years of age; last enlistment May 20, 1898; has been in the service since 1884; his next of kin is Alexander Charette, father, Lowell, Mass.

Osborn (not Oscar) Deignan, coxswain on the Merrimac, born in Stuart, Ia., 21 years old; last enlistment April 22, 1898; next of kin Julia Deignan, mother, Stuart, Ia.

George F. (not John P.) Phillips, machinist on the Merrimac, born in Boston, 34 years old; last enlistment March 30, 1898; next of kin Andrew Phillips, Cambridgeport, Mass.

Francis (probably instead of John) Kelly, water tender on the Merrimac, born in Boston, 28 years old; enlisted at Norfolk April 11, last; next of kin, Francis Kelly, Boston.

Randolph Clausen, coxswain on the New York; born in Boston and 28 years of age; last enlistment February 25, 1897; next of kin, Teresa Clausen, wife, 127 Cherry street, New York.

It is apparent to the department officials that the call for volunteers did not extend beyond the two ships, New York and Merrimac, as all the men named belonged to those two vessels.

Great admiration is expressed at the department at the cool pluck and discretion shown by the young cadet, George W. Powell, who took command of the New York's steam launch and lay under the batteries for many hours until he was satisfied from his own observation that the Merrimac had gone down before he returned to the flagship. It is felt that his fate involved a display of quite as much courage as was shown by the Merrimac crew and he is likely to profit by it.

Hobson to Be Promoted.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—It was stated Sunday night at the white house that the recommendation of the president as to the promotion of Junior Lieut. Hobson would not be sent to congress before Tuesday. By that time it is expected that the arrangements for the exchange of the prisoners will have been concluded.

The Alfred Arrives at Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 6.—The American steam yacht Alfred, from the great lakes, bound to New York, having been secured by the United States government, arrived Sunday for coal.

PEACE TALK.

Tentative Proposition Made to Ambassador Hay By the Spanish Minister—Under Consideration.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—Peace, with profit to the United States and also permitting Spain to save the fragments of her national honer, may come at any time. The Spanish government has had all the trouble it cares for, and is already indirectly negotiating for a cessation of hostilities. A senator is authority for this statement. He is not one of the statesmen who ayndicated to head off war, and just now his chief sentiment seems to be one of fear that hostilities may be terminated before this country has time to conquer sufficient territory to recoup itself for the expenses of the combat.

"The Spanish ambassador at London, Count De Rascon, has made overtures for peace negotiations to the American ambassador," asserted a member of a foreign legation to a correspondent.

"I might be more correct," he continued, "Count De Rascon is endeavoring to ascertain through the American embassy what the official feeling in this country is on the subject of settlement. De Rascon, of course, could make no direct propositions to Mr. Hay, nor could the latter make official response. De Rascon's evident instructions are to get some idea of what terms his government can make. I have heard also that Mr. Hay has informed the state department of the Spanish ambassador's desire to gain information."

At the state department it was said that Ambassador Hay had made no report on [illegible] of mind nor touching [illegible] of knowledge.

The cabinet [illegible] terms of peace. Several [illegible]ek, in the conferences at t[illegible]se, plans of war have been la[illegible] for the consideration of the [illegible]ions upon which the country will [illegible] willing to cease hostilities. Th[illegible] impression that Spain is sue for peace after a signal defeat strengthens every day.

Porto Rico is to be taken as the indemnity for the war and for the $50,000,000 claims of American citizens. This is one of the terms of the coming treaty that may be regarded as settled. Estimates of the probable cost of the war vary, but $500,000,000 is an average amount. For this and the claims of the Americans the United States will take Porto Rico, it being taken for granted any money indemnity is out of the question, in view of Spain's impoverished condition.

As to the ultimate disposition of the Philippines some consideration is being given. Only one point about that question may be considered settled. It is that, whatever the United States may decide to do about the islands as a whole, this government will retain possession of a good harbor and of sufficient territory for a coaling station and a naval base. It is not at all certain that the conclusion may not be to hold permanently the harbor and city of Manila under the flag of the United States and let the rest of the Philippines go.

THE CADIZ FLEET.

It is Reported to Have Sailed, But Date of Sailing and Destination is Not Made Known.

GIBRALTAR, June 4.—It is announced here that the Spanish Cadiz squadron has sailed, but the date of its sailing was not mentioned nor was the destination of the war ships given.

According to reports, the Cadiz fleet of Spain consists of the battle ship Pelaic, the armored cruisers Carlos V. and Alfonso XIII., the auxiliary cruisers Rapido and Patriota, the cruisers Ciudad de Cadiz, Leon XIII., Buenos Ayres and Antonio Lopez, several auxiliary cruisers of a smaller type than the Rapido and the Patriota, the torpedo destroyers Andaz, Prosperina and Destructor, and possibly the armored cruiser Cardenal de Cisneros. But so many misleading reports regarding the composition and strength of the Cadiz fleet have been circulated that it is almost impossible to refer to its composition in more than general terms. However, there is only one battle ship in the Spanish fleet, and ship is not very formidable.

On the Straight Road to Perdition.

LONDON, June 4.—According to a dispatch from Madrid, El Heraldo, with regard to the situation at Santiago de Cuba, says: "It is one more disenchantment which proves that there is no remedy for Spain's misfortunes. Cervera's aquadron at Santiago is of little advantage either for itself or for what it represents. It can neither hinder the Yankee expedition nor strengthen the defense of Havana. Spain was never before led through such a straight road to perdition."

Second Philippine Expedition.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4.—The second expedition to the Philippines will probably get under way next Tuesday or Wednesday. It will not reach the proportions at first anticipated, owing to the fact that the five vessels which were to have made up the little fleet of transports are not ready, nor will any of them be ready by the time stated unless the government hurries the supplies which have been decided upon to make up the cargoes of the vessels.

Yellow Fever on Shipboard.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Two cases of yellow fever developed on board the Lamport and Holt steamer Garrick, on her voyage from South American ports, which terminated here Friday. A fireman named Wilhelm Collins died of the fever on May 12 and was buried at Victoria. At Bahia on May 17 Y. Hansen, a seaman, was taken ill, but recovered, and on the arrival of the Garrick here he was sent to Swinburne island to convalesce. Capt. Black, of the steamer Hogarth, who was left in the hospital at Santos, ill of yellow fever, died on May 7, according to reports brought by the Garrick.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—SENATE—Another day has been passed by the senate in a fruitless discussion of the war revenue measure. Not the slightest material progress was made at Tuesday's session towards disposing of the bill. Speeches were made by Mr. Mason (rep. Ill.), Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.) and Mr. Elkins (rep. W. Va.). Mr. Mason strongly advocated an amendment to the bill placing a tax upon wheat flour adulterated either with clay or with corn flour, and presented a long statement by the National Association of American Millers in support of his contention. Evidently believing this not a proper subject for public discussion, Mr. Vest (dem., Ind.) forced a secret legislative session. In the open session that followed Mr. Elkins discussed the general features of the pending bill, opposing the corporation tax, the tax on bank deposits, and the issue of greenbacks, and strongly advocating the issue of bonds.

HOUSE—The house Tuesday passed a bill authorizing the construction of a railway bridge across Lake St. Francis, near Lake City, Ark. Also a concurrent resolution directing the commission now codifying the criminal laws to prepare and submit a code of civil law and procedure for Alaska. A number of private bills were passed and the house in committee of the whole considered a bill authorizing the secretary of the treasury to keep open during June and July this year the life saving stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts as he might deem advisable. The bill was urged by the secretary of the navy as providing for the continuance in the months named of an important adjunct to the naval and coast signal service in making efficient the patrol of the coast after some desultory discussion the bill was amended to carry $70,000 instead of $125,000 and passed. The house, at 1:35 p. m., adjourned.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—SENATE—Marked progress was made by the senate Wednesday towards the final disposition of the war revenue measure. The committee amendments on nearly two-thirds of the bill were passed upon and the senate nearly reached the principal questions at issue between the contending parties. These remaining questions have already been discussed pretty thoroughly, and aside from a few set speeches yet to be delivered, will not arouse probably more than a disultory debate. The interest of the session centered in the action taken upon the amendment of Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.) levying a tax of one-quarter of one per cent. upon the gross receipts of all corporations doing a business exceeding $250,000 a year.

HOUSE—The senate bill to remove the disabilities imposed by the 14th article of the United States constitution framed in 1861 passed the house Wednesday by a unanimous vote. In the course of a brief speech supporting the bill Mr. Linney (rep., N. C.), paid a tribute to the late Ensign Worth Bagley, who died at Manila, "a name not the noblest heroes." Messrs. Simpson (pop., Kan.) and Broderick (rep., Kan.) supported the bill. Mr. Cannon (rep., Ill.) also spoke for the bill, and it was passed unanimously. The house adjourned at 2:32 o'clock p. m.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—SENATE—When the senate adjourned Thursday evening the war revenue measure, so far as the finance committee is concerned, was completed, with the exception of the bond provision and the amendments proposed by the democrats in lieu of the bond paragraph. While no agreement was reached fixing a time for the taking of a final vote upon the bill, it was the expressed opinion on both sides of the chamber that a vote would be taken Friday before adjournment. Mr. Allison, (rep., Ia.) in charge of the measure, announced that he would ask the senate to remain in session Friday until a vote was reached. All of the committee amendments, except those noted, were agreed to Thursday afternoon. Several efforts were made to amend or eliminate the committee amendments, but the efforts in each case were unsuccessful. Mr. Butler (pop., N. C.) had the floor for three hours and a half. Within 15 minutes after he began to speak he brought on a general political engagement which lasted for more than an hour. The debate, which was heated and at times decidedly personal, turned upon the amount of money spent by the republican managers in the presidential campaign of 1896. Senators on both sides of the chamber were brought into the debate and a good deal of ill-feeling was manifested.

HOUSE—The house practically wiped the slate passed Thursday the urgency deficiency bill providing for emergency expenses of the army and navy departments incident to the war. It was based upon estimates received recently from the departments and carried items contemplated in the Philippine expedition and the early movements upon Cuba.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—SENATE—While the war revenue measure was not passed by the senate Friday, two very important votes were taken, one on a proposition to coin the silver bullion in the treasury and to issue silver certificates against the coin, and the other on the bond proposition presented by the republican minority of the committee on finance. In lieu of the seigniorage amendment offered by the majority of the finance committee, Mr Wolcott (rep., Col.) proposed an amendment directing the secretary of the treasury to coin the silver bullion in the treasury and to issue silver certificates against it. After some discussion a vote was reached and the amendment was agreed to 48 to 31, several republicans voting for it. Mr. Morrill (rep., Kan.) then pressed the amendment of the minority of the finance committee, providing for the issue of one hundred millions of certificates of indebtedness and three hundred millions of bonds, to be used exclusively for the payment of the expenses of the war. After an extended debate, the question was brought to an issue and by a decisive vote of 48 to 31 the bond amendment was incorporated in the bill, as a substitute for the amendment to issue legal tender notes.

HOUSE—The house Friday consumed much time, but without result, considering a bill to authorize the president to restore to his rank and duty Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster in the army, who was suspended in 1890 and lost pay until 1894 through court-martial proceedings and executive action. Mr. Talbert (dem., S. C.) by unanimous consent proceeded to speak 20 minutes in favor of the bond bill, as proposed in the revenue bill. Forty-nine private pension and relief bills were passed and at 2:40 o'clock p. m. the house took recess until 8 p. m.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—SENATE—At 7:05 o'clock Saturday evening the war revenue bill passed the senate. An amendment to place a duty of one cent per pound on tea imported into the United States was adopted, also an amendment providing for a tax graduated according to price upon all articles sold under a patent right, trade mark or copyright not open to general use and which are not otherwise taxed by the bill. Through an amendment offered by Lindsay (dem., Ky.) the senate decided not to place a stamp tax upon bundles of cigars, wholly or partially printed, which weigh less than 100 pounds. A tax of four cents a barrel was placed on adulterated flour, and a stamp tax of one cent on every ticket entitling the holder to a seat in a palace or parlor car or berth in a sleeping car, the company selling the seat or berth being required to affix the stamp. The income tax was defeated. Mr. Allen moved that the senate insist upon its amendments and that the conferees be appointed. The motion was agreed to and Messrs. Allison, Aldrich and Jones (Ark.) were named as conferees. The measure now goes back to the house.

Elephant Keeper Killed.

RACINE, Wis., June 4.—Joe Anderson, the elephant keeper with Wallace Bros.' circus, was killed here Friday by one of the elephants that became ugly. The animal broke away and chased the whole police force and an excited crowd of citizens.

Reinforcements for Cervera.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 4.—The correspondent here of the Associated Press has been informed from an apparently authentic source at Port Antonio that a Spanish fleet of 18 war ships will be off Santiago de Cuba Friday to reinforce Adm. Cervera.

Twenty thousand men are enlisted in the United States navy and the number will go to 35,000 if the war continues.

Portugal has just celebrated the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Cape route to India by its great navigator, Vasco da Gama.

Since trouble with Spain arose the fact has come to public notice that Horatio J. Sprague has been United States consul at Gibraltar for 50 years.

Among the novelties to be exhibited at the Paris exposition in 1900 will be a monster horn, nearly 300 feet in diameter at the large end, and of proportionate length.

It is not generally known that Admiral Cervera, the commander of the Spanish fleet at Santiago de Cuba, was formerly a naval attache at Washington. He represented the government in that city about 15 years ago.

Since the death of Gladstone Senator Justin Smith Morrill, of Vermont, is the oldest living English-speaking statesman. He was born April 14, 1810, and his length of service exceeds that of any other American statesman.

Admiral Dewey will be amused and frequently surprised when he reads all the anecdotes related of him by old acquaintances. One of the penalties of fame is to be called on to father incidents that never happened or that happened to somebody else.

It is likely that Adelina Patti is at present following the course of events in Cuba with much interest. It was there that she sang in public for the first time in her life, being then 14 years of age. She appeared at a concert and her success was complete.

Among the curious things which remain in the memory of Mrs. Nancy P. Knights, of Woburn, Mass., who recently celebrated her ninety-third birthday, is the phenomenally cold summer of 1816. In May there was half an inch of ice, snow four inches deep occurred in June, and ice formed in July and August.

The family of Admiral Sampson lives in Glen Ridge, N. J. The members of it are Mrs. Sampson, two stepdaughters, Olive and Hannah, and two sons, Ralph and Harold. Two daughters are married—Margaret, to Lieut. Roy C. Smith, of the Indiana, and Kate, to Ensign R. H. Jackson, commanding the torpedo boat Foote.

Maria Christina, queen regent of Spain, is very tall, fair, extremely graceful, just 40 years of age, but looking younger, with the most engaging manners. She knows everything that is going on, reading all the newspapers, interested not only in Spanish affairs, but in everything of importance passing in Europe.

A census was taken lately in Algeria, and it was found that the youngest Arab married man was 12 years old, and that there were many boys who were married at 13 and 14, while some at 15 had several wives. There is a youthful Algerian widower of 15, and a divorced husband of the same age. Girls are still more precocious, and are sometimes married when only 11 years old, though 12 is the more usual age.

Frank James, the one-time noted Missouri bandit, slipped into a St. Louis photograph gallery the other day and faced the camera for the first time in 25 years. In the days of his outlawry a reward of $500 was offered by detectives for his likeness, but Frank was shy. One day, however, he had a tintype taken in a country town. It fell into the hands of officers and caused James some trouble, and until a day or two ago, he never entered a photographer's.

It is said that a rolling stone gathers no moss. As a matter of fact it is the rolling stone that keeps the world on the move. The man who sits down in the spot where he happens to find himself and goes to gathering moss contributes nothing to the bustle, the activity, the well-directed energy that goes to make the prosperity of a country. Inventions, discoveries, commerce, science, art and literature get no assistance from the stone that never rolls. It is the rolling stone that discovers, invents, produces.

When the war with Spain began the price of sulphur was $22 a ton, but as the result of Spain's action in declaring this article contraband of war the price has risen to $35 a ton, and predictions are freely made that it will be $100 before many more months have passed. Here is an opportunity to develop another of the wonderful resources of the United States. There are sulphur mines in this country; yet we have always depended upon Sicily for practically our entire supply. The American product should now be given a great chance. "There's millions in it."

The mouth of the harbor is about a quarter of a mile across. There is a deep-water channel (5 to 50 fathoms) up to Point Le Cruz, beyond which point, up to the city of Santiago de Cuba, which lies eight miles from the mouth of the harbor, soundings show a succession of shoals and five-fathom channels.

An American vessel, the Merrimac, described in the advices from Santiago de Cuba as an auxiliary cruiser, making a dash to force the entrance, succeeded in passing the first line of defenses, but was torpedoed about five hundred feet up the channel.

She went down "perpendicularly" (a pic). An officer, an engineer and six seamen were taken prisoners. The number of victims is unknown.

Only the funnel and mastheads of the sunken vessel can be seen.

There is great excitement in the city. A part of the population assisted in the fighting on the heights. Everybody is astounded at the audacity of the American vessel.

The American squadron was cruising all the while in the offing.

CAPE HAYTIEN, Hayti, June 4.—The American fleet, according to advices received by cable from Santiago de Cuba, the cable being under Spanish control, opened fire again at 3 o'clock Friday morning on the fortifications and war ships.

The cannonading was well sustained until 4 o'clock a. m.

One of the United States auxiliary cruisers "well armed" attempted to force the passage into the harbor.

The Spanish allowed the cruiser to cross the first line of torpedoes, but before she arrived at the second line they discharged at her a torpedo, which broke a great hole in her side and caused her to sink almost instantly, bow first.

The name of the vessel is not known, nor is the number of victims reported.

One officer, one engineer and six sailors were made prisoners.

A dispatch from Santiago says that the vessel sunk is understood to be the Merrimac. Only the extremities of her funnel and two masts are visible above the water.

The Santiago advices to Capo Haytien, in referring to the sunken vessel as auxiliary cruiser, probably mistake her character. The Merrimac is a collier and always has been a collier.

(It will be noted that there is an important discrepancy as to the time at which the bombardment is said to have begun Friday morning between the dispatches from Cape Haytien and Port au Prince, the former saying 3 o'clock and the latter 5. It is possible that this arises from a confusion between the figures 3 and 8).

BALTIMORE, June 4.—The Merrimac was purchased by the government from the Lone Star Steamship Co. The transfer was made in this city early in April. She was formerly the Norwegian steamer Solveig, and was nearly destroyed by fire at Newport News in 1896. She was built at Newcastle, Eng., in 1894, was 330 feet long, 44 feet beam and had a net register of 2,193 tons. The Merrimac left Norfolk where she was fitted for government purposes about a month ago.

CAPE HAITIEN, Haiti, June 4.—A second dispatch from Santiago de Cuba states that it is believed that the Merrimac was sent into the neck of the harbor by Sampson for the purpose of closing the port ... to prevent the escape of the ... squadron. From information ... conveyed to the prisoners it is ... they volunteered for this ... rous work and that none perished, as they were prepared for the explosion when it occurred.

NEW YORK, June 4.—A Washington dispatch to the New York Herald says:

No official information has been received at the navy department of the report that the collier Merrimac had been sunk in the entrance to Santiago harbor. The officials of the navy department however, are of the opinion that the cablegram from Porto Rico is correct, and that Adm. Sampson has taken effective means to prevent the Spanish fleet from giving him the slip and running out under cover of a dark and rainy night before the land forces can reach Santiago and co-operate with him in the contemplated land and sea operations. It is thought probable that he engaged the shore batteries with the guns of his fleet

Will Hold Porto Rico.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The administration, backed by its most prominent advisor, has, it is said, come to the determination to permanently hold Porto Rico, when it shall have become ours. With Haiti and Cuba as independent republics, with Great Britain controlling Bermuda and Jamaica, and with the United States owning Porto Rico, the West Indies, with the exception of a few smaller islands, would be in safe hands and the gateway to the gulf would be well guarded.

Drowned in Chickamauga Creek.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 4.—Ronald McDonald, private, 1st Missouri infantry, of St. Louis, was drowned while bathing in Chickamauga creek, making the fifth man who has been drowned in the same waters. His body is lying in an undertaking establishment in this city and no directions have yet been given as to its disposition.

London Papers Comment on the Daring Deed of Lieut. Hobson and Men.

Naval Game in West Indies Seems Played Out—Santiago Invites Capture by Military Action—Cervera's Fleet Will Be Scuttled or Captured.

LONDON, June 6.—All the papers refer in terms of the highest praise to Naval Constructor Hobson's daring exploit at Santiago de Cuba, but some doubts are thrown upon the statement that the Merrimac so completely blocks the channel as the American reports assert.

The Times in an article reviewing the operations of the week says:

"It is most probable that Adm. Cervera has a deliberate intention to stay at Santiago, therefore, to open the channel would be of very little use to him. It seems clear that his squadron was not prepared for war or fit for sea when it left the Cape Verde islands, and there is good reason to doubt whether the Cristobal Colon even shipped her big guns at all.

"Hobson's exploit is one of which the American navy may well be proud. The idea that the wreck can be removed by the use of a little dynamite is opposed to all experience. Madrid describes the affair as a brilliant Spanish victory, but from dreams of such victories there is an unpleasant awakening.

"Adm. Cervera's period of evasion is now ended and, beyond creating an unreasoning panic in America, he has accomplished nothing. The naval game in the West Indies seems played out, and little can be said of it except that events have conformed strictly to law and that no new and expected developments can be traced. Santiago now invites capture by military action, and Adm. Cervera's ships, unless scuttled, can not avoid capture."

The Times, commenting editorially on the exploit, says:

"The perilous operation was executed with splendid gallantry by a little band of volunteers who almost miraculously escaped. The destruction and fall of Santiago are now only a question of time, with the disappearance of all the hopes founded upon the Spanish fleets.

"Spain's sympathizers recognize that her case is hopeless, and America will not distress herself much about such warnings as that of the St. Petersburg Novosti Saturday, until the combination assumes a more tangible form than there is any prospect of at present.

"Peace is at Spain's disposal whenever she seeks it frankly and sincerely, but her game is clearly lost and it is quite out of the question to define as 'honorable peace' one restoring the statu quo."

The Daily Chronicle remarks: Added to the other dangers was the danger of sharks. The incident gives fresh luster to the renown of the American navy.

The Daily News says:

"All English sailors will join with the Americans in admiration of this exploit under the point blank fire of the Spanish batteries. Whether the Merrimac was intended to be sunk or to clear a fair way through the mines can not affect the praise due men who heroically volunteered to face almost certain death in the service of their country. If the United States can count on self-sacrifice of that kind in great emergencies, the Santiago forts will be powerless to prevent Adm. Sampson reaching the Spanish squadron, should that measure seem good to him."

The article proceeds to argue that it is premature however to suppose that the channel is absolutely closed or that it would be impossible to destroy the hulk. It says:

"English torpedo officers could devise many methods of floating out dynamite charges, unless the hulk lies far outside Morro Castle, in which case it can not be blocking the channel completely. If the Merrimac's masts and funnels are still visible, she sunk somewhere near the five fathom mark and has left the deep channel clear."

LEAVE MOBILE.

MOBILE, Ala., June 6.—Five transports carrying the 20th infantry, Col. Wheaton; 3rd infantry, Col. Page, and troops A, C, D and F of the 2nd cavalry, steamed down the Mobile river at 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning, en route presumably to Tampa, but really under sealed orders.

Scenes of enthusiasm all along the river front where thousands of people had congregated were witnessed. Whistles of all the river and bay craft and mills and ringing of bells kept up an increasing din as long as the transports were in sight.

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., June 6.—Dr. W. B. Graham, while driving in the country three miles west of this city at noon, saw a very bright meteor descend in the southeast. COMMODORE DEAD.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, commander of the cruiser Olympia, and one of the heroes of the brilliant victory at Manila, is dead. The announcement of his death was received by the navy department late Sunday afternoon in a cablegram from Paymaster Galt, of the navy, dated at Kobe, Japan, June 4, and directed to Secretary Long.

Capt. Gridley is the first American officer of great prominence whose death is a direct result of the existing war with Spain. As the commander of Adm. Dewey's splendid flag ship and one of the Admiral's chief advisors, Capt. Gridley achieved distinction at the battle of Manila bay and added to his previous laurels by winning high praise from his superiors in the service for distinguished gallantry and ability. He fought his ship from the conning tower, while Adm. Dewey directed the movements of his squadron from the bridge of the vessel. It was not known for several weeks after the engagement that Capt. Gridley had suffered from it; and even now the precise nature of his trouble is not disclosed. Upon the arrival of the Zafire at Hong Kong on May 20 the navy department was notified that Capt. Gridley had been condemned by a board of medical survey and "invalided" home. Subsequent advices received by the department indicated that Capt. Gridley was suffering from the effects of a rupture supposed to have been received during the battle at Manila, but no details were given.

Capt. Gridley was born in Logansport, Ind., in 1845, was appointed to the naval academy from Hillsdale, Mich., in 1860 by Representative Henry Waldron, the Gridleys having removed from Indiana to Michigan when their son Charles was only three months old.

NEGRO LYNCHED.

He Criminally Assaulted a Little Girl and Was Taken by a Mob and Hanged to a Tree—Body Bullet-Riddled.

TEXARKANA, Ark., June 4.—Thursday morning little Jessie Scott, daughter of the late Circuit Clerk J. V. Scott, was outraged by a Negro named Hayden near Fairview. He was arrested and lodged in jail Thursday night. At high noon Friday a committee of seven of the best men in this city took Hayden to Mrs. Scott's residence and placed him in the barn where the crime was committed. The young girl was taken to the scene, and upon entering the barn said, "That's the man." He was handed over to the mob. A rope was placed around his neck and the crowd began moving. An opening was made and through the lines the Negro was dragged and everybody hit him as he went. The rope was fixed so it would not choke him and a run made for a tree. Finally the crowd halted at the Iron Mountain crossing and the rope was thrown over the limb of a tree which stood within a few feet of where Ed Coy was burned for a like offense a few years ago. He was then jerked into the air, the rope tied and as the body oscillated it was riddled with bullets.

The crowds increased every minute and an Iron mountain train was held an hour as the crowd refused to get off the track. The body swung from the limb several hours and was viewed by thousands of people.

REMARKABLE CASE.

Wm. Taylor, of the Cruiser New York, Wounded in the Arm, Abdomen, Liver, Lung and Shoulder, Recovers.

NEW YORK, May 6.—One of the remarkable cases brought here by the big ambulance is Wm. Taylor, a Washington boy, and a first-class apprentice on the cruiser New York. Taylor's recovery is the most marvelous of any of those remarked upon by the naval surgeons. One day, soon after the bombardment of Matanzas, through which the men on the New York passed without the slightest injury, a revolver dropped from the belt of Boatswain Mullen and exploded. The bullet passed through Taylor's right arm at the elbow, entered the abdomen, passed up through the liver, grazed the lung and came out through the left shoulder. An operation for laparotomy was performed and Taylor recovered, although naturally he is still suffering from the effects of his multiple wound and the operation.

THE TERROR.

Spanish Torpedo Boat Destroyer, Reported Sunk by American Ships—Believed to Be the Furor.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 6.—A dispatch from Port Antonio says:

"A vessel that has arrived here from Santiago de Cuba reports that the Americans sunk on Friday night the Spanish torpedo boat destroyer Terror."

The assumption, based upon dispatches from Madrid, has been that the destroyer Terror, after leaving Fort de France, went to Porto Rico waters, and it is probable that the Port Antonio dispatch confuses her with her sister destroyer, the Furor, as has several times been the case in dispatches from other points.

Legal Wit.

"What's the matter there?" said the judge to the defendant in the suit, who had just been released from the witness stand, and was rummaging amongst the jury.

"I've lost my hat," replied the defendant, in an injured tone.

Fast Time to Colorado.

A new through Sleeping Car line between St. Louis and Colorado Springs will be established over the Wabash-Rock Island Short Line, May 15th, 1898. The time will be the fastest made with through service between these two points by many hours. A through Sleeper will leave St. Louis on Wabash train No. 3, at 9.20 a. m., arriving at Colorado Springs the next morning at 11.00, with a direct connection for Denver, arriving at 11.30 a. m. This is the fastest regular through service ever established between St. Louis and Colorado. Returning, the Sleeper will leave Colorado Springs at 2.45 p. m., and arrive at St. Louis the next evening at 6.15.

Patrons of this line will avoid the only unpleasant feature heretofore attendant on Colorado travel, inasmuch as the trip through Missouri's fertile fields will now be by daylight, and the unattractive portion of Kansas will be traversed during the night, with the mountain scenery to greet the tourists in the morning.

The fast time of this line will naturally commend the Wabash Route to intending Colorado tourists.

Particulars will be gladly furnished on application.

A FIERCE BATTLE.

Number of Killed and Wounded on the Spanish Side Was Enormous, No One Doubts—It is Not Thought Any Americans Were Killed.

NEW YORK, June 2 -An Evening Journal special from Cape Haytien says: The torpedo boat Porter arrived at Mole St. Nicolas at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning with dispatches for Washington. She left immediately. But before going to sea the following story of the bombardment of Santiago de Cuba, the refuge of Cervera and the Spanish fleet, was obtained by your correspondent at the Mole:

The American squadron augumented by the torpedo boat Porter, the auxiliary cruiser St. Paul and the protected cruiser New Orleans approached the entrance to the harbor of Santiago at about 12:30 p.m., the Iowa leading.

As the American fleet drew near the New Orleans was detached and steamed forward ahead of the Iowa, Texas and Massachusetts. One of the forts opened fire on her and she replied, the other two ships directing their fire at the battery on the Punta Gorda, within the harbor and to westward of the position occupied by the Spanish ship.

The latter replied to the fire and immediately became a target for all the American ships engaged in the battle.

She retired behind a protecting headland and was not seen again during the engagement.

The Iowa, directed by Capt. "Fighting Bob" Evans; the Massachusetts, Capt. F. J. Higginson; Texas, Capt. J. W. Phillip, and the New Orleans, Capt. W. M. Folger, kept up their terrific fire against the Morro, Socapa and Punta Gorda forts for two hours, their projectiles, of enormous size, doing tremendous damage to the defenses of the harbor.

The masonry on Socapa and Morro was battered almost into dust, the forms of Spanish artillermen and infantry could be plainly seen flying to safety behind the neighboring hills. The auxiliary cruiser which joined Schley's fleet just before the battle took place was hit by shells from the forts, and it is thought she was seriously damaged.

That the number of killed and wounded on the Spanish side is enormous no one doubts, for time and again the American vessels hit the batteries squarely and amid the flying masonry and dismantled guns the forms of men were descried.

The damage done to the American fleet can not be learned, but is not thought any person was killed—if, indeed, any one was wounded.

PORT AU PRINCE, Hayti, June 2.—According to the latest advices from Santiago de Cuba, when the Spanish cruiser Christobel Colon emerged from the harbor Tuesday to the entrance of the channel, she was welcomed by such a furious fire as soon as the American squadron sighted her, that she was compelled to return into the bay.

The American squadron, which left Santiago waters at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, returned in front of the entrance of the bay Wednesday morning and fired two cannon shots, which are believed to have been a signal arranged with the Cuban troops, massed 6,000 strong, five kilometer (about three miles) from the city. Everybody expects grave events.

KINGSTON, June 2.—The outer fortications of Santiago de Cuba are practically in ruins, the once formidable Morro fort being particularly wrecked and Adm. Cervera's flagship battered and charred, with some of her great guns broken and her machinery injured, is no longer the dangerous battle craft that crossed the Atlantic.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN.

The War Department Will Send 70,000 Troops to the Island of Cuba—Twenty Thousand to Go at Once.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—For the first time since the beginning of hostilities there appears to be something in the nature of an official statement of the plan of campaign of the United States government. This is contained in a letter of Secretary Alger to the speaker of the house transmitting certain recommendations and statements of Gen. Ludlow which disclosed the purpose of the war department to send 70,000 men to Cuba, 20,000 to start at once and the remainder just as soon as they can be made ready for departure. Then there was an estimate for establishing electrical communications in connection with the army "in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines," showing for the first time officially an implied intention on the part of the government to land troops in Porto Rico. Of course all these movements have been anticipated by the press, but, nevertheless, a strong element of doubt existed, and, therefore, an official statement of the government's purposes made even in this indirect fashion created a profound sensation here. The three are to go together, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, and pass into the military occupation of the United States troops. Inasmuch as the secretary says that the second contingent of troops is to go forward as soon as they can be prepared, a good deal of interest attached to an order that was made Wednesday at the war department providing for the organization of the 75,000 additional volunteers called for. The order officially established the statement heretofore made in these dispatches that a large proportion of the new men are to be used to fill up the existing regiments of volunteers, which are in most cases deficient in numbers. It is to be presumed from Wednesday's order that the volunteer regiments collected under the first call will be enriched until they are filled up in this fashion so that the order has some bearing upon the plan of campaign.

An additional evidence that the actual forward movement of the army and navy has begun was given in the action of the foreign naval and military observers. They have been sojourning leisurely in Washington for some time, but within the last week all of them have started for Florida. The British naval and military attache were the first to leave, and now they have been followed by the German, Austrian, Russian, Swedish, Norwegian and Japanese observers.

SCHLEY JOINED BY SAMPSON.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 2.—Developments of a most decisive nature are expected at Santiago within the next few hours. When the dispatch boat which left the scene of Tuesday's engagement reached this place it was learned that preparations had been made for another attack upon the forts and Cervera's Spanish ships.

It was stated that Adm. Sampson's squadron, including the formidable battle ship Oregon, was expected to reach Santiago Thursday to re-enforce Commodore Schley. From late advices which have been received however, it is now believed that the combined fleets are preparing to force an entrance to Santiago harbor and destroy or capture the Spanish armada which is now bottled up there.

The information brought by the boat to the effect that Sampson, with the Oregon and the other vessels of the fleet, would arrive Thursday places the stamp of truth upon the story which reached here Wednesday night from Santiago to the effect that the fleet of American warships is lined up for action against Santiago.

British General Assaulted by Spaniards.

The 34th Michigan Receive Orders.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The 34th regiment of Michigan volunteers have been ordered by telegraph by Adjt. Gen. Corbin to proceed to Camp Alger, Va., for duty under command of Maj. Gen. Graham, of the 2nd army corps.

LEAVE FOR TAMPA.

The 157th Indiana, 1st Ohio, 1st District of Columbia and 3d New York—More Will Follow on Thursday.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 2.—The first of the volunteer infantry ordered from Chickamauga to Tampa got away Wednesday. The regiments which left were the 157th Indiana, 1st Ohio, 1st District of Columbia, and 2d New York. Thursday the 3d Pennsylvania, 1st Illinois, 5th Maryland and 69th New York will leave. No other regiments are under orders to move, but the posted army officers intimate that more orders may be expected in the near future.

The 2d New York, under Col. E. G. Hardin, left camp at 5 o'clock and marched five miles to Rossville station, where Southern railway trains were taken. This regiment had been in camp in Chickamauga since May 20 and was one of the best drilled and best equipped there. Col. Hardin, its commander, was formerly a regular army officer, and is a skilled drill master. The regiment is composed of companies from the following cities in the Empire state: Troy, Cohoes, Schenectady, Saratoga, Hoosac Falls, Whitehall, Mohawk, Poughkeepsie and Amsterdam.

The next regiment to leave camp was the 1st Ohio which started on a nine mile march to Ringgold, Ga., at 6 o'clock. It boarded special Western & Atlantic trains at Ringgold about 9 o'clock. The regiment has been at Chickamauga since May 15. It is well drilled and fairly well equipped. Col. C. B. Hunt is in command.

The 157th Indiana left camp at 9 o'clock and marched to Ringgold, where Western & Atlantic trains were boarded.

This regiment had been in camp in Chickamauga since May 16. It is fairly well equipped and unusually well drilled. It has a good hospital corps and a band of 23 pieces.

The companies are from the following Indiana towns: South Bend, Angola, Auburn, Waterloo, Fort Wayne, North Manchester, Ligonier, Elkhart, Plymouth, Knox and Goshen. Col. Geo. M. Studebaker is one of the youngest colonels in the army, being but 35 years of age.

The 1st District of Columbia left camp at 9 o'clock and marched to Rossville, where Southern railway trains were taken for Tampa. This regiment is composed of 1,050 men from Washington under Col. George Harries. It has been camped in the park since May 23 and thoroughly equipped and well drilled.

The 1st regiment Illinois cavalry arrived Wednesday morning on three trains over the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad. The command numbers 1,018 officers and men under Col. E. C. Young. With the exception of horses the men are well equipped.

Arrangements have been made to supply the horses and get the command in hard training during the next few days. Notwithstanding the fact that 4,000 volunteers left Wednesday morning there are still about 43,000 here. The order issued to recruit all the regiments to the standard of 1,307 men will largely increase the number and with the constant arrivals will keep the army near the 50,000 mark.

Wrecked a Block House.

KEY WEST, Fla., June 2.—The United States auxiliary gunboat Uncas arrived here Wednesday morning from the Cuban coast. She reports that on Monday last, when about a mile and a half west of Matanzas lighthouse she sighted a Spanish blockhouse on shore. Taking up a position about 600 yards off shore, the Uncas fired two shots at the house and the two shells went clear through the building, which was wrecked. During the firing the auxiliary gunboat Leyden came up and also fired a couple of shots. It is not known whether any Spaniards were killed, but they probably fled at the first shot. The blockhouse made no reply.

Spain's Dilemma.

MADRID, June 2.—The attention of the public Wednesday was absorbed in the condition of the Bank of Spain which is considered more serious than any reverse of the war, inasmuch as the impossibility of the bank to help the government means impossibility to continue the war.

A BOLD DEED.

Volunteer Crew Scuttles the Merrimac in the Mouth of Santiago Harbor.

The Heroes Attempted to Return But Under Heavy Fire Compelled to Row to the Spanish Flag Ship—They Will Be Exchanged.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—"The cork is driven in the bottle," was the comment of the naval officers at the navy department Saturday morning upon the news of the sinking of the collier Merrimac in the channel at the entrance of Santiago harbor.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 6.—Hobson and the hero crew of the Merrimac were saved in the following manner:

Unable, after the sinking of their vessel, to [illegible] their way back through the [illegible] the members of the crew [illegible] to the harbor to the Spanish [illegible] and were taken on board [illegible] vessel. The Spanish admiral under [illegible] a truce on Friday sent word to the American admiral that he offered to exchange the prisoners, adding, that in the meanwhile Hobson and his party would be treated with the greatest kindness.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Information comes from the white house that the secretary of the navy has received a dispatch from Adm. Sampson stating that the Merrimac was sunk in the channel off Santiago harbor for the purpose blocking the passage.

ON BOARD DISPATCH BOAT DAUNTLESS, OFF SANTIAGO DE CUBA, June 6.—Via Kingston, Jamaica.—Rr. Adm. Sampson, during Friday morning decided to close the narrow harbor entrance of Santiago de Cuba by sinking the collier Merrimac, loaded with coal, in the channel. He called for volunteers to go to almost certain death and 4,000 men offered themselves. Lieut. Hobson and six men were chosen, and Friday morning the Merrimac, under her own steam, entered the channel under a terrible Spanish fire. The vessel was riddled with projectiles, but she anchored and swung around. Lieut. Hobson then set off an internal torpedo with an electric attachment, there was an explosion, the Merrimac sank, the channel was closed, and, apparently, Adm. Cervera will be unable to escape.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The war department was open for business in a limited way for half the day Sunday, and Adjt. Gen. Corbin was hard at work at his desk in telegraphic correspondence with army officers in all parts of the country and particularly regarding the Spanish military prisoners from whom selections will be made for exchange of the gallant little band that sunk the Merrimac. The commanding officer at Fort McPherson, Ga., has furnished the department a full list of the captives to facilitate the work of exchange. This is likely to occupy more time than was originally expected because of the difficulty of communicating with the Spanish admiral at Santiago.

Information afforded by the official records of the navy department as to the full names and antecedents of the gallant sailors who made up Hobson's little crew in sinking the Merrimac differs in some essentials from the data furnished through the dispatch boats Sunday morning. The naval list is about as follows:

Daniel Montage, first-class machinist on the New York, born in Ireland and 29 years old; last enlistment in December, 1896; next of kin Kate Goldsen, sister, 84 Horatio street, New York.

George Charette, first-class gunner's mate on the New York, born in Lowell, Mass., 29 years of age; last enlistment May 20, 1898; has been in the service since 1884; his next of kin is Alexander Charette, father, Lowell, Mass.

Osborn (not Oscar) Deignan, coxswain on the Merrimac, born in Stuart, Ia., 21 years old; last enlistment April 23, 1898; next of kin Julia Deignan, mother, Stuart, Ia.

George F. (not John P.) Phillips, machinist on the Merrimac, born in Boston, 34 years old; last enlistment March 30, 1898; next of kin Andrew Phillips, Cambridgeport, Mass.

Francis (probably instead of John) Kelly, water tender on the Merrimac, born in Boston, 28 years old; enlisted at Norfolk, April 21, last; next of kin, Francis Kelly, Boston.

Randolph Clausen, coxswain on the New York; born in Boston and 28 years of age; last enlistment February 25, 1897; next of kin, Teresa Clausen, wife, 127 Cherry street, New York.

It is apparent to the department officials that the call for volunteers did not extend beyond the two ships, New York and Merrimac, as all the men named belonged to those two vessels.

Great admiration is expressed at the department at the cool pluck and discretion shown by the young cadet, George W. Powell, who took command of the New York's steam launch and lay under the batteries for many hours until he was satisfied from his own observation that the Merrimac had gone down before he returned to the flagship. It is felt that his fate involved a display of quite as much courage as was shown by the Merrimac crew and he is likely to profit by it.

Hobson to Be Promoted.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—It was stated Sunday night at the white house that the recommendation of the president as to the promotion of Junior Lieut. Hobson would not be sent to congress before Tuesday. By that time it is expected that the arrangements for the exchange of the prisoners will have been concluded.

The Alfred Arrives at Halifax.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 6.—The American steam yacht Alfred, from the great lakes, bound to New York, having been secured by the United States government, arrived Sunday for coal.

PEACE TALK.

Tentative Proposition Made to Ambassador Hay By the Spanish Minister—Under Consideration.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—Peace, with profit to the United States and also permitting Spain to save the fragments of her national honor, may come at any time. The Spanish government has had all the trouble it cares for, and is already indirectly negotiating for a cessation of hostilities. A senator is authority for this statement. He is not one of the statesmen who syndicated to head off war, and just now his chief sentiment seems to be one of fear that hostilities may be terminated before this country has time to conquer sufficient territory to recoup itself for the expenses of the conflict.

"The Spanish ambassador at London, Count De Rascon, has made overtures for peace negotiations to the American ambassador," asserted a member of a foreign legation to a correspondent.

"I might be more correct," he continued, "Count De Rascon is endeavoring to ascertain through the American embassy what the official feeling in this country is on the subject of settlement. De Rascon, of course, could make no direct propositions to Mr. Hay, nor could the latter make official response. De Rascon's evident instructions are to get some idea of what terms his government can make. I have heard also that Mr. Hay informed the state department of the Spanish ambassador's desire to gain information."

At the [illegible] ment it was said that Am[illegible]ad made no report on [illegible]e of mind nor touching [illegible]t of knowledge.

J. S. C[illegible] terms of peace. Several [illegible]k, in the conferences at t[illegible] plans of war have been l[illegible] for the consideration of the [illegible]ours upon which the country will [illegible] willing to cease hostilities. Th[illegible] impression that Spain is to sue for [illegible]ace after a signal defeat strengthens every day.

Porto Rico is to be taken as the indemnity for the war and for the $50,000,000 claims of American citizens. This is one of the terms of the coming treaty that may be regarded as settled. Estimates of the probable cost of the war vary, but $500,000,000 is an average amount. For this and the claims of the Americans the United States will take Porto Rico, it being taken for granted any money indemnity is out of the question, in view of Spain's impoverished condition.

To the ultimate disposition of the Philippines some consideration is being given. Only one point about that question may be considered settled. It is that, whatever the United States may decide to do about the islands as a whole, this government will retain possession of a good harbor and of sufficient territory for a coaling station and a naval base. It is not at all certain that the conclusion may not be to hold permanently the harbor and city of Manila under the flag of the United States and let the rest of the Philippines go.

THE CADIZ FLEET.

It is Reported to Have Sailed, But Date of Sailing and Destination is Not Made Known.

GIBRALTAR, June 4.—It is announced here that the Spanish Cadiz squadron has sailed, but the date of its sailing was not mentioned nor was the destination of the war ships given.

According to reports, the Cadiz fleet of Spain consists of the battle ship Pelaic, the armored cruisers Carlos V. and Alfonso XIII., the auxiliary cruisers Rapido and Patriota, the cruisers Ciudad de Cadiz, Leon XIII., Buenos Ayres and Antonio Lopez, several auxiliary cruisers of a smaller type than the Rapido and the Patriota, the torpedo destroyers Audaz, Prosperina and Destructor, and possibly the armored cruiser Cardenal de Cisneros. But so many misleading reports regarding the composition and strength of the Cadiz fleet have been circulated that it is almost impossible to refer to its composition in more than general terms. However, there is only one battle ship in the Spanish fleet, and she is not very formidable.

On the Straight Road to Perdition.

LONDON, June 4.—According to a dispatch from Madrid, El Liberal, with regard to the situation at Santiago de Cuba, says: "It is one more disenchantment which proves that there is no remedy for Spain's misfortunes. Cervera's squadron at Santiago is of little advantage either for itself or for what it represents. It can neither hinder the Yankee expedition nor strengthen the defense of Havana. Spain was never before led through such a straight road to perdition."

Second Philippine Expedition.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4.—The second expedition to the Philippines will probably get under way next Tuesday or Wednesday. It will not reach the proportions at first anticipated, owing to the fact that the five vessels which were to have made up the little fleet of transports are not ready, nor will any of them be ready by the time stated unless the government hurries the supplies which have been decided upon to make up the cargoes of the vessels.

Yellow Fever on Shipboard.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Two cases of yellow fever developed on board the Lamport and Holt steamer Garrick, on her voyage from South American ports, which terminated here Friday. A fireman named Wilhelm Collins died of the fever on May 12 and was buried at Victoria. At Bahia on May 17 Y. Hansen, a seaman, was taken ill, but recovered, and on the arrival of the Garrick here he was sent to Swinburne island, to convalesce. Capt. Black, of the steamer Hogarth, who was left in the hospital at Santos, ill of yellow fever, died on May 7, according to reports brought by the Garrick.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—SENATE.—Another day has been passed by the senate in a fruitless discussion of the war revenue measure. Not the slightest material progress was made at Tuesday's session towards disposing of the bill. Speeches were made by Mr. Mason (rep., Ill.), Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.) and Mr. Elkins (rep., W. Va.), Mr. Mason strongly advocated an amendment to the bill placing a tax upon wheat flour adulterated either with clay or with corn flour, and presented a long statement by the National Association of American Millers in support of his contention. Evidently believing this not a proper subject for public discussion, Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) moved a secret legislative session. In the open session that followed Mr. Elkins discussed the general features of the pending bill, opposing the corporation tax, the tax on bank deposits, and the issue of greenbacks, and strongly advocating the issue of bonds.

HOUSE.—The house Tuesday passed a bill authorizing the construction of a railway bridge across Lake St. Francis, near Lake City, Ark. Also a concurrent resolution directing the commission now codifying the criminal laws to prepare and submit a code of civil law and procedure for Alaska. A number of private bills were passed and the house in committee of the whole considered a bill authorizing the secretary of the treasury to keep open during June and July this year such life saving stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts as he may deem necessary. The bill was urged by the secretary of the navy as providing for the continuance in the months named of an important adjunct to the naval and coast signal service in making efficient the latter service. After some desultory discussion the bill was amended to carry $70,000 instead of $125,000 and passed. The house, at 1:35 p. m., adjourned.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—SENATE.—Marked progress was made by the senate Wednesday towards the final disposition of the war revenue measure. The committee's amendments on nearly 60 pages of the bill were passed upon and the senate nearly reached the principal questions at issue between the contending parties. These remaining questions have already been discussed pretty thoroughly, and aside from a few set speeches yet to be delivered, will not arouse probably more than a desultory debate. The interest of the session centered in the action taken upon the amendment of Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.) levying a tax of one-quarter of one per cent. upon the gross receipts of all corporations doing a business exceeding $250,000 a year.

HOUSE.—The senate bill to remove the disabilities imposed by the 14th article of the United States constitution framed in 1861 passed the house Wednesday by a unanimous vote. In the course of a brief speech supporting the bill Mr. Linney (rep., N. C.), paid a tribute to the late Ensign Worth Bagley, who died at Cardenas, "as none but the noblest heroes." Messrs. Simpson (pop., Kan.) and Broderick (rep., Kan.) supported the bill. Mr. Cannon (rep. Ill.) also spoke for the bill, and it was passed unanimously. The house adjourned at 2:33 o'clock p. m.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—SENATE.—When the senate adjourned Thursday evening the war revenue measure, so far as the finance committee is concerned, was completed, with the exception of the bond provision and the amendments proposed by the democrats in lieu of the bond paragraph. While no agreement was reached fixing a time for the taking of a final vote upon the bill, it was the expressed opinion on both sides of the chamber that a vote would be taken Friday before adjournment. Mr. Allison, (rep., Ia.) in charge of the measure, announced that he would ask the senate to remain in session Friday until a vote was reached. All of the committee amendments, except those noted, were agreed to Thursday afternoon. Several efforts were made to amend or eliminate the committee amendments, but the efforts in each case were unsuccessful. Mr. Butler (pop., N. C.) had the floor for three hours and a half. Within 15 minutes after he began to speak he brought on a general political engagement which lasted for more than an hour. The debate, which was heated and at times decidedly personal, turned upon the amount of money spent by the republican managers in the presidential campaign of 1896. Senators on both sides of the chamber were brought into the debate and a good deal of ill-feeling was manifested.

HOUSE.—The house practically [illegible] debate passed Thursday the urgency deficiency bill providing for emergency expenses of the army and navy departments incident to this war. It was based upon estimates received recently from the departments and carried items contemplated in the Philippine expedition and the early movement upon Cuba.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—SENATE.—While the war revenue measure was not passed by the senate Friday, two very important votes were taken, one on a proposition to coin the silver bullion in the treasury and to issue silver certificates against the coin, and the other on the bond proposition presented by the republican minority of the committee on finance. In lieu of the seigniorage amendment offered by the majority of the finance committee, Mr Wolcott (rep., Col.) proposed an amendment directing the secretary of the treasury to coin the silver bullion in the treasury and to issue silver certificates against it. After some discussion a vote was reached and the amendment was agreed to 46 to 31, several republicans voting for it. Mr. Aldrich (rep., R.I.) then pressed the amendment of the minority of the finance committee, providing for the issue of one hundred millions of certificates of indebtedness and three hundred millions of bonds, to be used exclusively for the payment of the expenses of the war. After an extended debate, the question was brought to an issue and by the decisive vote of 46 to 31 the bond amendment was incorporated in the bill, as a substitute for the amendments to issue legal tender notes.

HOUSE.—The house Friday consumed much time, but without result, considering a bill to authorize the president to restore to his rank and duty Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster in the army who was suspended in 1900 [illegible] by the July 1901 through court-martial proceedings and executive action. Mr. Talbert (dem., S. C.) by unanimous consent, proceeded to speak 20 minutes in opposition to a bond issue to be provided in the revenue bill. Some of the private pension and relief bills were passed and at 2:40 o'clock p. m. the house took recess until 8 p. m.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—SENATE.—At 7:05 o'clock Saturday evening the war revenue bill passed the senate. An amendment to place a duty of ten cents on all tea imported into the United States was adopted, also an amendment providing for a tax graduated according to price upon all articles sold under a patent right, trademark or name not open to general use and which are not otherwise taxed by the bill. Through an amendment offered by Lindsay (dem., Ky.) the senate decided not to place a stamp tax upon bundles of newspapers, wholly or partially printed, which weigh less than 100 pounds. A tax of four cents a barrel was placed on adulterated flour, and a stamp tax of one cent on every ticket entitling the holder to a seat in a palace or parlor car or berth in a sleeping car, the company selling the seat or berth being required to affix the stamp. The income tax was defeated. Mr. Allen moved that the senate insist upon its amendments and that the conferees be appointed. The motion was agreed to and Messrs. Allison, Aldrich and Jones (Ark.) were named as conferees. The measure now goes back to the house.

Bullittsville.

On the afternoon and evening of the 3d inst., the Ladies' Aid Society of the Bullittsburg church gave their annual Strawberry Supper and Lawn Fete. The evening was perfect and the entertainment a grand success in every particular. Every one who was so fortunate in being present went away showering blessings upon the ladies of the society and congratulating themselves that it was their privilege to be there. The net receipts of the entertainment was $47. This was laid away in their coffer to be used in dispensing charity. This is a very praiseworthy enterprise and should be encouraged by everyone. The handsome residence and beautiful lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Legrand Gaines presented a picture that would have given inspiration to the pen or pencil of the greatest artist. Scattered over the lawn were tables adorned with beautiful full-flushed roses, ladened with saucers of ice-cream and the most delicious and inviting strawberries. The rich foliage of the sugar maples which formed a canopy over the lawn was illuminated with golden rays from Japanese lanterns intermingled with the silvery beams of lunar pale as she sat in the faintest shadow of a cloud hatching out the little stars, the chicks of the night. The veranda was decorated with the national colors of varied texture and sizes and tapered with rich curtains, thus transforming it into a beautiful stage from which the guests were entertained for more than two hours with inspiring music from the Bullittsville orchestra under the direction of Miss Zayda Gaines. A varied performance by the scholars of Mrs. Kirtley's school was well rendered and highly appreciated by the audience. I wish to make special mention of a song, "On the Banks of the Wabash," sang by Misses Grace Grant and Beulah Gaines. These two young ladies have lovely voices and when intermingled make the sweetest of music. Another very enjoyable feature of the evening was the reading of a selection, "The Family Jar," by Miss Bernice Duncan. She has a clear, sweet voice and rendered her reading most effective and impressive by the use of appropriate gestures and manner of delivery.

Miss Mary Corn entertained several of her young friends Saturday evening in honor of Miss Taylor, of Sedansville, Ohio, who has been the guest of Miss Mary for several days. It was our privilege to attend th[illegible] Fortunately it is needless to say that Kirby's suspe[illegible] delightful affair—[illegible]e blade from [illegible]red to do so. She has [illegible] and as the warmest and most convenient of the heart use in the county; the [illegible]re serious[illegible] most hospitable mothe[illegible] no other, and a personality and de[illegible]nt that makes her guests feel that they are not merely welcome, but that she is delighted to have them there.

Davis, of Hebron, and Watts and Baisly, of Bullittsville, as well as all others who rendered assistance.

Hays; Reading, "Declaration of Purpose" Oscar Gaines; Select Reading, Miss Bernice Duncan; Recitation, Duncan Riley; Address, Rev. Lee Utz; Recitation, Miss Mable Kirtley; subject for general discussion, "Benefits derived from the Grange to the community in general." This subject was discussed by a number of members from both granges in interesting talks. Music by the Bullittsville orchestra was interspersed through this program. Mt. Pleasant Grange is much indebted to the Christian Church for the use of their commodious building on this occasion. The interest manifested by those present is conclusive evidence that the organization of the farmers is receiving its just attention.

This snake, no doubt, was a[illegible]mother of the [illegible]Quick killed.

A very strange phenomenon was witnessed by Mr. Eggleston, 4 miles north of here, last Friday about 11 o'clock. He was hoeing potatoes on Jerry Estes' farm, when, at the hour named, he observed a large ball of fire with a tail some 30 or 40 feet in length, descending from the heavens. He says the ball appeared to be about the size of a tobacco hogshead and descended with lightning rapidity. He did not see it strike the earth from the fact that it passed just over the hill from him. Neither could he find where it came in contact with the earth. He thinks it might possibly have fallen in the river, as that lay just beyond the direction it was going. He was very much frightened over it and made all haste to Mr. Estes' house to learn if any of them had seen it, but it appears no others saw it.

In choosing for his private secretary Hon. Will Lyons, of Campbell, a job in the commissary department of the army, Senator Deboe has shown more than ordinary judgment. Will, like all Campbell county men of his political faith, is mighty fond of pie, and besides the only way Deboe could expect to keep the doughty Will's mouth shut was to place him where he could keep it charged with pie. Aside from this, however, Colonel Lyons is a capable man for the position to which he aspires.—Commonwealth.

UNION, - - - - - - - - KENTUCKY.

When the Golden Grange procession struck the town on its way to Bullittsville, last Saturday, the meaning of the move was not understood at first, but finally someone remembered that it was Grangers' day at Bullittsville. James Smith had preceded the other members of Goldeu Grange some time, to see that the coast was clear.

Dr. Smith thinks there is a proper time in which to do everything, but before breakfast is not the proper time for plowing a garden, and so expressed himself when, the other day, he was lecturing a colored man whom he had employed to do the work, for not complying with his contract, and the colored man surprised him with the information that he plowed his garden that morning before he had waked up.

A Trimble county man, reading about the trouble the government was experiencing in collecting a fleet of rams for the navy, wrote to Washington, saying he had one at the government's disposal although this species of warfare was new to him, as he never before heard of sheep being used in battle. He also expressed doubt as to the availability of his ram as a sea fighter, but on land he guaranteed the animal to boost a Spaniard from Havana to kiugdom come.—Milton News.

Young James C. Rogers will not be on the stage when the other members of the graduatiug class of the manual training high school receive their diplomas on June 15th. His diploma will be sent to him at Chickamauga, Ga., or wherever he will be at that time with the first artillery. Rogers is a bright student and was on the point of graduating from the school in the regular course of practice there, but his desire to enlist caused him to force his studies in order to pass a special examination, which he succeeded in doing. He then enlisted in the regular army. For several years he was captain of the school's football eleven. He is highly popular among his schoolmates.—Louisville Commercial.

The young man above referred to is a son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Rogers, of Bellevue, and a grandson of Nathaniel Carpenter, of Gallatin county.

Heury Osborn, George Campbell, Luther Kirtly, jr., and Ward Coleman, all colored, were before Judge Roberts, last Friday, charged with a breach of the peace, committed Sunday week at divers places aloug the road as they were going to and returning from Cincinnati. They were represented by Attorney Sidney Gaines, who succeeded in acquitting all except Coleman, who got a fine of $25 and a ten days jail sentence for carrying concealed weapons, and he is now in castle Adams boarding out his fine and imprisonment. The witnesses were not acquainted with the colored men, consequently could not identify the three who were acquitted sufficiently to connect them directly with the misconduct. If the quartett ever attempts to repeat, in the Hebron neighborhood, their conduct of Sunday week, they will receive marks that will render their identification very easy.

A young mare belonging to Al Rogers, and which was being driven by Jule Ross, colored, got loose from Ross, last Friday evening, when he was closing a gate through which he came out on to the Bellevue pike at Geo. Blyth's. The animal commenced running as soon as it discovered it was loose, and had gone but a short distance when one of the buggy wheels was torn off. The mare dashed on out the pike at the top of her speed for two miles, when she was stopped by Edgar Berkshire. About the only damage done the vehicle was the loss of the wheel. Not a strap on the harness was broken, and the mare escaped injury. How all the sharp curves were made, and especially at the bridges crossed, without demolishing the buggy is a mystery. P. E. Cason and wife, and Jas. Duncan and Filmore Wingate, were out on the road in their buggies and met the runaway, and fortunately at good places to let her pass.

The followlug is an extract from a letter written by Clark Perkins to his paper, the St. Paul (Nebraska) Republican, after he arrived in camp at Chickamauga, Mr. Perkins is a grandson of Mr. Arthur Blyth, of this place, and a son of Richard Perkins, a native of Burlington:

"After a short stop in Louisville we proceeded on our southern journey. At every stopping point in the north we had been greeted by enthusiastic crowds but not till "old Kaintuck" was reached did we realize the true meaning of enthusiasm Loyalty to Uncle Sam's blue clad boys was particularly manifest in the smallest towns in the State aud many a grizzled veteran, who confessed with a suspiclon of pride to having seen service in the confederate army, shook us by the hand and bade us Godspeed on our journey. The little city of Ellzabethtown, Ky., deserves special mention; its inhabitants turned out en masse and served us with liberal quantities of delicious sandwiches, coffee, fruit and other dainties. Buttons were begged from the soldiers by pretty southern girls and when company "B" arrived at Chickamauga there was scarcely a man in the ranks who had a button on his sleeves but they were happy in the possession of flowers and other mementoes they had received in exchange."

The flies are annoying the milch cows awfully.

The members of the Baptist church, assisted by a few others, gave Rev. Hoover and wife a house-warming last Saturday evening. According to prearranged plans D. E. Castleman took Mr. and Mrs. Hoover out to P. D. Goodridge's to spend the afternoon, and as soon as they were gone a barrel of flour and numerous packages were seen going towards the pastor's residence, and in a short time a large collection of articles necessary to housekeeping were occupying a long table in one room at the parsonage. A nice supper was then spread on tables in the yard, and the crowd, numbering about 100 persons, anxiously awaited the return of Mr. and Mrs. Hoover. They came home shortly after sundown, and their enthusiastic reception was a surprise that could not have been more complete, nor more agreeable. The pastor and his wife having looked over the long list of useful presents, the crowd was invited to supper, and the bountiful repast was enjoyed by all present, and just as lunar's full face was lifted above the eastern horizon, seemingly smiling upon the very happy assemblage, the supper was concluded, and shortly thereafter the people began wending their way homeward, pleased at the successful manner in which the pastor's house-warming had been conducted.

They are seeing strauge sights up in Grant county, the last of which is said to have been seen south of Williamstown, last Saturday afternoon, by many persons, among them Deputy Sheriff Webb. It is said the strange object appeared to be not more than 200 or 300 feet above the ground and resembled a blaze of fire three or four feet in diameter. It was traveling in a northeasterly direction.

Prior to 1859 Virginia was the greatest tobacco producing State, the annual yield being 122,000,000. The present crop of Virginia is, approximately, only 50,000,000 pounds per annum. Succeeding the civil war Kentucky took first place in tobacco, and holds it with an annual yieid of upward of 225,000,000 pounds.

ARROGANCE WILL FALL.

Lessons Drawn From the Terrible Fate of Haman.

Showing That Pride Often Bears Bitter Fruit—Virtue and Fidelity Will Be Rewarded—Many Analogous Cases at the Present Time.

The doom of arrogance and the reward of fidelity are lessons which Dr. Talmage here draws from Mordecai on horseback and Haman afoot. Text: Esther vii., 10: So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai.

Here is an Oriental courtier, about the most offensive man in Hebrew history, Haman by name. He united for the destruction of the Israelitish nation, and I wonder not that in some of the Hebrew synagogues to this day when Haman's name is mentioned, the congregation clench their fists and stamp their feet and cry, "let his name be blotted out!" Haman was prime minister in the magnificent court of Persia. Thoroughly appreciative of the honor conferred he expects everybody that he passes to be obsequious. Coming in one day at the gate of the palace, the servants drop their heads in honor of his office, but a Hebrew named Mordecai rages upon the passing dignitary without bending his head or taking off his hat. He was a good man, and would not have been negligent of the ordinary courtesies of life, but he felt no respect either for Haman or the nation from which he had come. So he could not be hypocritical; and while others made Oriental salaam, getting clear before this prime minister when he passed, Mordecai the Hebrew relaxed not a muscle of his neck, and kept his chin clear up. Because of that affront Haman gets a decree from Ahasuerus, the dastardly king, for the massacre of all the Israelites, and that, of course, will include Mordecai.

To make a long story short, through Queen Esther the whole plot was revealed to her husband, Ahasuerus. One night Ahasuerus, who was afflicted with insomnia, in his sleepless hours calls for his secretary to read him a few passages of Persian history, and so while away the night. In the book read that night to the king an account was given of a conspiracy, from which Mordecai, the Hebrew, had saved the king's life, and for which kindness Mordecai had never received any reward. Haman, who had been fixing up a nice gallows to hang Mordecai on, was walking outside the door of the king's sleeping apartment and was called in. The king told him that he had just had read to him the account of some one who had saved his (the king's) life, and he asked what reward ought to be given to such a one. Self-conceited Haman, supposing that he himself was to get the honor, and not imagining for a moment that the deliverer of the king's life was Mordecai, says: "Why, your majesty ought to make a triumph for him, and put a crown on him, and set him on a splendid horse, high stepping and full blooded, and then have one of your princes lead the horse through the streets, crying, 'Bow the knee; here comes a man who has saved the king's life!'" Then said Ahasuerus in severe tones to Haman: "I know all about your scoundrelism. Now you go out and make a triumph of Mordecai, the Hebrew, whom you hate. Put the best saddle on the finest horse, and you, the prince, hold the stirrup while Mordecai gets on, and then lead his horse through the street. Make haste!" What a spectacle.

A comedy and tragedy at one and the same time. There they go! Mordecai, who had been despised, now starred and robed, in the stirrups. Haman, the chancellor, holding the prancing, rearing, champing stallion. Mordecai bends his neck at last, but it is to look down at the degraded prime minister walking beneath him. Huzza for Mordecai! Alas for Haman! But what a pity to have the gallows, recently built, entirely wasted! It is 50 cubits high, and built with care. And Haman had erected it for Mordecai, by whose stirrups he now walks as groom. Stranger and more startling than any romance, there go up the steps of the scaffolding, side by side, the hangman and Haman, the ex-chancellor. "So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai!"

Although so many years have passed since cowardly Ahasuerus reigned, and the beautiful Esther answered to his whims, and Persia perished, yet from the life and death of Haman we may draw living lessons of warning and instruction. And, first, we come to the practical suggestion that, when the heart is wrong, things very insignificant will destroy our comfort. Who would have thought that a great prime minister, admired and applauded by millions of Persians, would have been so nettled and harrassed by anything trivial? What more could the great dignitary have wanted than his chariots and attendants and palaces and banquets? If affluence of circumstances can make a man contented and happy, surely Haman should have been contented and happy. No; Mordecai's refusal of a bow takes the glitter from the gold and the richness from the purple, and the speed from the chariots. With a heart puffed up with every inflation of vanity and revenge, it was impossible for him to be happy. The silence of Mordecai at the gate was louder than the braying of trumpets in the palace. Thus shall it always be if the heart is not right. Circumstances the most trivial will disturb the spirit.

It is not the great calamities of life that create the most worriment. I have seen men felled by repeated blows of misfortune, arising from the dust, never desponding. But the most of the disquiet which men suffer is from insignificant causes; as a lion attacked by some beast of prey turns easily around and slays him, yet runs roaring through the forests at the alighting on his brawny neck of a few insects. You meet some great loss in business with comparative composure; but you can think of petty trickeries inflicted upon you, which arouse all your capacity for wrath, and remain in your heart an unbearable annoyance. If you look back upon your life, you will find that the most of the vexations and disturbances of spirit which you felt were produced by circumstances that were no higher in order of notice. If you want to be happy you must not care for trifles. Every one minute in your inspection of the treatment you receive from others. Who cares whether Mordecai bows when you pass, or stands erect and stiff as a cedar? That woodman would not make much clearing in the forest who should stop to bind up every little bruise and scratch he received in the thick; nor will that man accomplish much for the world or the church who is too watchful and appreciative of petty annoyances. There are multitudes of people in the world constantly harrowed because they pass their lives, not in searching out those things which are attracting and deserving, but in spying out with all their powers of vision to see whether they can not find a Mordecai.

Again: I learn from the life of the man under our notice that worldly vanity and sin are very anxious to have picty bow before them. Haman was a fair emblem of entire worldliness, and Mordecai the representative of unflinching Godliness. Such were the usages of society in ancient times that, had this Israelite bowed to the prime minister, it would have been an acknowledgment of respect for his character and nation. Mordecai would, therefore, have sinned against his religion had he made any obeisance or dropped his chin half an inch before Haman. When, therefore, proud Haman, attempted to compel an homage which was not felt, he only did what the world ever since has tried to do, when it would force our holy religion in any way to yield to its dictates. Daniel, if he had been a man of religious compromises, would never have been thrown into the den of lions. He might have made some arrangements with King Darius whereby he could have retained part of his form of religion without making himself so completely obnoxious to the idolators. Paul might have retained the favor of the rulers and escaped martyrdom if he had only been willing to mix up his Christian faith with a few errors. His unbending Christian character was taken as an insult.

Fagot and rack and halter in all ages have been only the different ways in which the world has demanded obeisance. It was once, away up on the top of the temple, that Satan commanded the Holy One of Nazareth to kneel before him. But it is not now so much on the top of the churches as down in the aisle and the pew and the pulpit that Satan tempts the expounders of the Christian faith to kneel before him.

Why was it that the platonic philosophers of early times, as well as Toland, Spinoza and Bolingbroke of later days, were so madly opposed to Christianity? Certainly not because it favored immoralities, or arrested civilization, or dwarfed the intellect. The genuine reason, whether admitted or not, was because the religion of Christ paid no respect to their intellectual vanities. Blount, and Boyle, and the host of infidels hatched out by the wile of Voltaire in the Second, as reptiles crawl out of a marsh of slime, could not keep their patience, because, as they passed along, there were sitting in the gate of the church such men as Matthew, and Mark, and Luke, and John, who would not bend an inch in respect to their philosophies.

Satan told our first parents that they would become as gods if they would only reach up and take a taste of the fruit. They tried it and failed, but their descendants are not yet satisfied with the experiment. We have now many desiring to be as gods, reaching up after yet another apple. Reason, scornful of God's word, may foam and strut with the proud wrath of a fallen man, and attempt to compel the homage of the good, but in the presence of men and angels it shall be confounded. "God shall smite thee, whited wall." When science began to make its brilliant discoveries there were great facts brought to light that seemed to overthrow the truth of the Bible.

The archaeologist with his crowbar, and the geologist with his hammer, and the chemist with his batteries, charged upon the Bible. Moses' account of the creation seemed denied by the very structure of the earth. The astronomer wheeled around his telescope until the heavenly bodies seemed to marshal themselves against the Bible as the stars in the courses fought against Sisera. Observatories and universities rejoiced at what they considered the extinction of Christianity. They gathered new courage at what they considered past victory, and pressed on their conquest into the kingdom of nature until, alas for them, they discovered too much. God's word had only been lying in ambush that, in some unguarded moment, with a sudden bound, it might tear infidelity to pieces.

It was as when Joshua attacked the city of Ai. He selected 30,000 men, and concealed most of them; then with a few men he assailed the city, which poured out its numbers and strength upon Joshua's little band. According to previous plan they fell back in seeming defeat, but, after all the proud inhabitants of the city had been brought out of their homes, and had joined in the pursuit of Joshua, suddenly that brave man halted in his flight, and with his spear pointing toward the city, 30,000 men bounded from the thickets as panthers spring to their prey, and the pursuers were dashed to pieces, while the hosts of Joshua pressed up to the city and with their lighted torches tossed it into flame. Thus it was that the discoveries of science seemed to give temporary victory against God and the Bible, and for a while the church action as if she were on a retreat; but when all the opposers of God and truth had joined in the pursuit, and were sure of the field, Christ gave the signal to His church, and turning, they drove back their foes in shame. There was found to be no antagonism between nature and revelation. The universe and the Bible were found to be the work of the same hand, two strokes of the same pen, their authorship the same God.

Again: Learn the lesson that pride goeth before a fall. Was any man ever so far up as Haman, who tumbled so far down? Yes, on a smaller scale every day the world sees the same thing. Against their very advantages men trip into destruction. When God humbles proud men it is usually at the moment of their greatest arrogancy. If there be a man in your community greatly puffed up with worldly success, you have to stand but a little while and you will see him come down. You say, I wonder that God allows that man to go on riding over other's heads and making great assumptions of power. There is no wonder about it. Haman has not yet got to the top.

Pride is a commander, well plumed and caparisoned, but it leads forth a dark and frowning host. We have the best of authority for saying that "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." The arrows from the Almighty's quiver are apt to strike a man when on the wing. Goliath shakes his great spear in defiance, but the small stones from the brook Elah make him stagger and fall like an ox under the butcher's bludgeon. He who is down can not fall. Vessels scudding under bare poles do not feel the force of the storm, but those with all sails set capsize at the sudden descent of the tempest.

You will yet be a lackey walking beside the very charger on which you expected to ride others down. When Charles I., who had destroyed Stafford, was about to be beheaded, he said: "I basely ratified an unjust sentence, and the similar injustice I am now to undergo is a sensible retribution for the punishment I inflicted on an innocent man." Lord Jeffries, after incarcerating many innocent and good people in London Tower, was himself imprisoned in the same place, where the shades of those whom he had maltreated seemed to haunt him, so that he kept crying to his attendants: "Keep them off, gentlemen; for God's sake, keep them off." The chickens had come home to roost. The body of Bradshaw, the English judge, who had been ruthless and cruel in his decisions, was taken from his splendid tomb in Westminster Abbey, and at Tyburn hung on a gallows from morning until night in the presence of jeering multitudes. Haman's gallows came a little late, but it came. Oppertunities fly in a straight line, and just touch us as they pass from eternity to eternity, but the wrongs we do others fly in a circle, and however the circle may widen out, they are sure to come back to the point from which they started. There are guns that kick.

Furthermore, let the story of Haman teach us how quickly turns the wheel of fortune. One day, excepting the king, Haman was the mighties man in Persia; but the next day, a lackey. So we go up and so we come down. You seldom find any man 20 years in the same circumstances. Of those who, in political life 20 years ago, were the most prominent, how few remain in conspicuity. Political parties make certain men do their hard work, and then after using them as hacks turn them out on the commons to die. Every four years there is a complete revolution, and about 5,000 men who ought certainly to be the next president are shamefully disappointed; while some, who are this day poor and poverty-stricken, will ride upon the shoulders of the people and take their turn at the admiration and the spoils of office. Oh, how quickly the wheel turns! Ballot boxes are the steps on which men come down as often as they go up. Of those who were long ago successful in the accumulation of property how few have not met with reverses! While many of those who then were straitened in circumstances now hold the bonds and the bank keys of the nation. Of all fickle things in the world fortune is the most fickle. Every day she changes her mind, and woe to the man who puts any confidence in what she promises or proposes! She cheers when you go up and she laughs when you go down. Oh, trust not a moment your heart's affections to this changeful world! Anchor your soul in God. From Christ's companionships gather your satisfaction. Then, come sorrow or gladness, success or defeat, riches or poverty, honor or disgrace, health or sickness, life or death, time or eternity, all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

Again; this Haman's history shows us that outward possessions and circumstances can not make a man happy. While yet fully vested in authority and everything that equipags and pomp and splendor of residence could do were his, he is an object-lesson of wretchedness. There are to-day more aching sorrows under crowns of royalty than under the ragged caps of the houseless. Much of the world's affluence and gayety is only misery in colors. Many a woman seated in the street at her apple stand is happier than the great bankers. The mountains of wordly honor are covered with perpetual snow. Tamerlane conquered half the world, but could not subdue his own fears. Ahab goes to bed sick, because Naboth will not sell him his vineyard. Herod is in agony because a child is born down in Bethehem. Great Felix trembles because a poor minister will preach righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. From the time of Louis XII. to Louis XVIII. was there a straw bottomed chair in France that did not sit more solidly than the great throne on which the French kings reigned?

THE present king of Spain supplies the only instance of a child who was born a king. Alfonso XII., his father, died on November 25, 1885, and on May 17, 1886, the king of Spain was born, and immediately became the possessor of the vacant crown.

FATE OF LUCY MARY.

Touching Story of What Happened to a Little Girl Who Was Too Good.

Lucy Mary's elbows expressed rightcousness, her walk conscious worth and her face wore a sort of "I'm your good girl, ain't I, mamma?" expression that was the admiration of the neighborhood. To her frequent appeals for confirmation on the subject of her excellencies her mother, instead of answering: "Yes; but I'd rather see you bad as Jezebel and tough as Pinkley alley than a self-righteous, self-sufficient little prig on an eternal pose," would duly reply: "Yes, my darling, you are a very good girl, indeed." And Lucy Mary would stiffen her small mouth and thank the Lord she was not as other little girls, who soiled frocks and stuck out tongues.

One day Lucy Mary went to visit in the fifth story of a hotel. Six very naughty children lived there, and it was thought that an hour or so of Lucy Mary would make them better.

"I wouldn't like it if they said bad words and pulled hair, would I, mamma?" said Lucy Mary.

"Oh! if mine were only like that!" sighed the mother of the naughty six.

So Lucy Mary went in the nursery to use her influence. When two of the children quarreled over a rill gumdrop—one of the sugar kind, with a thumbhole in the bottom—she took it away and ate it herself, so that there should be no more disputing. When the older ones began to play beads and tulis with pennies, she told them it was wicked gambling, and put the pennies in her own pocket, just to lead them out of temptation. If anyone started to cry, she whispered that the devil put redhot pebbles in all the mouths he found wide open, and as you can't cry with any comfort when your mouth is tightshut they unanimously postponed their grief. And the parents in the next room said: "How good the children have grown already," and thanked Lucy Mary's mother with tears in their eyes.

Looking on a shelf to see if there were any more red gumdrops which might rouse future discord, Lucy Mary found a box of matches.

"You must put them back," said the oldest girl. "We're not allowed to play with matches."

"It is very wrong to play with matches, I wouldn't do such a thing," said Lucy Mary. "It isn't playing, though, to light a newspaper and hold it up the chimney, and it's very interesting." Soon all the children were holding burning newspapers up the chimney, or frisking around the room with them.

"You mustn't jump, for that's playing," warned Lucy Mary. "We are forbidden to do that, you know." So they tiptoed softly and talked in whispers.

All at once Lucy Mary saw that the room was on fire.

"It isn't ladylike to scream," she said to herself. "Mamma says you oughtn't to notice people's furniture and things, anyway. And it isn't nice to stay too long at a first call, so I'd better go home."

She opened the door very quietly, but the fire had crept out ahead of her, and the stairs were blazing. At that moment the parents rushed in.

"I told them it was wrong to play with fire," said Lucy Mary. "I wouldn't do such a thing, would I, mamma?"

"No, my darling, not more than once," said her mother.

The flames could not be checked, so the windows were opened and the children were thrown out, one by one, into the binnkets that people held up from beneath. All except Lucy Mary.

It was decided that she was too good to be thrown.

So they left her there.—Life.

CARE OF JEWELRY.

Plain Soap and Water Vigorously Applied Will Not Injure the Rest Thing.

Considering how fond, as a rule, they are of jewelry, it is quite wonderful how women can let that which is in their possession get so exceedinly dirty before they think of cleaning it. And yet this they often do, perhaps because they have an impression that water spoils stones and dulls gold. As a matter of fact, it does nothing of the kind, provided both jewels and metal be real. Gold can be excellently well cleansed by washing it in warm soapsuds, made with a pure colorless soap, and further strengthened by a few drops of sal volatile. In this the ornaments must be briskly rubbed with the hands, then instantly rinsed in cold water and polished with a piece of chamois leather. I need hardly say that gold ornaments containing stones should not be dipped in this sal volatized water. To clean ornaments in which stones are set use plain soap and warm water alone, and do not allow the ornaments to remain too long in the water, for the stones are liable to become loosened. Having rubbed the ornaments gently in the soapsuds, rinse them in cold water and dry slightly. Then make a pointed instrument out of a roll of soft paper, and with this clean out the corners and underneath part of the stones. It will be found that much dust collects below the setting of a stone, and this necessarily detracts from the luster of the jewel. Finally, breathe upon the stones, and then polish them with a piece of tissue paper. Opaque stones, such as turquoises, agates, etc., do not require so much attention as diamonds, pearls or emeralds. Silver jewelry can be efficiently cleaned with a silver paste, or ordinary chalk powder, rubbed on the articles briskly, will be found to leave them bright and clean. Rings with stones in them should never remain upon the hands when these are being washed, as the stones are liable to discolor when frequently in contact with water. —Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

TREASON OF REPUBLICANS.

Instances in Which People with Purses Have Been Put in Prominent Places.

Within a year Whitelaw Reid made an authorized official visit to the court of St. James. His message was one of congratulation to the queen, that she had been spared through a long and eventful reign. The president of the United States did not particularly compliment Queen Victoria when he sent Whitelaw Reid upon this mission, for within a few years Whitelaw Reid has presented himself to the American people as a candidate for the vice presidency and had been repudiated; still, with the quality for rich men's sons, which with McKinley amounts to a mania, Reid, son-in-law of Millionaire Mills, was selected for a mission which could just as well have been performed by Son-in-law Hay, the duly accredited minister to St. James. Hay is another instance of the president's fondness for people with a purse. Other instances have been multiplied almost without number in the recent appointment by McKinley of callow youth, inexperienced and therefore incapable, to staff appointments in the army, whereby trained soldiers, educated at the expense of the government, are now the subordinates of young gentlemen who look upon war as quite the thing, you know. They had no recommendation but the family pull. Whitelaw Reid, much impressed by his reception at Windsor castle, is talking glittering generalities about an alliance of this nation with Great Britain and pleading rather needlessly that no arrant selfishness on our part suggests the connection. No such suggestion has been formally or officially made, but Mr. Reid is endeavoring to give it form and body, echoing therein the remarks of Joe Chamberlain. An alliance with England would not be selfish on our part because in any such combination we would be the pack horse. England does not mean to help us in a war with Spain and we need no help therein. England has already proclaimed her neutrality. But when the Spanish war is over England would have something for us to do. She would direct our affairs in a certain sense. The very first of her directions to us would be to increase our navy commensurately with her own, and to sail with her round the globe wherever her interests were threatened. It is marvelous that Whitelaw Reid, who is an arrant protectionist, has not learned from England that a useful policy for this country would be commercial freedom. He is not good enough to explain how a protection nation yoked for offensive operations with a free trade nation would have any particular benefit. England is the best customer we have for surplus cereals and breadstuffs. Why she takes so much of us is a simple problem. Under the accursed gold standard we must pay England $300,000,000 a year in interest. As we have not got the gold she takes the products of our soil at the rate of 50 per cent. their American value. England enjoys this state of things immensely. She has mouths to feed and they must be fed. We have no use for her manufactured products, because we rely under our policy upon our home market, and we have no need for her warships unless we propose to become, like her, a footpad among nations, knocking down and robbing the weakest of them and in the name of Christianity establishing tyranny wherever we gain a foothold.

WE MUST BEAR IT.

The Miserable Mess That Incompetent Men Are Making of the War with Spain.

Americans are ashamed of the way this little miserable war with a superannuated monarchy like Spain is being mismanaged. It rasps their sensibilities to observe the grin that is overspreading the world's countenance. However, there is nothing to be done but bear it. The country is not at fault. The people are more than willing to furnish all the men and means needed. We have the population, the qualities, the means to whip a dozen Spains. If one Spain gives us so much trouble, the fault is not with the country, but with the incompetency at headquarters, a misfortune against which there is no guard, but one that a real war would quickly remedy. Though the world may grin, the world isn't going to be deceived about the fighting capacity of the United States. We are in the plight of a giant being baited by an elusive enemy. It is surely an amusing sight—for everybody except the giant. Let Americans console themselves. Little men are making a mess of a little war. A big war would produce big men—compel the giving of supreme command to the Deweys. We are learning a lot that will be useful hereafter. And the world knows it.—N. Y. Journal.

Republican Candor.

It has at last come to be realized that the foreign policy of the United States could not be made a party issue, subject to abrupt changes, as it has been in the past, by whichever party happens to acquire power. It should not be a policy of aggression or of greed, or of unreasonable demands upon any other members of the family of nations, but it should be a policy always demanding that American should be given what is her just due, that American opinions shall have just weight in all matters that concern her, and that American's rights shall never be ignored, trampled upon or contemptuously cast aside by any other power or combination of powers.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune (Rep.).

——The war is now costing us $8,000,000 a day. Cuba is not yet free, though it may be that the Maine has been avenged. Everything except the price of labor is sailing skyward. Wherefore, Mr. McKinley, give us something for our money.—St. Louis Republic.

THE COUNTRY SHAMED.

Moneyed Nonentities Are Being Favored in the Rush for Army Commissions.

Even in aristocratic England, though you might be born a lord and worth millions, you can no longer purchase a commission in the army. Here is the United States commissions in the army are given away as free gifts to birth and wealth. This favoritism is a disgrace to the government which practices it, demoralizing to the service, and a shame to the republic. What earthly reason is there for making Mr. Bradley Strong a lieutenant-colonel, for glaring instance? His only claim to notice above millions of other young men is that he happens to be a son of ex-Mayor Strong, of New York. That is a distinction, certainly, but how does it fit Master Bradley for soldiering? His sole military experience that attracted public notice was the organization of a paper chase, which is an imitation fox hunt, at Seabright. Consider the feelings of the army officers who have served on the frontier until they are gray, and yet are now lieutenants or captains, at seeing rich men's sons and young dandies given higher ranks than themselves, for no cause other than their parentage, their wealth, their social position or their political pull. Contrasted with these commission-seeking and commission-getting nobodies, the behavior of Craig Wadsworth, Willie Tiffany (grandson of Commodore Perry), W. C. Eustis (nephew of the former ambassador to France), and other club ornaments of New York, is manly and admirable. They have been content to go to the war as privates. The army has a right to feel angry, the people have a right to feel indignant and ashamed of the president's abuse of power by putting moneyed nonentities in places of responsible command. It is an outrage of magnitude that will be paid for in the mismanaged battles and needlessly spilled blood—American blood.

M'KINLEY AND BRYAN.

The President Takes Occasion to Show His Spite Against His Political Opponent.

It is very singular and a mark of a small mind that President McKinley never even as much as acknowledged the receipt of a letter from W. J. Bryan offering his services to the government for duty in the war. If the president had substantial reasons for declining the offer of Mr. Bryan—but he had no reasons—at least in common politeness and decency he should have acknowledged the receipt of the letter and mentioned the tender that had been made.

It is no excuse to say that Mr. Bryan could not present a record of military experience as a basis for the offer of his services. Many civilian appointments to military offices have been made. The gilded youths whose fathers had contributed magnificent sums to Hanna's campaign fund in 1896 received staff and other appointments without inquiry as to their military ability or experience.

The position of Mr. Bryan before the country—the fact that he was a candidate for president against Mr. McKinley and received 6,500,000 votes—nearly half of the total national vote—should have entitled him to a high consideration. The only excuse that Mr. McKinley can make for neglecting to answer Mr. Bryan's letter is that it was an oversight—and in such a case an oversight is as inexcusable as an intentional snub.

To show that his offer of services to the country was not mere grand-stand play, William Jennings Bryan has enlisted as a private and is serving in a company of Nebraska volunteers which will be mustered in as United States soldiers under the new call for troops. None of Mr. McKinley's special friends who tendered their services have shown this evidence of sincere patriotism.—Chicago Chronicle.

——At the municipal elections in Indiana since 1896 there has been a remarkable series of democratic victories. At the recent town elections the democrats literally swept the state. This was not on account of any local issues, it was the reaction from the movement of 1896—the rebound which always follows an extravagant movement in any direction. There is no doubt that the democratic revival in the towns and cities will be followed by a democratic victory in the state.—Chicago Chronicle.

QUICKSAND IN WELLS.

A Method for Excluding It Which Has Been Used with Success in Michigan and Indiana.

The writer has had large experience in sinking wells in the sandy subsoils of Michigan and northern Indiana. In early days it was no uncommon thing for the well to cave in even before quicksand was reached, and bury the workman. Some genius invented the following method, which is now in almost universal use in those districts where there is quicksand when the water is reached and where there is danger from the sand or light soil caving in upon the workman:

Construct out of inch boards a ring of the desired diameter, usually about three feet in the clear, by cutting sections of the wooden circle desired out of inch boards. Five or six sections will be required for the circle. Two thicknesses of these board circles are required, one nailed upon the other, with the joints of the sections broken. This will give a wooden ring a little over four and one-half inches wide, three feet in the clear or thereabout, and two inches thick.

As soon as there are indications of caving, this wooden ring is put in the bottom of the well and a four-inch wall made of brick is built upon it. Care should be taken to have the wooden ring about one-half inch larger on the outside than the outside diameter of the brick wall. In the localities named, well brick could be purchased, and they are better than common brick because the joints are less open; but common brick can be used by clipping the inside corners of the brick a little.

If quick is likely to be reached, four feet of the well which is first put in is laid in cement mortar to exclude it. The rest of the well will not need mortar. Having made the workman safe by a brick circular wall around him, he proceeds to dig and undermine the ring, first on one side a little and then on the other side, and the ring, with its superincumbent weight of brick, follows, and other bricks are put on the top. When the water and the quicksand are reached, no attempt is made to bail the water out. The workman proceeds as before, except that a dipper is provided for dipping up the quicksand in the bottom of the well. When the water reaches the armpits of the workman, the well is considered complete. Afterwards, should the water become low, the well is deepened by digging out the sand from it and under the ring, and more bricks are laid on the top. Thousands of these wells thus constructed may be found in the districts above referred to.

Fig. 1 shows the wooden circle, the heavy lines where the top sections of the prepared circular pieces of board meet, the light lines where the ends meet. Fig. 2 shows how the joints of the two sections of the circle are broken. Fig. 3 shows the wall laid of common unclipped bricks.—I. P. Roberts, in Country Gentleman.

PLAN FOR HAY BARN.

The cut shows the details of construction of a modern hay barn. The plan shown is for a barn 40 feet wide, 50 feet long, and with posts 15 feet high, with self-supporting roof. As a hay barn is called for, it is unnecessary to have any floor for driving space. The hay should be carried from the wagon to the opening in the end of the barn by means of a carrier or sling, and then upon the track, the end of which is shown, the hay is carried to any part of the barn desired. The sill, A A, should be of eight by eight material. The beams B B and C C should also be eight by eight, and mortised into the posts at the corners and in the center. These beams serve as braces, and must be securely fastened, or the barn will spread. One danger which must be guarded against will be the bulging of the ends. To secure these, strong steel rods should run from the side plates, the ends of which are shown at the top of the posts. These steel rods will cut off a portion of the corner, as they should be fastened about ten feet from the ends of the plates. The details shown will make it plain to a builder how the barn is to be constructed.—Rural New Yorker.

Locations for Bee Hives.

Many people fail of success with bees because they do not place the hives right. If too shaded the bees are likely to be atttacked by the moth miller, which breeds those worms that destroy the honey. It is well to have the bees up early, so the hives should front to the east, so as to catch the first rays of the morning sun. Either a well-roofed, low building should be put up as a bee stand, or the hives should be set on a bench under a tree all through the summer. In winter it is not best that bees should see sunlight. If an underground cellar out of doors can be fitted up where the temperature may be kept below freezing all the time, it will be much better than the warmer house cellar.—American Cultivator.

Charcoal for the Pigs.

Pigs that are fattening will often eat charcoal quite greedily. That from the corn is probably the best, as the cob contains a very considerable amount of potash, which corrects the acidity of the stomach. Corn is a very heavy and rich grain and hard of digestion for any animal. In the quantities that fattening pigs eat of corn it is no wonder if the stomachs are cloyed. A little charcoal will greatly improve their appetite. Even pigs that are not fattening will eat some charcoal. It has some nutrition, and they are in no danger of eating too much.—Prairie Farmer.

WHY THE COOK FELT HURT.

Her Employer Was Not Laid Up from Overeating and She Felt Slighted.

A lady had a cook who gave her every satisfaction and she was under the impression that the cook was equally satisfied with her place. But one morning, to the lady's intense surprise, the cook gave her the usual month's notice.

"What do you want to leave for, Jane?" asked her mistress. "I am very much pleased with you, and I thought you were quite comfortable here."

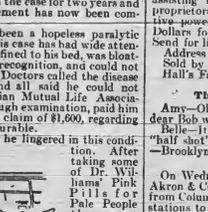
"Yes, mum, I'm comfortable enongh in a way, but—"

The cook hesitated and fidgeted about.

"But what?" queried her mistress.

"Well, mum," she blurted out, "the fact is the master doesn't seem to 'preciate my cookery, and I can't stop in a place where my efforts to please are wasted; so I'd rather go, mum."

"But what makes you think that your master doesn't appreciate your cookery? Has he ever complained to you?" asked the lady.



"No, mum, but my late master was always being laid up through overeating—he said he couldn't help doing so because my cookery was so delicious—but master here hasn't been laid up once all the three months I've been with you, and that's just what bothers me so, mum!"—Boston Traveler.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

The following case was printed originally in The Monitor, a newspaper published at Meaford, Ontario. Doubts were raised as to its truthfulness, consequently a close watch was kept on the case for two years and the original statement has now been completely verified.

Mr. Petch had been a hopeless paralytic for five years. His case has had wide attention. He was confined to his bed, was blanket almost beyond recognition, and could not take solid food. Doctors called the disease spinal sclerosis, and all said he could not live. The Canadian Mutual Life Association, after a thorough examination, paid him his total disability claim of $1,600, regarding him as forever incurable.

For three years he lingered in this condition. After taking some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People there was a slight change, a tendency to sweat freely. Next came a little feeling in his limbs. This extended, followed by a pricking sensation, until at last the blood began to course freely and vigorously through his body. Soon he was restored to his old time health.

Paid His Claim.

A reporter for The Monitor recently called on Mr. Petch again and was told:

"You may say there is no doubt as to my cure being permanent. I am in better health than when I gave you the first interview and certainly attribute my cure to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"To these pills I owe my release from the living death, and I shall always bless the day I was induced to take them."

Such is the history of one of the most remarkable cases in modern times. In the face of such testimony, can anyone say that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not entitled to the careful consideration of every sufferer—man, woman or child? Is not the case, in truth, a miracle of modern medicine?

These pills are sold by all druggists and are considered by them to be one of the most valuable remedial agents known to science.

ANOTHER PATRIOT.

He Wanted Everything Military and Naval on the Bill of Fare.

Puffly is too old and there is too much of him to go to the war, but he never loses a chance to voice his patriotism.

"Pork and beans," he mumbled over the restaurant menu the other day. "Say, waiter, are these the regular army beans?"

"Yes, sah. Also de reg'lah army po'k."

"Bring me some.—What's this?—Spanish buns? One big order of consomme, waiter. Break a couple of these Spanish buns into it. That's where they belong. Then throw the whole thing away."

After Puffly glared around to see whether anyone challenged this direction, he chuckled an order for shelled peas.

"Fruit?" he responded later to the waiter, "certainly," and he fairly shouted that he wanted a couple of naval oranges. "That's a hit," he communed to himself. "Most of these chumps that are not up with the times would have simply ordered Florange." Then he had another inspiration, and, taking in a full breath, he roared: "And say, waiter, bring me a couple of Manila cheroots." Everybody within hearing applauded and Puffly waved both lapels of his coat with national emblems attached.

"Game ole bird dat," whispered the waiter just loud enough to be heard all over the place. Puffly gave no sign that he heard, but left a half-dollar on the table and walked out as straight that he leaned back.—Detroit Free Press.

Public Clocks.

Few great cities of America are adequately provided with public clocks of such a size and so prominent location as to indicate the time over wide metropolitan districts. But it is high time to check kidney and bladder complaint manifested to the sufferer by inactivity of the organs affected. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters remedies this as it does dyspepsia, rheumatism, constipation, biliousness and nervousness.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

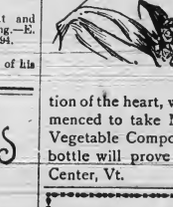
BEWARE OF MORPHINE.

Mrs. Pinkham's Urgent Appeal to Suffering Women.

She Asks Them to Seek Permanent Cures and Not Mere Temporary Relief From Pain.

Special forms of suffering lead many a woman to acquire the morphine habit.



One of these forms of suffering is a dull, persistent pain in the side, accompanied by heat and throbbing. There is disinclination to work, because work only increases the pain.

This is only one symptom of a chain of troubles; she has others she cannot bear to confide to her physician, for fear of an examination, the terror of all sensitive, modest women.

The physician, meantime, knows her condition, but cannot combat her shrinking terror. He yields to her supplication for something to relieve the pain. He gives her a few morphine tablets, with very grave caution as to their use. Foolish woman! She thinks morphine will help her right along; she becomes its slave!

A wise and a generous physician had such a case; he told his patient he could do nothing for her, as she was too nervous to undergo an examination. In despair, she went to visit a friend. She said to her, "Don't give yourself up; just go to the nearest druggist's and buy a bottle of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It will build you up. You will begin to feel better with the first bottle." She did so, and after the fifth bottle her health was established. Here is her own letter about it:

"I was very miserable; was so weak that I could hardly get around the house, could not do any work without feeling tired out. My monthly periods had stopped and I was so tired and nervous all of the time. I was troubled very much with falling of the womb and bearing-down pains. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; I have taken five bottles, and think it is the best medicine I ever used. Now I can work, and feel like myself. I used to be troubled greatly with my head, but I have had no bad headaches or palpitation of the heart, womb trouble or bearing-down pains, since I commenced to take Mrs. Pinkham's medicine. I gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to every suffering woman. The use of one bottle will prove what it can do."—MRS. LUCY PEASLEY, Derby Center, Vt.

MONTHLY SUFFERING.

Thousands of women are troubled at monthly intervals with pains in the head, back, breasts, shoulders, sides hips and limbs. But they need not suffer.

These pains are symptoms of dangerous derangements that can be corrected. The menstrual function should operate painlessly.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

makes menstruation painless, and regular. It puts the delicate menstrual organs in condition to do their work properly. And that stops all this pain. Why will any woman suffer month after month when Wine of Cardui will relieve her? It costs $1.00 at the drug store. Why don't you get a bottle to-day?

For advice, in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, "The Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. ROZENA LEWIS, of Centerville, Texas, says: "I was troubled at monthly intervals with terrible pains in my head and back, but have been entirely relieved by Wine of Cardui."

Crop Report.

For the benefit of the farmers of Kentucky and others interested, a brief review of the condition of the wheat crop in the principal wheat-growing States, is presented. To use the data compiled by the various State bureaus would delay this report longer than is desirable, and statements here made are based upon information contained in the U. S. Climate and Crop Service for those States.

WHEAT—In the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois every indication points to a full crop on an average acreage. No damage whatever is reported in these States with the exception injury from local wind and rain storms in the State of Illinois. In Iowa the crop of winter wheat has attained a very rank growth, and apprehension that the crop will fall or badly lodge is felt. The rainfall has been excessive, and the crop suffered from overflow and storms and is in danger of being attacked by rust. The spring wheat crop of Iowa is very promising at this stage.

In Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri the crop is very rank in growth and promises a full yield. The presence of chinch bugs is noted in these States, but no damage had so far resulted. Spring wheat in Nebraska starts with indications favorable for a large yield and the acreage is large increased.

In Kentucky the crop has improved over the excellent condition shown on May 1st and now shows an average condition for the State of 104, a gain of three points during May. On June 1, 1897, the condition was 93, on June 1, 1896, the condition was 61.

The Central Section continues to show the highest average condition, 107, as against 105 on May 1st. Correspondents report the crop unusually fine, heads good length and well filled. In a number of counties lying north of a line drawn from Franklin county to Rowan county the rainfall has been deficient during May, and in these counties the crop is beginning to show the effects of drouth. An early harvest is indicated.

In the Western section the condition averages 102, a gain of one point during May. Here the rainfall has been excessive throughout May, and reports of rust on blades and damage otherwise from excessive moisture are not infrequent. In Christian county the crop is reported "badly rusted." Some fly is noted in Larue county.

In the Southeastern section the condition in those counties where wheat is grown, averages 102, a gain of several points during May.

CORN—The condition of the corn for the State averages 92. On June 1, 1897, the condition was 82, and June 1, 1896, the condition was 93. The stand was generally good, and and where the season has been favorable has grown off nicely. The crop, however, has had to contend with excessive moisture in Western section almost from date of planting and, as might be inferred, the state of cultivation is not the best. Planting was hardly completed with the close of the month and the crop is generally in a backward state.

In the central section more favorable conditions have prevailed, with a corresponding improvement in condition. The state of cultivation is on the whole good, much of it having received the second plowing. In the Northern counties of this section, where the rainfall has been deficient, the crop is in the clods.

The condition by section is as follows: Western 87, Central 91 and Eastern 99.

OATS—The condition of the oats crop shows an improvement during May. The improvement applies mainly to the early sown oats. That part of the crop which was sown late is unpromising. The condition for the State averages 91. On June 1, 1897, the condition was 82, and for June 1st, 1896, the condition was 69. By sections the following conditions are shown: Western 96, Central 85, Eastern 92.

TOBACCO plants have been very plentiful, and the figures on acreage bear out to some extent the early indications of a largely increased acreage. Especially is this true of the Western section, where several counties report the acreage 200 per cent as compared with the acreage of 1897. Reports from a number of counties in the dry districts are of such a character as to leave some doubt as to the accuracy of estimates, and figures upon the number of acres planted are for this reason withheld until next month, when planting will be completed. Correspondents in the counties of Owen, Henry, Pendleton and Robertson estimate the acreage at 50, 40, 35 and 25 per cent. respectively of the average of 1897. While this is true probably at this date, it is reasonable to suppose that should the present unfavorable conditions be succeeded by seasonable rains that the acreage will be largely increased above the estimates given.

In those counties where planting has been practically completed the condition of the newly set tobacco is very unsatisfactory. Absence of moisture and effects of the hot sunshine has caused plants to turn yellow and much of it to die. Cutworms, while doing very little damage to corn, are reported unusually destructive to tobacco plants, and with these disadvantages it is feared that a poor stand will be obtained. In those counties that has so far failed to receive a season the plants are becoming overgrown and are yellowing in the beds. The situation is therefore becoming critical, and unless seasonable rains come soon the acreage will be sharply curtailed.

MEADOWS, PASTURES AND LIVE STOCK.—Meadows and pastures have greatly improved during May. Clover meadows are especially luxuriant and a fine yield of hay is assured. Improvement in pastures has resulted in a corresponding improvement in live stock, which is now in excellent condition. Some loss of horses is reported from Elliott county without particulars as to symptoms or disease being given.

WOOL—The size of the wool clip as compared with the clip of 1897 is 91. The average weight per fleece is estimated at 4 pounds. It is gratifying to note the substantial improvement in the price of wool during the past two years. The average price of best wool of the present clip is 21 cents per pound. In 1897 the average price was 16 cents and 1896 it was 12 cents.

FRUIT—The month of May has developed some changes in the fruit conditions. Apples which on May 1st showed a condition of 81, as compared with the average years, have fallen to 65 per cent. on May 1st to 58 per cent, on June 1st. Pears also have increased from 43 to 57 per cent, of an average crop, while grapes show the same condition as on May 1s, 84 per cent. of an average crop.

IT has been proved that man cannot kill himself by holding his breath. At the worst the result of the physical discomfort so produced would be a state of coma. When this state was reached nature would reassert herself, and the breathing functions would again resume full activity, preventing a fatal issue in spite of their owner's desire.

"COL. BERRY," says the Carrollton News "will be returned to Congress this fall from this district without opposition, so it seems at present. The Col. has sustained his reputation made in his first term of an able and persistent man, always getting everything he went after. We are proud of his record, and hope he will get Carrollton her new public building."

The Louisville Times inquires: "What is a Bryan Democrat?" That is easy. A Bryan Democrat is a Democrat who votes the Democratic ticket, nominated by a Democratic convention, and placed on a Democratic platform. A Bryan Democrat is a Democrat with no yellow streaks in him, and no affinity for the Republican party on election day, or any other day in the year.—Louisville Dispatch.

CROP AND STOCK.

Sheriff John L. Forsythe, of Mercer county, has lost $1,000 worth of hogs from cholera.

After buying 12,000 mules in the St. Louis market at an average of $100 the government has ceased to purchase there.

Simon Weihl, of Lexington, bought of John W. Davis, of Woodford county, 83 head of 600 pound steers at 5 cents per pound.

More than 40,000,000 pounds of chewing tobacco were manufactured in Louisville last year, and over 3,000 men women and boys were employed in the process.

Army mules must be 15 hands high and must weigh 1,000 pounds. The government does not want to pay more than $100, but crop time make the price range from $120 to $140.

F. B. Lindsay, of Blue Lick, sold to English parties $1,000 worth of cedar logs for the manufacture of lead pencils. It will take 500 trees and they must be without knots.—Carlisle Mercury.

A French scientific journal says the consumption of tobacco is decreasing in that country, being at the present time about two pounds a head of the population annually, whereas in Holland it is 7 pounds, in the United States 5 pounds, in Belgium and Germany 3 pounds, in Austria-Hungary two and one-half pounds and in Canada two one-half pounds.

The largest stock yards in the world are in Chicago. The combined plants represent an investment of over $50,000,000. The yards contain twenty miles of streets, twenty mile of water troughs, fifty miles of feeding troughs and seventy-five miles of water and drainage troughs. The yards are capable of receiving and accommodating daily 20,000 cattle, 20,000, sheep and 120,088 hogs.

The wheat crop of Central Kansas this year will be so enormous that the puzzling question of how to secure enough labor to gather the harvest has arisen. Men are being offered from $1 50 to $2 50 per day, and in some cases $3, which includes board and washing.

Judge Tarvin will convene the June term of the Kenton circuit court at Independence on June 21, and continue in session until the docket is cleared. The most important case to be tried is that of Mrs. Captain Shinkle against the estate of Sol Sharp, deceased, the pool-room man, for the recovery of money lost by her husband in buying pools on race horses. Senator Goebel represents the plaintiff. Captain Shinkle is a well-known river man and the Uncle of Bradford Shinkle, the millionaire of Covington. When Hobson is rewarded for his gallant exploit the next stroke for the morale of the navy should be the imprisonment of the persons who caused the Government to pay $342,000 for a fifty-thousand-dollar freight steamer. Nobody but a Spaniard would attempt to discount the success of Dewey's engagement at Manilla by claiming that Montejo's fleet was in no condition for fighting. Montejo had ample time for preparation, boasted that he was looking for trouble, subsequently found it, and was knocked out. MESSRS. KYNOCH, of Birmingham, Eng., have produced a quick-firing gun which is stated to be a long way ahead of guns of a similar type. Its seven magazine bullets per minute, will kill at three miles, and, as the barrel is made to swing from right to left, it will probably prove to be one of the most deadly weapons of modern warfare.

THE length of Mr. Gladstone's political service can be measured by the fact that he entered parliament at a time when Andrew Jackson was president of the United States, and retired from it when Mr. Cleveland had begun his second term. He held his first cabinet office when Daniel Webster was also first serving in a like capacity here.

THE most wonderful machine ever invented from the point of view of the highest mechanical ingenuity and perfection of construction, is the Whitehead torpedo. In the hands of skilful and resolute men it is the most terrible engine of warfare the world has ever seen. A ship which receives a blow from it is doomed as surely as if she were already at the bottom of the ocean.

NEARLY every traveler in the Philippines finds much interest in the prodigious growth of flowers. There are over 30 varieties of orchids in the forests, and dozens of lilies of mammoth proportions that are never seen outside of the tropics. The Malapo lily is the largest. Its leaves are often six feet long and two wide, while its stems are three inches in diameter. It is in blossom five months in the year and its blossoms are as large as a peck measure.

THE Spaniards and the world at large are being treated to a few samples of cool, Yankee pluck. Dewey's breakfasting between maneuvers at Manila was characteristic and dramatic. But the sinking of the Merrimac by a volunteer crew in Santiago harbor over buried mines and under a running shot and shell, then paddling into the enemy's forts for protection against the enemy's guns gives the palm for cold grit to Hobson and his comrades.

AMERICAN pine and hard woods are constantly gaining importance. There is a large field in Germany for Georgia pines for finishing and for hard woods for flooring. No country is building more extensively than Germany, and only a few people, comparatively, use carpet. Hardwood floors and rugs are the rule in the best houses. In all the larger cities of the German empire, on every side and everywhere, new blocks of buildings and new houses are being constructed.

GREAT BRITAIN, leaving out its royal standard, has a merchant flag and a naval ensign, a union flag and a blue ensign. The union flag, which is an enlargement of the union in the merchant flag we see everywhere, is hoisted by the various governors, who display different badges on it; the red ensign, with different badges, is shown by the different colonies, and some yacht clubs fly the naval ensign, others the naval reserves, or blue ensign, and other bodies have other flags.

IT is but seldom that a real good specimen of the Damascus sword can be obtained, for the art of working and engraving this kind of steel is dead. These swords are made of alternate layers of iron and steel, so finely tempered that the blade would bend to the hilt without breaking. The weapons had edges so keen that no coat of mail could resist them, and surfaces so highly polished that when a Moslem wished to rearrange his turban he used his sword for a looking-glass.

UNTIL the middle of the 16th century Christian marriage consisted of two distinct ceremonies—the betrothal or espousals, which were followed at a considerable interval, sometimes extending to two years, by the benediction or complete marriage. Many modern marriage customs are relics of primitive times. For instance, the throwing of old shoes after the newly married pair is a remnant of marriage by capture, when the bride's relations threw stones and other missiles after the bridegroom as he rode off with his captured bride.

THE gross cost of the British army and navy for 1897 was £41,776,243. Of this, £5,180,809 goes to the "non-effective army and navy"—that is, to the pensioners etc. The actual fighting army and navy numbers roughly 236,000 men. As the great ironclads' cannon and all the artillery would be absolutely useless without Tommy Atkins, he may be said to cost the nation the total sum. Thus when Tommy stands up before the enemy he costs the nation £176, or more than the weight of a hollow statue of him in pure gold would cost. Truly a costly fellow.

MANILA IS OURS.

A Hong Kong Dispatch Says the City Has Surrendered.

Ambassador Hay, of London, Sends the News to Washington, Where It Caused the Greatest Delight—Dewey Caps the Climax to His Victory.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—"Hongkong advices say Manila has surrendered."

This dispatch was received at Sunday midnight from Ambassador Hay, at London.

That was the whole story, but it is taken for granted at the navy department that Ambassador Hay received his news from official sources in London, and that it is correct. The news was at once carried over to the white house, and caused intense delight. Direct news from Adm. Dewey had been expected Sunday night, as it was known he sent a dispatch boat to Hong Kong, and it was presumed that by this time Dewey and Aguinaldo between them must have forced the city to surrender.

No one here doubts the news, briefness of the dispatch from Ambassador Hay being taken as an evidence of its reliability, and the navy department was congratulating itself Sunday night in the belief that Dewey has capped the climax of his great victory by hauling down the Spanish flag and running up the stars and stripes without waiting for the land moving army, just as Sampson did at Guantanamo while the Spaniards fleeing from ghost ships.

BATTLE FOUGHT.

An Engagement Between Gen. Aguinaldo and the Spanish Forces for the Possession of Manila Saturday.

NEW YORK, June 13.—A special cable dispatch from Hong Kong says that a battle for the possession of Manila was in progress Saturday between the Spanish forces and those of Aguinaldo. Adm. Dewey has promised to prevent a massacre should the insurgents capture the city.

The Spanish governor has been notified that unless he withdraws the price put upon the head of the insurgent leader Aguinaldo, he will get no quarter. Otherwise the rules of civilized warfare will be strictly adhered to. As a result of this price being placed on his head, three attempts have been made to take Aguinaldo's life.

SIERRA LEONE.

One Thousand Persons Reported Killed in the Recent Uprising in That District —Missionaries Murdered.

LIVERPOOL, June 12.—Steamers which have arrived here from Sierra Leone report that a thousand persons were killed in the recent uprising in that district. One hundred and twenty inhabitants of Freetown, most of them traders, are known to have been massacred, and other colonists were carried into the bush by the "war boys" and undoubtedly met a worse fate. Three hundred friendly natives were killed, and beside the white missionaries, six colored missionaries of the United Brethren of Christ were murdered at Manchbargru. The English missionaries are at the mercy of the war boys, but have not been molested.

Notice to Adm. Cervera.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The navy department has sent orders to Adm. Sampson to notify Adm. Cervera that if the latter shall destroy his four armored cruisers and two torpedo-boat destroyers, to prevent their falling into our hands, Spain at the end of the war will be made to pay an additional indemnity at least equivalent to the value of those vessels. It has been realized all along that the Spanish admiral, rather than permit his fine squadron to be added to the United States navy, might, at the last moment, when he saw that further resistance was useless, prefer to blow them up, perhaps going so far as to carry himself and his men along with them.

Lovers' Quarrel Ends in Murder.

CINCINNATI, June 13.—Annie Thomas, 24, colored, was shot at five times, hit thrice and fatally wounded by her lover, Harvey Jones, 19, a porter at Silverglade's saloon, on Longworth street, at 11:30 Saturday morning. The woman's home was at Hillsboro, O., but she was living on the fourth floor on Plum near Longworth, and boarded at 309 Longworth. She and Jones had been quarreling for several weeks, and a few days ago he notified her that he would kill her. The woman's wounds will prove

RIOTING IN MADRID.

The Spanish Populace is Enraged at the Government's Deceit About the War Situation in Cuba.

MADRID, June 11.—The populace is in a state of terror over the discovery that the government and the newspapers have been persistently lying about the condition of affairs in the Philippines and the progress of the war in Cuba.

The full extent of this treachery toward the people is only now being appreciated by the latter when the truth about Manila and the situation of Adm. Cervera's much praised fleet has become known. The masses, who have furnished the young men who are being shot in the Philippines and shelled or starved in Cuba, under one not where to turn for reliable news, accountability, and they are rapidly arriving at the conclusion that their whole governmental fabric is rotten to the core.

The change in Sagasta's conduct does not serve to reassure them. He has quit replying to attacks on him and his announcement Thursday that Spaniards must be prepared to hear bad news is popularly taken to mean that something awful has happened in view of the past tremendous lying to the people about little things.

SPIES SHADOWED.

Certain Persons Employed on Government Work Sending Out Valuable Information to the Spaniards.

CLEVELAND, O., June 11.—It was learned Friday that Wm. Morriston, of the United States secret service, was in Cleveland on a very important mission connected with the Spanish-American war.

Morriston was in consultation with United States Deputy Marshal Keeley and other United States officials and they visited several large manufacturing establishments of the city. Both Morriston and Keeley refused to talk for publication, but from another source it was learned that information had been given the government to the effect that certain persons in Cleveland, Pittsburgh and other cities where government work is being done are sending out valuable information to the Spanish government. It is said that Morriston was satisfied that he had located the spies and their methods, and the local service will keep them in surveillance until Morriston makes his report at Washington and instructions are received.

Nitro-Glycerine Explosion.

BAY CITY, Mich., June 11.—Fifteen hundred pounds of nitro-glycerine, which was being prepared for manufacture into dynamite in the factory of H. H. Thomas, four miles north of here, exploded Friday afternoon and damaged the plant considerably. At Kaw Kawlin, half a mile from the explosion, windows were broken and considerable damage was done. This is the fourth time the works have suffered from an explosion. Fortunately Friday all the employes in the building escaped with their lives. The loss is unknown at present.

The Monterey at San Diego.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., June 11.—The U. S. S. Monterey and her coal consort, the Brutus, supposed to be speeding on their way toward Honolulu and Manila, were sighted at noon Friday steaming south toward San Diego at a good rate of speed, the Monterey leading. They arrived off the harbor mouth at 3 p. m. The officers say they simply came here to coal and wster, and will leave for Honolulu Saturday afternoon.

Baiquiri Bombarded.

HAVANA, June 11.—Several American war ships Friday bombarded Baiquiri some distance east of Aguadores, and near the railway line to Santiago de Cuba. Official advices from Santiago say that the bombardment "caused no damage." Baiquiri is a mining locality and some of the mines are under American control. At the palace it is denied that there has been any bombardment of the Santiago fortifications Friday.

The Carlists Active.

LONDON, June 11.—A rumor circulated Friday evening that a revolution had broken out in Madrid is not confirmed. But very noticeable is the movement of the Carlists, whom Don Carlos has summoned to a conference at Brussels. It is said by those who are in the entourage of the pretender that some great action is on the eve of being taken.

Railroad Train Shelled.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, June 11.—Dispatch boats arriving here report that early in the week the Dolphin shelled a train conveying troops near Santiago. The train was wrecked by the shots and many soldiers were killed and injured.

Russia Threatened by England.

LONDON, June 11.—When questioned in the house of commons as to whether Russia contemplated sending troops to the Yang-Tse-Kiang valley, the parliamentary secretary of the foreign office, George N. Curzon, made an important statement to the effect that such a proceeding, without the consent of China, would be an act of war, and, he added, the government would take the requisite steps to protect British interests. Obviously this is intended as a warning to Russia not to interfere in the Yang-Tse-Kiang valley.

OFFICIAL REPORT.

Adm. Sampson Tells of the Heroism of Lieut. Hobson and His Men.

The Plan of Sinking the Merrimac Was Hobson's — The American Admiral Considers the Deed One of the Bravest Since Cushing's.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The navy department Saturday posted the following bulletin giving a detailed official report from Adm. Sampson upon the heroism of Lieut. Hobson and his men in sinking the Merrimac in the Santiago channel:

"UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP NEW YORK, OFF SANTIAGO, June 3, 1898.—Permit me to call your special attention to Assistant Naval Constructor Hobson. As stated in a special telegram, before coming here I decided to make the harbor entrance secure against the possibility of egress by Spanish ships by obstructing the narrow part of the entrance by sinking a collier at that point. Upon calling upon Mr. Hobson for his professional opinion as to a sure method of sinking the ship he manifested the most lively interest in the problem. After several days consideration he presented a solution which he considered would insure the immediate sinking of the ship when she reached the desired point in the channel. This plan we prepared for execution when we reached Santiago. The plan contemplated a crew of only seven men and Mr. Hobson, who begged that it might be intrusted to him. The anchor chains were arranged on deck for both the anchors, forward and aft, the plan including the anchoring of the ship almost automatically.

As soon as I reached Santiago and I had the collier to work upon and the details were completed, and diligently prosecuted hoping to complete them in one day as the moon and tide served best the first night after our arrival. Notwithstanding every effort the hour of 4 o'clock in the morning arrived, and the preparation was scarcely completed. After a careful inspection of the final preparations I was forced to relinquish the plan for that morning as dawn was breaking. Mr. Hobson begged to try it at all hazards.

This morning proved more propitious, as a prompt start could be made. Nothing could have been more gallantly executed. We waited impatiently after the firing by the Spaniards had ceased. When they did not re-appear from the harbor at 6 o'clock I feared that they had all perished. A steam launch, which had been sent in charge of Naval Cadet Powell to rescue the men, appeared at this time coming out under a persistent fire of the batteries, but brought none of the crew. A careful inspection of the harbor from this ship showed that the vessel Merrimac had been sunk in the channel.

This afternoon the chief of staff of Adm. Cervera came out under a flag of truce with a letter from the admiral extolling the bravery of the crew in an unusual matter.

I can not myself too earnestly express my appreciation of the conduct of Mr. Hobson and his gallant crew. I venture to say that a more brave and daring thing has not been done since Cushing blew up the Albermarle.

Referring to the inspiring letter which you addressed to the officers at the beginning of the war I am sure you will offer a suitable professional reward to Mr. Hobson and his companions.

I must add that Commander J. M. Miller relinquished his command with the very greatest reluctance believing he would retain his command under all circumstances. He was, however, finally convinced that the attempt of another person to carry out the multitude of details which had been in preparation by Mr. Hobson might endanger its proper execution. I therefore took the liberty to relieve him for this reason only. There were hundreds of volunteers who were anxious to participate; there were 150 from the Iowa, nearly as many from this ship, and large numbers from all the other ships, officers and men alike.

(Signed) "W. T. SAMPSON."

Useless to Talk of Peace.

MADRID, June 13.—Several Spanish generals are quoted as saying that Spain can continue the war in Cuba for two years and that it is useless to talk of peace unless on the basis of status quo ante bellum. Political circles declare no suggestions for peace have been received, that such suggestions would be declined, and that Spain has decided to pursue the war to the bitter end.

Hobson and Men Well.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The British consul at Santiago de Cuba has sent the following dispatch via Halifax to the World:

"Replying to your cablegram, Lieut. Hobson and his men are well. They are also well cared for by authorities. I have myself just seen him.

"RAMDEN, British consul."

The Temerario Must Leave Asuncion.

BUENOS AYRES, June 13.—The government of Paraguay, acting upon the representations of the United States consul at Montevideo, has notified the commander of the Spanish torpedo gunboat Temerario, now at Asuncion, that he must disarm that vessel if he desires to remain in port. The Spanish commander refused to do so and thereupon he was informed that the Temerario must leave Asuncion as soon as the repairs of her machinery are completed, which must be quickly done.

HER EXPLANATION.

She Told Him How He Would Make Her and Mamma and Aunty Happier.

There are incidents of real life which constantly prove that truth is often more amusing as well as more strange than fiction. A sweet, gentle-voiced girl—one from whose disposition sarcasm is as far as frost from an active volcano—won the affections of a young man. It was an unintentional conquest on her part, but none the less complete. He propounded the old question and she demurred. He bided his time and again proffered his suit. She again delayed an answer. But the third time she received his question first with silence and then with assent.

"And you will be mine?" he asked.

"Yes."

"It seems too good to be true. When shall the wedding take place?"

"I—I don't know."

"There is no use in putting it off."

"No," she answered; "I think not."

"Say a week from to-day?"

"Very well."

"I knew that you would realize that you can be happier with me than without me," he suggested, a little triumphantly.

"Yes," she answered. "I do realize it now. You see, since Uncle Rob went away, mamma and aunty and I have been quite alone. We all talked it over and agreed that it would be ever so much safer to have a man in the house at nights."—Washington Star.

May Be a Destiny Fellow.

"I have just read," said Chollie, "that the great Napoleon spent more than $4,000 a year on dress. It tewwifies me."

"What terrifies you, you idiot?" asked his disgusted father.

"To find that we are so similar. Who knows but I am one of those destiny fellows."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Chinese Flag.

The standard of the Celestial Empire is a very queer looking affair. It represents the most grotesque of green dragons on a yellow ground. The latter is suggestive not only of the national complexion, but also of that of a sufferer from biliousness. To remove this unbecoming tint from the complexion, use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will speedily regulate your liver, prevent malaria, and remedy dyspepsia, nervousness, rheumatism and kidney omplaint.

Pa's Definition.

Teacher—Harry, can you tell me the meaning of the word "infinitesimal"?

Harry—I can't exactly, but I can tell you what father says it means.

"Very well; your father is a man of learning, and his definition will probably be in accord with that of the books; let us have it, Harry."

"Well, pa says it means a watering place bathing suit."—Richmond Dispatch.

THIRTEEN HOURS.

Fierce Battle Between Marines, Spanish Guerrilas and Regulars at Guanatanamo.

ENGAGEMENT ALMOST CONTINUOUS.

It Commenced at Three O'Clock Saturday Afternoon and Ended at Six O'Clock Sunday Morning.

Four of Our Men Killed and One Wounded — Advance Picket Unaccounted For —Spanish Loss Unknown, But It Was Probably Large.

ON BOARD THE DISPATCH BOAT DAUNTLESS, OFF GUANTANAMO, Sunday, June 19, via MOLE ST. NICHOLAS, Hayti, June 13.—Lieut. Col. R. W. Huntington's battalion marines, which landed from the transport Panther on Friday and encamped on the hill guarding the abandoned cable station at the entrance to the outer harbor of Guanatanamo, has been engaged in beating off a bush attack by Spanish guerillas and regulars since 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The fighting was almost continuous for 13 hours until 6 o'clock Sunday morning, when reinforcements were landed from the Marblehead.

Four of our men were killed and one wounded. The advance pickets under Lieuts. Neville and Shaw are unaccounted for. Among the killed is Assistant Surgeon John Blair Gibbs, son of Maj. Gibbs, of the regular army, who fell in the Custer massacre. His home was at Richmond, Va., but he has been practicing in New York and he entered the service since the war began. He was a very popular officer. The others killed are Serg. Charles H. Smith, of Smallwood; Private William Dunphy, of Gloucester, Mass., and Private James McColgan, of Stoneham, Mass.

Corporal Glass was accidentally wounded in the head.

The Spanish loss is unknown, but it was probably considerable. The splashes of blood found at daylight at the position the Spaniards occupied indicate fatalities, but their comrades carried off the killed and wounded.

The engagement began with desultory firing at the pickets 1,000 yards inland from the camp. Capt. Spicer's company was doing guard duty and was driven in, finally rallying on the camp and repulsing the enemy at 5 o'clock. The bodies of privates McColgan and Durphy were found, both shot in the head. The large cavities caused by the bullets, which inside a range of 500 yards have a rotary motion, indicate that the victims were killed at close range.

The bodies were stripped of shoes, hats and cartridge belts, and horribly mutilated with machetes.

When they were brought in the whole battalion formed three sides of a hollow square about the camp on the hill top. Below in the bay were the war ships at anchor. Inland from the hill camp is a deep ravine and beyond this are high hills. The adjacent country is heavy with a thicket growth. The sky was blanketed with clouds, and when the sun set a gale was blowing seaward. Night fell, thick and impenetrable.

The Spanish squads concealed in the chaparrel cover had the advantage, the Americans on the ridge furnishing fine targets against the sky and the white tents. The Spaniards fought from cover till midnight, discoverable only by flashes at which the marines fired volleys. The repeaters sounded like crackers in a barrel.

The Marblehead launch, a Colt machine gun in her bow, pushed up the bay outflanking the Spaniards, and it is thought that some were killed. The marines trailed much blood to the water's edge and there lost it. Sharks are numerous in the vicinity.

The ships threw their search lights ashore, the powerful electric eyes sweeping the deep tropic foliage and disclosing occasionally skulking parties of Spaniards. It all resembled a transformation scene at the harbor.

Each discovery of the enemy was greeted by the cracks of carbine fire along the edge of the camp ridge or by the long roll of the launch's machine guns, searching the thickets with a leaden stream.

Shortly after midnight came the main attack. The Spaniards made a gallant charge up the southwest slope, but were met by repeated volleys from the main body and broke before they were one-third of the way up the hill; but they came so close that at points there was almost a hand to hand struggle. The officers used their revolvers. Three Spaniards got through the open formation to the edge of the camp. Col. Jose Campina, the Cuban guide, discharged his revolver, and they, turning and finding themselves without support, ran helter skelter down the reverse side of the hill. It was during this assault that Assistant Surgeon Gibbs was killed. He was shot in the head in front of his own tent, the farthest point of attack. He fell into the arms of Private Sullivan and both dropped. A second bullet threw dust in their faces. Surgeon Gibbs lived ten minutes, but did not regain consciousness.

The surgeons of the hospital corps then removed their quarters to the trenches about the old Spanish stockade north of the camp. The attacks were continued at intervals throughout the rest of the night, with firing from small squads in various directions.

Toward morning the fire slackened. Dawn is the favorite time for attack, and, as the east paled, the marines lying on their guns were aroused. Some were actually asleep, as they had no rest for 48 hours and tired nature could no longer stand the strain. But no attack came.

Three new 12-pound field guns, which could not be used during the night for fear of hitting our own men, shelled several squads of Spaniards after daylight. They dove into the bushes like prairie dogs into burrows as the shells broke over them in the gray dawn. As the correspondent talked with Maj. Cockrell, who was in charge of the outposts, word came of the finding of the body of Sergt. Smith. He was reported as having been killed at five o'clock on the previous day, but it appears that he had been seen alive at ten o'clock in the evening. When and how he was killed no one knows at this writing. Neither had the men been mustered nor had the outposts of Lieut. Neville and Shaw been relieved.

Lieut.-Col. Huntington and Maj. Cockrell gave high praise to the nerve and steadiness of officers and men, especially the young ones, as the engagement was a baptism of fire for a large majority. The men were in darkness and in a strange land, but they stood to their posts with courage and fortitude and there was no symptom of panic.

The marines, though very much exhausted, were eager for more fighting, promising to inflict heavy punishment. They complimented the daring of the Spaniards with characteristic camp profanity.

Sunday the amplest precautions were taken and as the Dauntless left reinforcements were landing from the Marblehead. A stormy time was expected.

Estimates vary as to the attacking force, some say 200 and the figures run as high as 1,000. Col. Campina, the Cuban guide, said the Spaniards were mostly irregulars, but the reports of the discharge of Mauser rifles would indicate that they were regulars, as most of the guerillas carry Remingtons. The Cuban guerillas, as a rule, have more dash and courage than the regulars.

The new campaign uniforms prove satisfactory and are almost invisible at a distance of 200 yards. The Lee guns caused several accidents in drawing cartridges, Corporal Glass shattered his hand.

Despite the loss of the men, which is keenly regretted, the marines rejoice that they have been engaged in their first fight on Cuban soil. They sailed from New York the day war was declared and expected to land within a week at Havana. Since then, until landed on the shore of Guantanamo bay, they had been cooped up on the Panther and they had begun to fear that the troops would bent them after all.

In controlling the outer harbor of Guantanamo, where Lieut.-Col. Huntington's battalion of marines landed on Friday, Rr. Adm. Sampson secures possession of the Cuban terminus of the French cable to Hayti. The apparatus in the office at the harbor mouth was wrecked by a shell but the cable steamer Adria has instruments and operators aboard and direct communication with Washington will soon be established. The distance overland to Santiago around the bay is about sixty miles and the roads have been rendered impassable by the Cubans under Pedro Perez. The first division of the Cuban army claims to have 4,000 men, but these figures are probably over estimated. The Cubans believe that there are about 3,500 soldiers in the vicinity of Caimanera, which lies at the entrance to the inner harbor. Guantauamo City is inland about 15 miles. The two harbors are connected by a narrow channel. It is the outer harbor which Adm. Sampson now holds with the Marblehead, the Yosemite and the Vixen, and with a battalion of marines on the crest of a blunt topped eminence commanding the entrance on the western side. In the inner harbor are two small Spanish gunboats and at Caimanera there is a battery.

An expedition of three steam launches, officered by Lieut. Norman, Ensign Eustis, son of Mr. James D. Eustis, former United States ambassador to France, and Cadet G. Van Orden, under the general command of Lieut. Anderson, of the cruiser Marblehead, Saturday night, dragged for mines, but found none. Lieut. Anderson, who distinguished himself at Cienfeugos, pulled a dingy within 50 yards of the fort without being discovered. He found the fort to consist of masonry, with three guns mounted seaward.

Judging from the panic in which the Spaniards fled from the village at Fisherman's Point, they will scatter at the first approach. They left at Fisherman's Point three antiquated Howitzers, several cases of ammunition, shell and canister, some Mauser rifles and a regimental flag of the Infantoria Del Principe No. 3.

Every precaution has been taken to guard the men from disease. All huts in the locality have been razed, large casks of Spanish wine have been smashed, two wells have been boarded up and all the drinking water used is supplied from the fleet. The marines are well equipped for the campaign. The camp will probably be named Camp McCalla, after the commander of the Marblehead, who is indefatigable and has not removed his clothing since the bombardment.

Sunday morning the British steamer Newfoundland, of Montreal, with a general cargo from Halifax, steamed into the harbor. Her commander was greatly surprised at the presence of the Americans, but he retained enough composure to dip his flag three times and then started to put about. A shot across the bows from the Marblehead stopped him and the vessel was boarded, her papers showing that she was bound for Jamaica. The captain explained that he had put in to see if he could get a return cargo of sugar. He was informed that he could not and was then allowed to proceed.

DESTRUCTIVE FLAMES.

Case's Immense Power House, Detroit, Mich., a Total Loss—Five Firemen Badly Burned.

DETROIT, Mich., June 13.—G. F. Case's immense power building on Congress street, west, was discovered on fire at 3 o'clock Saturday morning. The building was a very large seven-story structure, occupied by many light manufacturing concerns. It was completed a year ago on the site formerly occupied by a large livery stable, which had burned, causing the death of five men. The power building is already a total loss.

A four-story annex to the Buhl office building facing on Congress street west was set afire on top by falling of burning debris from the Case building. The annex was badly gutted. Part of spire of St. Paul's Episcopal church was burned. Two firemen were badly burned and three were injured by falling walls.

Several incipient blazes started in the Wayne county bank building and other office structures in the vicinity and numerous awnings and other inflammable materials were consumed. Several little fires caught in the 11-story Union Trust building, which was directly to leeward of the burning power building, but further serious spread of flames was checked. An old two-story wooden structure west of the Case building was crushed by a portion of the tottering wall falling upon it. The front walls of the Case building leaned outward menacingly and finally fell in the street, portions at a time. Nothing of the Case building was saved.

The case building was valued at $90,000. It was insured for $65,000. The contents are roughly estimated at $100,000, but may reach above that amount.

FORTS BURNED.

They Are Destroyed by Order of Gen. Blanco—Troops Being Concentrated in Large Cities.

KEY WEST, Fla., June 13.—The Spanish, under orders from Blanco, are burning all block forts and the troops are concentrating in large cities. From three southern ports of Cuba come reports of destruction. Plantations have been ravaged and homes burned, so that the "Yankees" would find nothing in case of a landing. The guns on block forts have been ordered north. Blanco has built a new trocha extending from Havana to Matanzas, and he gives out that all new fortifications have rapid-fire guns of heavy caliber. There is positive information that more than 20,000 Spanish troops are in Havana and Matauzas.

Choynski to Fight McCoy.

CHICAGO, June 13.—Joe Choynski has signed articles to fight Kid McCoy 20 rounds before the Hawthorne Athletic club of Buffalo, New York, August 27. The men will fight at catch weights. The purse offered is $7,500, winner to take 75 per cent., loser 25 per cent. According to the articles signed, the men are at liberty to hit with one arm free in the breakaways. To bind the match each man will immediately put up a forfeit of $500.

Light Artillery for the Philippines.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 13.—Seven batteries of light artillery will go to Manilla if present plans are carried out. Orders have been issued for Batteries B, H, K and L of the Third artillery, now at the Presidio, to join the command of Gen. Merritt for duty in the Philippines.

A Washington dispatch says that the Monadnock has been ordered to go to Hawaii with a transport carrying a large number of marines, raise the American flag there and establish a base of supplies.

SUING FOR PEACE.

Spain Now Sees the Utter Hopelessness of Continuing the War.

Capt. Gen. Augusti Will Be Ordered to Make the Best Terms With Adm. Dewey—All Opponents to the Government Restless.

LONDON, June 10.—The Madrid correspondent of the Daily Mail says:

There is now little doubt that Spain, seeing the hopelessness of further continuing the war, is approaching the powers with a view of obtaining an honorable peace. The cabinet council Thursday finally authorized Duke Almodovar to go to expedite diplomatic action in consequence the duke is now [illegible] with certain ambassadors and ministers in Madrid.

Instructions have been telegraphed to the Spanish minister in Vienna and orders likewise given to Senor Aguera, the undersecretary of state, to proceed at once to the Austrian capital. Spain is unquestionably looking to Austria for assistance in her distress. It is unlikely that any appeal will be made to the pope as the earlier intervention of his holiness met with a discouraging reception in America.

Probably Capt. Gen. Augusti will be ordered to make the best terms he can with Adm. Dewey. A minister has informed me that if reinforcements were on their way to the Philippines Augusti would be ordered to hold out to the last, but as they were not, Augusti would act "according to circumstances"—a mild euphonism for surrendering.

The cruiser Lepanto is still at Cartagena completing her crew. Orders have been issued for between 2,000 and 3,000 men to be assembled at Cadiz, in case Adm. Camara's squadron may lack its full complement.

All the forces opposed to the government are showing signs of restlessness. Marquis de Caralbo, the chief agent of Don Carlos, assures me that while the war lasts the Carlists will remain quiet, but, should a dishonorable peace be negotiated, they will "act in accordance with their ideas of duty." This is a plain statement and should not be lost sight of, since it is hardly possible that the government will be able to negotiate a peace which the people will not consider crushing.

CAPE VERDE FLEET.

It Is Positively Known That All the Vessels Are in Santiago Harbor With the Exception of the Terror.

OFF SANTIAGO DE CUBA, June, 4, via KINGSTON, JAMAICA, June 6.—After driving the Spanish fleet into a more protected position in the harbor by the bombardment of Tuesday, Commodore Schley opened communication with the insurgents, 18 miles from Santiago, to the east. They were urged to obtain, if possible, the names and number of the vessels of the fleet inside the harbor, as the contour of the land at the entrance made it impossible to accurately determine by a view from the American fleet just how many vessels of the Spanish squadron was there.

On Friday afternoon Lieut. Sharp, of the Vixen, went to the place of rendezvous and received from the insurgents a map of the harbor, showing the entire Cape Verde fleet with the exception of the destroyer Terror inside, and close up to the city under the protection of the guns mounted on Blanco battery at the northern extremity of the harbor. The ships there, according to this chart, are the Cristobal Colon, the Vizcaya, the Almirante Oquendo, the Maria Teresa and the Reina Mercedes (destroyed by the American war ships since this dispatch was written), all cruisers of the first class and heavily armed, together with three torpedo boats. The definiteness of this information naturally gave Commodore Schley great satisfaction. Although he had known that several ships of the enemy were there, he was not certain that some others had not succeeded in getting away or had not been sent in another direction.

YELLOW FEVER.

The Town of McHenry, Miss., Declared in Quarantine by the Secretary of the State Board of Health.

JACKSON, Miss., June 10.—Gen. J. F. Hunter, secretary of the state board of health, gave out the following statement at 10:30 o'clock Thursday night:

"It having been reported to me by Drs. Haralson and Folkes, sanitary inspectors of this board, that seven cases of yellow fever existed at McHenry, Miss., I hereby declare the town of McHenry in quarantine under charge of Dr. Haralson, who will observe the quarantine and sanitary rules and regulations adopted by this board. J. F. HUNTER,

"Sec'y Mississippi Board of Health."

Mrs. Day Leaves the Hospital.

CLEVELAND, O., June 10.—Mrs. Wm. R. Day, wife of the secretary of state, has so far recovered her health as to be able to leave the Cleveland general hospital, where she underwent a dangerous operation and has been under treatment for the past six weeks. Mrs. Day has returned to her home in Canton. She will not go to Washington to join her husband at present, but will seek a quiet summer residence, where it is hoped she will fully regain her lost strength.

The senate recedes from its coinage of the silver siegniorage amendment, and a substitute is agreed to simply authorizing and directing the coinage of not less than one and one-half millions of silver dollars per month from the silver bullion held in the treasury; such silver dollars to be applied as provided by the act of July 14, 1890.

The house accepts the senate rates on cigars and cigaretties, and the senate accepts the house proposition imposing an additional tax on stocks on hand, but reducing the tax on such stocks one-half, and excepting from its operation stocks not exceeding 1,000 pounds of tobacco, 20,000 cigars and cigarettes.

The house accepts the senate amendment imposing a tax on all speculative sales on stock and produce exchanges.

The senate accepts the house exemption of receipts from stamp taxes.

The senate recedes from its amendment imposing stamp taxes on articles sold under a trade mark or any name or designation not open to general use.

The house agreed to the conference report on the war revenue bill. Vote 154 to 107.

The republicans who voted against the adoption of the conference report on the war revenue bill are: Brewster, Henry (Ct.), Hill, Littaur, McIntyre.

The democrats who voted for the report were; Cummings, Driggs, Fitzgerald, McAleer, McClellan.

A very strong effort will be made to secure a vote in the senate Friday before adjournment on the war bill, so that it may go the president this week. Many senators believe that the effort will be successful.

WARSAW, Ind., June 10.—Michael Darr, who was in jail on the charge of grand larceny, broke jail Thursday morning and made good his escape.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—SENATE—Beyond the passage of an urgent deficiency bill made necessary by the war with Spain, the senate accomplished little Monday. The deficiency measure carries appropriations for the war and navy establishments aggregating $47,746,000. These appropriations are in addition to the amounts to be carried later by the general deficiency bill. During the greater part of the session the measure providing for the taking of the twelfth and subsequent censuses was under consideration, but no progress was made towards its completion.

HOUSE—After the revenue bill was sent to conference the session of the house Monday was devoted to routine business, chiefly under suspension of the rules, a number of bills being passed. Adjournment was taken pending the disposal of a measure providing a code of criminal law and procedure for Alaska.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—SENATE—The bill for the protection of the people of the Indian territory passed. It provides for the allotment in severalty of certain lands to the Indians of the territory, the payment of interest claims to the Chickasaw Indians and the ratification of the agreement affected with the Indians by the Dawes commission. The discussion of the census bill precipitated a civil service debate which had not been concluded when the senate adjourned.

HOUSE—After disposing of the urgent war deficiency bill as passed, with amendments by the senate, the house Tuesday considered the conference report upon the sundry civil bill. The report so far as it embodied agreements was adopted and the house then began voting severally upon the senate amendments, upon which no agreement had been reached in conference. Of these there are 68. The house Tuesday considered eight of these, acting favorably upon three and rejecting the remainder. Consideration will continue Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—SENATE—A bill providing for the taking of the 12th census was passed Wednesday after a debate which occupied the greater part of three days. Under it, if it should become a law, a director of the census, an assistant director and five expert statisticians will be appointed immediately to make the preliminary arrangements for the taking of the census of 1900. A determined effort was made to provide that the employes of the census bureau should be examined and certified by the civil service commission, but it failed by a vote of 18 to 31. A provision was inserted that not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators should belong to one political party.

HOUSE—The house Wednesday disposed of the senate amendments of the sundry civil bill and agreed to further conference. The conference report upon the post office appropriation bill was adopted without debate, and the house proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the participation of volunteer soldiers in congressional elections. Adjourment was taken pending disposal, and it will come up Thursday. The session began and ended Wednesday with Hawaiian incidents, Mr. Grosvenor (rep., O.), leader of the annexationists, figuring in each instance. They grew out of the anxiety of those who want early consideration lest the opposition, win a victory and effect delay, if not the defeat of the resolutions at this session.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—SENATE—Mr. Lodge (Mass.) made some sensational disclosures concerning the disposition of the money appropriated by congress a short time ago in payment of a claim of the book concern of the Methodist Episcopal church south. He introduced a resolution directing the claims committee to make an investigation of the matter and report to the senate what if any action could be taken. The "omnibus claim bill," carrying something over $9,000,000, 40 private pension bills and several measures from the general calendar were passed.

HOUSE—After five hours devoted to the consideration of the bill to enable volunteer soldiers to vote in congressional elections, the conference report on the war revenue bill was presented to the house Thursday. Consideration was interrupted by a recess at 5 o'clock Thursday evening, at which hour the report was taken up again and after three hours debate, involving a wide range of subjects and some sensational features, it was voted up on and adopted, 154 to 107. The election measure will be disposed of Friday, immediately after the meeting of the house. Thursday Mr. Pierce (dem., Tenn.) made a vigorous attack upon the prosecution of the war and the alleged unwarranted delay in affording relief to the Cubans. A sensational feature was the clash between Mr. Grosvenor (rep., O.) and Mr. Swanson (dem., Va.) growing out of the former's attack on the latter's speech in criticism of the revenue bill. The Hawaiian annexationists made a strong fight to get the election bill out of the way to prevent its going over the summer and likely to postpone another day their intended effort to force consideration of the annexation resolutions in the house.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—SENATE—Friday the conference report on the war revenue bill was agreed to by the senate after a discussion lasting four hours. The debate upon the measure was without special incident and was entirely devoid of acrimonious features. It was a foregone conclusion that the report would be agreed to, and the only question of interest involved was how soon a vote could be reached. The report was agreed to by the decisive vote of 43 to 22. Every republican voted for the measure and their votes were supplemented by those of eight democrats, one silver republican and one independent. The democrats who voted for the adoption of the report were Messrs. Caffery, Gorman, Lindsay, McEnery, Mitchell, Morgan, Murphy and Turpie; the silver republican was Mr. Mantle and the independent was Mr. Kyle. The vote against the report was cast by 16 democrats, three silver republicans and three populists. As soon as the engrossed bill can be signed by the presiding officers of the two branches of congress it will be sent to the president.

HOUSE—The feature of Friday's session of the house was the securing of an agreement to consider and vote upon the Newlands resolution to annex Hawaii. Beginning Saturday the debate will proceed until 5 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon when a vote will be taken. The speakership case Friday determined to force consideration and for three hours the opposition filibustered. The bill to enable volunteer soldiers to vote at congressional elections was passed, and a number of minor measures, chiefly of a private nature, were considered.

June 13.—Uncle Lum Rice has been quite sick for several days.

Mrs. Elizabeth Huey has gone to Missouri.

Miss Alpha Riley has recovered from a serious throat trouble.

J. W. Kennedy had ground ready, but did not have tobacco plants.

Spence Smith and Lee Busby have joined the "Pickwick" fishing club.

The Misses Neal, of Hathaway, were visiting Mrs. Dora Bannister, Sunday.

Mrs. Joe Scott and daughters are pleased with their new dining room paper.

Mott Houston had a valuable horse cut by barbed wire. He was offered $90 for him.

Mrs. James A. Huey has returned from a visit to her parents in Gallatin county.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis, of Greenup St., were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar, last week.

Miss Minnie Bristow has returned from a visit of several days in Covington with relatives.

Messrs. C. & D. Hafer, of Hebron, were the guests of friends here, Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Winston, of near Louisville, were visiting relatives and friends here, last week.

Mrs. J. H. Corbin says her health has improved 100 per cent.—a nicely papered dining room explains it.

Hon. L. W. Lassing and daughter, Miss Therese, will accept our thanks for delicious asparagus and other favors, last week.

Robt. Adams, of Hathaway, has started a tunnel in front of Pink Neal's and will run it to Cuba so that any of the boys who get real patriotic down there can take a short cut and go on their own hook.

"Colonel" Rachal had his teeth sharpened up for fried chicken, but, bless your soul, them chickens went to laying at the eventful age of 5 months and Mrs. Rachal is selling the eggs at $3 per setting (limited.)

Mrs. J. W. Williams purchased the latest novelties in carpeting in Cincinnati and was pleased to find the colors and designs harmonized perfectly with those in the wall paper purchased of Rachal & Co. This proves they sell the latest designs.

The farmers around here were getting faces on 'em 38 inches long because of the "dry spell," but since the glorious rains have come their faces have taken on good form and they seem as happy as sunflowers. Hundreds of acres have been set in tobacco.

Mrs. Geo. H. Stephenson who weighs only 95 lbs., is the mother of six fat, healthy children, does her own house work, walks two miles with ease and has an eye for the curious in nature, as she left at our sanctum a very remarkable bunch of cherries that we shall call "the twins."

Mrs. C. T. Rice and Mrs. Jno. Garrison gave their Sunday-school classes an outing at Buffington Springs, one day last week. They served refreshments and had a grand time for the young folks. Mr. Buffington gave them unlimited freedom of the grounds and extended every courtesy, and Mr. J. S. Houston hitched up his two-horse wagon and hauled a jolly load of the young folks over there.

We are requested to say that the Boone Union Lodge of Masons will entertain the third Saturday night with refreshments, after conferring Fellowcraft and Master degrees. Members of sister lodges are invited to be present—Editor of the Recorder will have a seat reserved for him and is expected to be present. The committee of arrangement, Messrs. Voshell, Crouch and Stephenson promise to have everything in tip top order.

The festival, Saturday night, was a success in every particular—good crowd and good receipts, plenty to eat and lots of fun. We interviewed a streak of lightning and a run away horse Thursday evening and could not go, but sent a first-class ice cream absorber in our 9 year hopeful. He certainly enjoyed the affair if his dreams were to be taken as evidence. In his dreams he talked out loud and we caught the items "whiz, the strawberries and cream were good." "The duets were daisies." "Rachael and Sarah were so pretty;" Misses Ella Tanner and Eva Smith were fluuyy, but Miss Lilly Corbin made me laugh myself most to death;" the singing was lovely and the lemonade was so good;" Mrs. Wm. Smith gave the largest saucers," &c. Many other nice things were said, but its enough to know that all had a grand time and would have meeted down if the thermometer had gone up two more degrees [illegible] at 170 in the shade.

It has been so dry that the strawberries have not amounted to much.

Mr. Lee Cropper and son were in this neighborhood Thursday and Friday.

Quite a number of people from this neighborhood attended the June meeting.

The farmers around here have set out their tobacco and are getting their machines ready to cut wheat.

The basket meeting at the Bullittsville Christian church, Sunday, was a very pleasant affair. A delightful and bountiful dinner was served.

The ice cream and strawberry supper given by the Endeavors, of Point Pleasant Christian church, was a success in every respect. Over $40 was cleared. It is to be presented to Miss Grace Russell, who has gone to California for her health.

Miss Lora Diers, the handsome daughter of Col. Henry Diers, has returned home after a delightful visit to her aunt in Cincinnati.

Ed Fullilove is back again from a jaunt to different places. His late residence in Newport was enough and he made tracks for home satisfied that Walton was good enough for him.

The Sunday school children had an entertainment, Saturday night. That versatile delineator of humorous enaracter, Joe Reed, fairly surpassed himself on the occasion. Verily, Joe's personifications are always up to the mark.

A particular friend of the Hon. A. S. Berry wrote him a letter, a few days ago, to interest himself in getting him into the signal corps. Well! Good Bye, Jimmie. No. Let us wait till he starts before we wring our hearts with anguish at parting with him.

Young Master Eddie Phelps paid his old friend, G. M. Casey, a visit at Mr. N. M. Northcutt's, on Decoration Day. Mr. and Mrs. Northcutt were delighted with the youngster, Mrs. N. pronounced him the brightest 15 year old boy she had ever seen. He was warmly pressed to renew his visit whenever the C. N. O. & T. P. railway gives him another holiday.

Messrs. J. C. Holder, F. Waitz and Orlando Hicks, received postals, last week, notifying them that according to orders they could not be taken in the engineer corps now being raised in Cincinnati; that it was to be an Ohio affair, exclusively. As Dr. Gaines said of John J. Richards, "If he does not alter his mode of life he will break into paradise one of these fine days." So of J. C. Holder—if he holds to his present views he may break into Uncle Sam's service some of these days.

The Cynthiana Democrat has a weekly bulletin from its old foreman now with the Second Kentucky volunteer infantry. What is to hinder the RECORDER from having the same? Walton feels proud of her four volunteers in Bob Sherrers' Company A, and everybody now takes an interest in them. Eugene Demolsey will make a good correspondent and a weekly bulletin by him will add interest to the paper. Send him some stationery Bro. Riddell, with instructions, to Lytle Walker, Co., Ga. I'll guarantee a response. We want to hear every week from our quartette. Gene can then use his pencil for all his friends in one letter.—[Supplies forwarded.—ED.]

Mr. John Jack returned home, last Saturday, after a trip to Indianapolis, where he attended a commencement.

We have heard one of our young ladies say that she was tired of hearing of the war, and she hoped it would close. The supposition is her best sweetheart is talking of going to the army.

Died, on the 7th the 8 year old child of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Moore, of Big Bone springs. It was thought it had diptheria. The remains were brought to Big Boue church, where the funeral services were conducted by Rev. S. M. Adams, after which the remains were interred in the cemetery there.

FROM CARROLL COUNTY.

[News]

A corn crib on James Coghill's farm containing 9 barrels of corn and about $15 worth of tools belonging to Jack Crafton was set on fire Monday morning while Mr. Crofton was away from home. It stood close to the barn, and was pushed over by J. J. Humble, thus saving the barn and its contents from destruction.

On Saturday last, as J. J. Ashby was driving a splendid spirited young horse it became frightened at a wagon load of hogs near 'Squire May's gate, and ran off. Mr. Ashby saw his danger and jumped out, the animal running on to Mr. Forbes' place, where it was caught. Mr. Ashby had his head and arm cut and was bruised about the hip and back. He again got the horse and put on an other bit, but it ran off again, running over T. W. Vories, who was on horseback, breaking his horses' leg. Mr. Vories was also considerably bruised.

FROM GRANT COUNTY.

[Courier.]

There are enough strapping big young men around Williamstown who have nothing to do to form a company for the volunteer army.

Charley Nicholson and Harry Mathews have purchased the grocery store of Owen Hulett & Co., and will take possession on the 10th of this month.

The raise of 25 per cent. made by the Board of Equalization on the lands and personalty subject to taxation and ten per cent. on town lots puts the taxes up to about the same amount they were in 1897.

Charlie Finch, who is visiting his grandfather, J. M. Riddell, is very anxious to join the volunteer army, and will do so just as soon as the recruiting station for the Second Regiment of Kentucky is opened. Charlie is a young man of good deportment and will make a good soldier.

There has been a very considerable electric light talk in Williamstown the past week. A gentleman from Cincinnati was in town to get a fifty year franchise of the streets and enough lights subscribed to enable him to put in an electric light plant. He was before the town board on Saturday and unfolded his plans and purposes.

Last Friday about the noon hour something resembling a ball of fire—presumably a meteor—was seen by a number of persons south and east of town, passing over that section of the country. The object, whatever it was, seemed to travel quite slowly, and did not look to be more than three or four hundred feet above the surface of the earth.

From every hillside and hollow in Grant county comes the happy notes of "Bob White." The laying season has been on for thirty days and the hatching season is fairly under way. There are more quail in Grant county at the beginning of the hatching season than there has usually been at the beginning of the hunting season heretofore, and if the weather is favorable for the little birds Grant county will be almost alive with quail this fall and we will all have quail on toast.

The free show is drawing good audiences.

Elihu Alden has been appointed Stamp Deputy at Petersburg, and is on duty.

Monday night Sheriff Beall, Deputy Sheriff Allphin and Stanley Clutterbuck were engaged till nearly day light watching a suspicious character who came into town about dark, after having laid in G. G. Hughes' lot just out of town all day, where he was seen several times. They arrested the fellow and searched him, but finding nothing that authorized his detention they turned him loose. He could give no satisfactory account of himself, but claimed he was on his way from Cincinnati to Rising Sun. His actions were too suspicious and the boys decided to keep an eye on him. He disappeared some time after midnight.

The examining trial of Kite Story for the killing of Colonel Carrier at Hamilton, was held by Judge Roberts, last Thursday. The hearing of the evidence consumed most of the day, and Story was held over to the Circuit Court in the sum of $1,000, J. W. Kennedy, of Union, signing the bond.

Several local base ballists played a game here last Saturday, the principal features of which were the numerous brilliant errors made by each player. No one was killed or seriously disabled, but John Lassing has a bruise on one arm that looks like he might have been in collision with one of Cavera's sheils.

Rev. David Blyth and wife, of West Liberty, Ohio, were the guests of his sister, Mrs. Dudley Rouse, last Thursday night.

Mrs. Robert W. Rouse fell when gathering cherries, Monday afternoon, and received an ugly gash on her head. Dr. Furnish dressed the wound.

Mrs. Julia Elston, of the Hathaway neighborhood, has been at the bedside of her mother, Mrs. Reed, who has been quite poorly for several days.

A license was issued by the County Clerk, Monday, for the marriage of Gottlieb F. Schramm and Miss Frances Lowline, all of Florence. The groom is the foreman in the office of the Boone County Banner.

Elder E. Stephens, 88; M. S. Rice, 81; Arthur Blyth, 81; W. T. Smith, 80; Absalom Aylor, 78; H. P. Crisler, 77, were all at the Methodist church here Sunday afternoon. Their combined ages is 485, being an average of 80 years. It is seldom that so many as old men as the above six gentlemen are met in as small a crowd as that of Sunday.

The horse driven by Alonzo Beemou and two other young men to the show at Hebron, last Saturday night, ran off with them on their return trip and tore up the vehicle and broke the small bone in one of young Beemon's legs. Dr. Furnish was called to Milton Beemon's, three miles out on the Florence pike, about 12 o'clock that night to reduce the fracture.

Ben Wainscott, of the Francesville neighborhood, was the first man to pay his taxes for 1898. He walked up to the captain's desk at 7:31 o'clock, June 13, tendered coin of the realm in sufficient amount and demanded his receipt which was issued instanter. The sheriff is now ready to accommodate any and all who desire to follow the good example set by Mr. Wainscott.

Elder Ed Stephens, of Erlanger, preached to quite a good sized congregation at the Methodist church, at this place, last Sunday afternoon. The appointment for the services was for 10 a. m., but owing to the funeral of Mrs. Berkshire the services were postpone until the afternoon, and many who would have attended were not aware of the change in time. He will preach here on the second Sunday in July, at 10 a. m.

Yesterday was flag day, owing to the fact that the present national flag was adopted by Congress on the 14th of June, 1777. The first official flag of the present design ever used on sea or land was made in June, 1776, from a rough drawing modified by Gen. Washington, who substituted the star of five points instead of the six pointed star that had been originally in the draft. The day ought to have been appropriately observed this year.

"Larger offerings with a greater proportion of good tobacco and considerable advance in prices were the features of this week's leaf tobacco market. Doubtless the improved bidding of the previous week induced the larger offerings, and the fact that under the increased supply prices still went up shows that the demand is very strong. Red goods, heavy bodied, are comparatively the best selling, but all other grades have shared in the improvement. The slowest to respond is, probably, fine leaf, the 20 cent point being reached only seldom, though 23 cents was paid for one hogshead at the Morris House. These goods, however, are being offered very sparingly."

UNION, - - - - - KENTUCKY.

Mrs. Edgar Berkshire died at her home two miles and a half out on the Bellevue pike, last Saturday afternoon, after about a week's illness. She was the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. D. Cloud, and was in her 39th year. She and Edgar Berkshire, son of John J. Berkshire, were married at Elder E. Stephens' on the 20th day of April, '79. To that union two children were born, one a son, who is about 17 years old; the other a daughter aged about 11 years. Mrs. Berkshire was a member of the Universalist church at this place, and lived the christian life she professed. She was a quiet, unassuming lady and made a friend of everyone with whom she became acquainted. Her death disrupts a happy and contented family, and the bereaved husband and children have many friends who mingle tears of sympathy with those of their grief.

The remains were interred in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery Sunday at 11 o'clock, Rev. M. J. Hoover conducting a brief service at the grave in the presence of a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives.

As soon as the rain ceased falling, last Wednesday evening, farmer Jas. L. Clore rushed over to town and recruited a strong force of the surplus laborers about town to assist him plant tobacco on his farm out on Woolper Heights the next morning. Thursday morning he headed his force, but before arriving at the scene of action, James Sinyback, his aiddecamp sent a courier who informed him it had not rained on his land, and the farmer fell back to Burlington and mustered his force out of the service.

Mound Field Farm.
(North Hebron.)

June 13.—Owing to showery weather we have no snake stories to report this week.

Harry Roberts, in his new buggy, is seen every Sunday evening and four times through the week, passing by Mound Field. He must be drumming up a trade in the north end of the county.

Frank Whitcomb landed a 15 pound catfish from Crigler's poud, last week. He is some better than he was, but he has not yet fully recovered his equalibrium.

Last Saturday night Prof. Welsh, of the German Medicine Co. gave a pig to the person guessing nearest to the number of beans in a jar. Robt. Bradford, sr., guessed the exact number and, of course, he got the pig.

Happening at Taylorsport, the other day, we reported to Admiral Phelps ou board the Flag Ship, Horace Goodin. We found him highly elated over a capture he had made a few hours before. It appears that the torpedo boat destroyer, Joe Graves, was doing scout duty just outside of the harbor, when she sighted a strange craft loaded with furniture and willow ware. A signal was sent from the Admiral to fire on her and bring her to, which was done. She proved to be a blockade runner, commanded by Senor Augusti Martin Extine, of the Spanish navy. The Admiral informed me that Col. Maxon, of the engineer corps, was removing all obstructions from the channel, at which he and his men seemed busily engaged. The auxiliary cruiser, Jake Fox, was on the docks for repairs. The Admiral stated that he and his men were anxious to engage the enemy, or anything to kill the monotony of life in a struge country.

Dr. Sayre, Henry Quick, Mike Dye and Add Batterson made up a fishing party, last Thursday, and sought the turbid waters of Gunpowder, where they might engage in the arduous task of landing suckers. The Doctor being the better versed in piscatorial affairs than the others, was chosen a committee of one to procure the bait. He called at Hafer's butcher shop, and ordered some scraps of most anything done up, and he would call and get them. George, being glad to accommodate him, got a box and filled it with some rotton potatoes, banana peelings and empty sardine boxes, and carefully folded it up. They soon arrived at what is known as the "long hole," and preparations began for war on the finny tribe. Their lines were got out and the box of bait. You may imagine their feelings when its contents was revealed, and the cruel joke dawned upon them. By request Add sang, "On the Banks of the Wabash," several times, and as the shades of evening were falling, they wended their way homeward, Mike Dye with a sun-fish 14 inches long —the others—nit.

Jas. Clore is very brilliant with his newly shined-up buggy.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, June 10th, 1898.

At last, after all sorts of unexpected delays that army has got off to Cuba. It is said that some of the orders sent from Washington were hot enough to melt the wires. There was evidently occasion for this use of hot words, as the delay in getting the army started from Tampa prevented Santiago being captured when Admiral Sampson knocked the outer fortifications to pieces so completely that he was able to land a force of marines to spike the guns that his bombs had not made useless and to take possession of several positions, aided by insurgents. Gen. Miles did not go sonth a day too soon. His report of the condition of affairs at Tampa caused consternation in administration circles for awhile, but he was ordered to adopt heroic measures to straighten out matters and to hurry the army off, and he has at least got the army off, if he hasn't straightened everything; and is now engaged in getting another army ready to be started to Porto Rico just as soon as it is known that the movement against Santiago has been successful. Congress has found it difficult to keep quiet, but the disposition to regard all well that ends well is causing a suspension of judgment until the end is shown to be well or otherwise. That it will be all right in the end is certain enough, but there can be no other reason than politics for dragging this war along until the Congressional campaign.

Although the Treasury Department has widely advertised its intention to offer the $200,000,000 in bonds, which will be the first issue under the authority conferred by the war-revenue bill, to the people, Secretary Gage makes no secret of his belief that the greater portion of these bonds will be bought by banks. It is probable also that he will much prefer seeing the banks get them. He is a banker and has always looked after the interest of the banks.

Alabama men are telling many stories illustrating the peculiarity, grit and determination of the family of Lieutenant Hobson, the hero of the daring feat of sinking the Merrimac in the entrance to the Santiago harbor. This remarkable family lives in the little town of Greensboro. Lieut. Hobson has a brother at West Point and another practicing law. His lawyer brother earned a reputation by the way in which he argued the first case he had before the Alabama Supreme Court. It was an appeal from a lower court, and the following was his opening speech: "Your honors, this case has been decided by you already seven times and each time it has been decided wrong." He lost his case, of course, but he got advertised all over his state. The whole family seems to make a specialty of upsetting precedent and doing things in their own way. Lieut. Hobson and his companions will be promoted as soon as they are restored to liberty, and Congress will give them all medals of honor.

When the war is over a Congressional investigation into certain transactions in which the government has been made to pay large sums of money for ships, and other things bought in connection with the war is likely to bring about sensational developments and to result in public disgrace for certain individuals who have used their pull with the administration to profit by this robbery of the public treasury. Much information is in possession of Senators and Representatives, but patriotism has kept them quiet, and will keep them quiet until peace is declared; then they will talk, and there will be a day of reckoning.

There is much humbug in the civil service discussion in the Senate over the bill providing for taking the next census. Everybody knows that Congress intends to have the employes of the Census Bureau appointed by pull, just as all of the employes of Congress are now appointed, and that the very men who have been advocating having the appointments made through the Civil Service Commission will be in the rank of the scramblers after these places when the time comes to give them out.

The controversy over the annexation of Hawaii is in a fair way to become a personal fight between Czar Reed and Mr. McKinley, if it has not already done so. Reed is playing for time and with the assistance of some of his lieutenants he has played successfully this week. His game is to delay action until all the appropriation bills are disposed of and then to force an adjournment of Congress without acting upon annexation. As soou as this dawned upou Mr. McKinley, he served notice upon the Czar that if Congress adjourned without action upon annexation he would at once call it together again in extra session. While a majority of Democrats in the House would join Reed in voting against annexation, they are not likely to join him in votlug for adjournment, as they believe they ought not to adjourn while the war is going on.

Vegetation was growing rapidly, last week, before the showers came and after that you could almost see the young corn stretching up.

NOTICE.—Having sold the saw and grist mill that was operated by my father on Gunpowder creek, I desire to close up the business at once, and those owing his estate on account of grinding or sawing or anyother account are requested to come forward and settle said accounts without further notice. If anyone has claims against his estate they will present them to me at once.

THE SUNDAY SERVICES.

Vigor, Even Vivacity, Needed in the Religion of this Day and Age.

Hearty Congregational Singing Is Helpful to Worshipers—The Day of the Long-Faced Church Member Past—Sermon by Rev. Nature, p Witt Talmage, D.D.

If the people understood religion to be the practical re-enforcement that Dr. Talmage says it is in this sermon, the number of Christian disciples would be greatly multiplied. Text, Psalm xx., 2: "Send thee help from the sanctuary."

If you should ask 50 men what the church is, they would give you 50 different answers. One man would say: "It's a convention of hypocrites." Another, "It is an assembly of people who feel themselves a great deal better than others." Another, "It is a place for gossip, where wolverine dispositions devour each other." Another, "It is a place for the cultivation of superstition and cant." Another, "It is an arsenal where theologians go and get pikes and muskets and shot." Another, "It is an art gallery, where men go to admire grand arches and exquisite frescoes and musical warble and the Dantesque, gloomy imagery." Another man would say, "It is the best place on earth except my own home." "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning."

Now, whatever the church is, my text tells you what it ought to be—a great, practical, homely, omnipotent help. "Send thee help from the sanctuary." The pew ought to yield restfulness for the body. The color of the upholstery ought to yield pleasure to the eye.

The entire service ought to yield strength for the moil and struggle of every-day life. The Sabbath ought to be harnessed to all the six days of the week, drawing them in the right direction. The church ought to be a magnet, visibly and mightily affecting all the homes of the worshipers. Every man gets roughly jostled, gets abused, gets cut, gets insulted, gets slighted, gets exasperated. By the time the Sabbath comes he has an accumulation of six days of annoyance, and that is a starveling church service which has not strength enough to take that accumulated annoyance and hurl it into perdition. The business man sits down in church headachy from the week's engagements. Perhaps he wishes he had tarried at home on the lounge with the newspapers and the slippers. That man wants to be cooled off and graciously diverted. The first wave of the religious service ought to dash clear over the hurricane decks and leave him dripping with holy and glad and heavenly emotion. Send thee help from the sanctuary."

In the first place, sanctuary help ought to come from the music. A woman dying in England persisted in singing to the last moment. The attendants tried to persuade her to stop, saying it would exhaust her and make her disease worse. She answered, "I must sing; I am only practicing for the heavenly choir." Music on earth is a rehearsal for music in Heaven. If you and I are going to take part in that great orchestra it is high time that we were stringing and thrumming our harps. They tell us that Thalberg and Gottschalk never would go into a concert until they had first in private rehearsed, although they were such masters of the instrument. And can it be that we expect to take part in the great oratorio of Heaven if we do not rehearse here?

But I am not speaking of the next world. Sabbath song ought to set all the week to music. We want not more harmony, not more artistic expression, but more volume in our church music. The English dissenting churches far surpass our American churches in this respect. An English audience of 1,000 people will give more volume of sacred song than an American audience of 2,000 people. I do not know what reason is. Oh, you ought to have heard them sing in Surrey chapel. I had the opportunity of preaching the anniversary—I think the ninetieth anniversary—sermon in Rowland Hill's old chapel, and when they lifted their voices in solemn song it was simply overwhelming, and then in the evening of the same day, in Agricultural Hall, many thousand voices lifted in doxology. It was like the voice of many waters, and like the voice of many thunderings, and like the voice of Heaven.

The blessing through all the laboring throng.
And Heaven was won by violence of song.

Now, I am no worshiper of noise, but I believe that if our American churches would with full heartiness of soul, and full emphasis of voice sing the songs of Zion, this part of sacred worship would have tenfold more power than it has now. Why not take this part of the sacred service and lift it to where it ought to be. All the annoyances of life might be drowned out by that sacred song. Do you tell me that it is not fashionable to sing very loudly? Then, I say, away with the fashion. We dam back the great Mississippi of congregational singing and let a few drops of melody trickle through the dam. I say, take away the dam and let the billows roar on their way to the oceanic heart of God. Whether it is fashionable to sing loudly or not, let us sing with all possible emphasis.

We hear a great deal of the art of singing, of music as an entertainment, of music as a recreation. It is high time we heard something of music as a help, a practical help. In order to do this we must have only a few hymns. New tunes and new hymns every Sunday make poor congregational singing. Fifty hymns are enough for fifty years. The Episcopal church prays the same prayers every Sabbath, and year after year, and century after century. For that reason they have hearty responses. "Let us take a hint from that fact and let us sing the same songs Sabbath after Sabbath. Only in that way can we come to the full force of this exercise. Twenty thousand years will not wear out the hymns of William Cowper, Charles Wesley and Isaac Watts. Suppose now each person in an audience has brought all the annoyances of the last 365 days. Fill the room to the ceiling with sacred song, and you would drown out all those annoyances of the last 365 days, and you would drown them out forever. Organ and cornet are only to marshal the voice. Let the voice fall into line, and in companies, and in battalions, by storm take the obduracy and sin of the world. If you can not sing for yourself, sing for others. By trying to give others good cheer you will bring good cheer to your own heart.

When Londonderry, Ireland, was besieged many years ago, the people inside the city were famishing, and a vessel came up with provisions, but the vessel ran on the river bank and stuck fast. The enemy went down with laughter and derision to board the vessel, when the vessel gave a broadside fire against the enemy, and by the shock was turned back into the stream and all was well. Oh, ye who are high and dry on the rocks of melancholy, give a broadside fire of song against your spiritual enemies, and by holy rebound you will come out into the calm waters. We want to make ourselves happy we must make others happy. Mythology tells us of Amphion, who played his lyre until the mountains were moved and the walls of Thebus arose; but religion had a mightier story to tell of how Christian song may build whole temples of eternal joy and lift the round earth into sympathy with the skies.

I hurried many nights in London, and I used to hear the bells, the small bells of the city, strike the hour of night—one, two, three, four, and among them the great St. Paul's cathedral would come in to mark the hours, making all the other sounds seem utterly insignificant as with mighty tongue it announced the hour of the night, every stroke an overmastering boom. My friends, it was intended that all the lesser sounds of the world should be drowned out in the mighty tongue of congregational song beating against the gates of Heaven. Do you know how they mark the hours in Heaven? They have no clocks, as they have no candles, but a great pentalism of hallelujah swinging across Heaven from eternity to eternity.

Again I remark that sanctuary help ought to come from the sermon. Of a thousand people in any audience how many want sympathetic help? Do you guess a hundred? Do you guess five hundred? You have guessed wrong. I will tell you just the proportion.

Out of a thousand people in any audience there are just 1,000 who need sympathetic help. These young people want it just as much as the old. The old people sometimes seem to think they have a monopoly of the rheumatisms, and the neuralgias, and the headaches, and the physical disorders of the world; but I tell you there are no worse heartaches than are felt by some of the young people. Do you know what much of the work is done by the young? Raphael died at 37, Richelieu at 31, Gustavus Adolphus died at 38, Innocent III. came to his mightiest influence at 37, Cortez conquered Mexico at 30, Don John won Lepanto at 25, Grotius was attorney general at 24, and I have noticed amid all classes of men that some of the severest battles and the toughest work comes before 30. Therefore we must have our sermons and our exhortations in prayer meeting all sympathetic with the young. And so with these people further on in life. What do these doctors and lawyers and merchants and mechanics care about the abstractions of religion? What they want is help to bear the whimsicalities of patients, the browbeating of legal opponents, the unfairness of customers who have plenty of fault-finding for every imperfection of handiwork, but no praise for 20 excellencies. What does the brain-racked, hand-blistered man care for Zwingle's "Doctrine of Original Sin," Augustine's "Retraction?" You might as well go to a man who has the pleurisy and put on his side a plaster made out of Dr. Parr's "Treatise on Medical Jurisprudence."

While all of a sermon may not be helpful alike to all, if it be a Christian sermon preached by a Christian man, there will be help for every one somewhere. We go into an apothecary's store, we see others being waited on; we do not complain because we do not immediately get the medicine; we know our turn will come after awhile. And so while all parts of a sermon may not be appropriate to our case, if we wait prayerfully, before the sermon is through, we shall have the divine prescription. I say to young men who are going to preach the gospel: We want in our sermons not more metaphysics, not more imagination, nor more logic, nor more profundity. What we want in our sermons and Christian exhortations is more sympathy. When Father Taylor preached in the Sailors' Bethel of Boston the jack tars felt that they had help for their duties among the ratlines and forecastles. When Richard Weaver preached to the operatives in Oldham, Eng., all the workmen felt they had more grace for the spindles. When Dr. South preached to kings and princes and princesses, all the mighty men and women who heard him felt preparation for their high station.

People will not go to church merely as a matter of duty. There will not next Sabbath be a hundred people in this city who will get up in the morning and say: "The Bible says I must go to church; it is my duty to go to church, therefore I will go to church." The vast multitude of people who go to church, go to church because they like it, and the multitude of people who stay away from church, stay away because they do not like it. I am not speaking about the way the world ought to be, I am speaking about the way the world is. Taking things as they are, we must make the centripetal force of the church mightier than the centrifugal. We must make our churches magnets to draw the people thereunto, so that a man will feel uneasy if he does not go to church, saying: "I wish I had gone this morning. I wonder if I can't dress and get there in time. It is 11 o'clock; now they are singing. It is 11:30; now they are preaching. I wonder when the folks will be home to tell us what was said, what has been going on?" When the impression is confirmed that our churches, by architecture, by music, by sociality, and by sermon, shall be made the most attractive places on earth, then we will want twice as many churches as we have now, twice as large, and then they will not half accommodate the people.

I say to the young men who are entering the ministry, we must put on more force, more energy, and into our religious services more vivacity, if we want the people to come. You look into a church court of any denomination of Christians. First, you will find the men of large, common sense and earnest look. The education of their minds, the piety of their hearts, the holiness of their lives qualify them for their work. Then you will find in every church court of every denomination a group of men who utterly amaze you with the fact that such semi-imbecility can get any pulpits to preach in! Those are the men who give forlorn statistics about church decadence. Frogs never croak in running water, always in stagnant. But I say to all Christian workers, to all Sunday school teachers, to all evangelists, to all ministers of the gospel, if we want our Sunday schools, and our prayer meetings, and our churches to gather the people, we must freshen up. The simple fact is, the people are tired of the humdrum of religionists. Religious hundred is the worst of all humdrum. You say over and over again, "Come to Jesus," until the phrase means absolutely nothing. Why do you not tell them a story which will make them come to Jesus in five minutes? You say that all Sunday school teachers, and all evangelists, and all ministers must bring their illustrations from the Bible. Christ did not when He preached. The most of the Bible was written before Christ's time, but where did He get his illustrations. He drew them from the lilies, from the ravens, from salt, from a camel, from a needle, from yeast in the dough of bread, from a mustard seed, from a fishing net, from debtors and creditors. That is the reason multitudes followed Christ. His illustrations were so easy and so understandable. Therefore, my brother Christian worker, if you and I find two illustrations for a religious subject, and one is a Bible illustration and the other if outside the Bible, I will take the latter, because I want to be like my Master. Looking across to a hill, Christ saw the city of Jerusalem. Talking to the people about the conspicuity of Christian example, he said: "The world is looking at you; be careful. A city that is set on a hill can not be hid." While he was speaking of the divine care of God's children a bird flew past. He said: "Behold the ravens." Then looking down into the valley, all covered at that season with flowers, he said: "Consider the lilies."

Oh, my brother Christian workers, what is the use of our going away off in some obscure part of history, or on the other side of the earth to get an illustration, when the earth and the heavens are full of illustrations. Why should we go away off to get an illustration of the vicarious suffering of Jesus Christ, when as near us as Bloomfield, N. J., two little children were walking on the railroad track and a train was coming; but they were on a bridge of trestle work, and the little girl took her brother and let him down through the trestle work as gently as she could toward the water, very carefully and lovingly and cautiously, so that he might not be hurt in the fall, and might be picked up by those who were standing near by. While doing that the train struck her, and hardly enough of her body was left to gather into a funeral casket. What was that? Vicarious suffering. Like Christ. Pang for others. Woe for others. Suffering for others. Death for others.

What is the use of our going away off to find an illustration in past age, when during the great forest fires in Michigan a mail carrier on horseback riding on, pursued by those flames which had swept over a hundred miles, saw an old man by the roadside, dismounted, helped the old man on the horse, saying, "Ride, whip up and get away. The old man got away, but the mail carrier perished. Just like Christ dismounting from the glories of Heaven to put us on the way of deliverance, then falling back into the flames of sacrifice for others. Pang for others. Woe for others. Death for others. Vicarious suffering.

Again I remark that sanctuary help ought to come through the prayers of all the people. The door of the eternal storehouse is hung on one hinge, a gold hinge, the hinge of prayer, and when the whole audience lay hold of that door it must come open. There are many people spending their first Sabbath after some great bereavement. What will your prayer do for them? How will it help the tomb in that man's heart? Here are people who have not been in church before for ten years; what will your prayer do for them by rolling over their soul holy memories? Here are people in crises of awful temptation. They are on the verge of despair, or wild blundering, or theft, or suicide. What will your prayer do for them in the way of giving them strength to resist? Will you be chiefly anxious about the fit of the glove that you put to your forehead while you prayed? Will you be chiefly critical of the rhetoric of the pastor's petition? No. No. A thousand people will feel "that prayer is for me," and at every step of the prayer chains ought to drop off, and temples of sin ought to crash into dust, and jubilee of deliverance ought to brandish their trumpets.

A COSTLY DISPATCH.

The Bill Was $15,000, and One of the Results Was the Fall of Maximilian.

It was during our own serious troubles in the early '60s that France and Austria undertook to plant an empire on this continent in the neighboring state of Mexico. Although warned off by our state department, American diplomatic methods seem never to inspire any particular amount of awe in European foreign offices. In this case we were simply ignored, and the two allied powers continued their work of setting up an emperor in the land of Montezuma. However, with the ending of our war and the readjustment of our own internal affairs, attention was again directed to what was going on in Mexico against the avowed wishes and policy of the American government.

At this period Napoleon and Eugenie were dazzling the world with the splendors of the court of the second empire. A great number of our own people from all sections of the country were residing in Paris, to which city it was jokingly said "all good Americans wanted to go after death." Americans were in evidence at all the brilliant fetes of the empire. The elegance of their residences, the lavish expenditure of money and the brilliancy and fascination of the women from this side of the Atlantic made our country people important social factors. The American colony in Paris as an organization dates from this period.

At the height of this happy state of affairs Secretary Seward's dispatch notifying the imperial government that Mexico must be evacuated came like the proverbial thunderclap out of a cloudless sky. That dispatch yet holds a place in France's official memory. The cable was almost in its infancy, and communication through it was very costly. Secretary Seward did not economize his words, but talked as fluently and went into as many details as though he were seated at a table opposite the French minister of foreign affairs.

The dispatch cost $15,000. If Napoleon III. had been skeptical before us to the intention of the United States, Seward's coolness in holding a conversation at such a price convinced the emperor and his ministers that the American government would stand by what the secretary said, and France came to the conclusion to let Maximilian "go it alone" as emperor of Mexico.

The withdrawal of the French troops was ordered, and this led directly to Maximilian's tragic death at Queretaro in June, 1867. The emperor did not pretend to disguise his chagrin at the failure to establish a monarchical government in America. On July 4 following the execution of Maximilian a minister of American gentlemen in Paris made all arrangements to celebrate the national festival by a grand dinner. But the banquet was never given, the emperor formally and arbitrarily forbidding it.

Up to this time the Americans who spent immense sums of money in Paris were warmly received at the Tuileries, and, in fact, encouraged to come, for nothing more contributed to the stability of the empire than keeping the shopkeepers of Paris in good humor and plenty of American gold circulating throughout France. Under such conditions the emperor was at liberty to run the country as he pleased.

After Secretary Seward's costly dispatch had had its results—not only in the withdrawal of French troops from Mexico, but in a diminution of Louis Napoleon's prestige—the glories of the American colony at the imperial court began to wane. Since then only on extraordinary occasions does it exhibit any of its old-time empire-period brilliancy. Under the new dispensation of republican government it is a matter of such difficulty for an American to get an invitation to the Elysee as to be hardly worth the trouble incurred.—Washington Post.

SITUATION SIMPLIFIED.

When the Old Man Learned the Facts About Walter He Was Not So Cruel.

"Did you say that young man is a painter?" inquired the old gentleman, who can be very stern on occasion.

"Y-yes," replied his daughter.

"Well, there is no need of prolonging the discussion. I'm a practical man, of course. I know that when your mother married me, I didn't have much wealth. I am willing to sit down and agree with you on the question of whether love is a matter of eternal affinity or mere propinquity. But for the purposes of this particular case, I am not going to admit anything beyond the proposition that when a man marries, the kind of business he is engaged in ought to be taken into consideration by the girl and her parents."

"You mustn't be hasty, father."

"I'm not hasty. I'm willing to use all the time necessary to make it absolutely plain to you that I won't hear of your marrying the young man."

"You mean," she exclaimed indignantly, "that you can contemplate your own career and assume to look down on Walter, simply because he is in trade."

"I thought you said he's a painter?" "He is."

"That's all I care to know."

"But, father, you were a carpenter once. And I'm sure that a house and sign painter—"

"Is Walter a house and sign painter?"

"Certainly."

"H'm! Perhaps I have misjudged him. When you and he reach any definite programme, tell him to call on me and we'll figure on how much it will cost to set him up in business for himself."—Detroit Free Press.

THE DEMOCRATIC IDEA.

Extension of Power, No Colonies and No Partnership with Great Britain.

A large number of people are asking us what is the policy of the democratic party on the Hawaiian, Philippine and Puerto Rico annexation questions. It is impossible to answer this question at this time. The democratic party, unlike the republican party, is not operated by a junta. It makes its expressions known through the people, in national convention assembled every four years. What the party as a whole believes about these questions will find expression in the platform of 1900. Until then every individual democrat is free to express his opinion and to endeavor to find expression for it in the next national platform. This is democracy and the truth expressed by the majority. We are of the opinion that the great masses of democracy are favorable to the extension of the power of this republic. We want no colonies, but we do want coaling stations. We want the Nicaraguan canal, and the democratic party will construct it. We want to drive England and every other foreign power out of the West Indies, and the democratic party will do it. We do not want an alliance with England or any other foreign power.

The republican party favors an alliance with England, favors British partnership in the Nicaraguan canal and British partnership in all our affairs, national and international.

The next national convention of the democratic party will draw the lines so plainly on these questions that every true American, whether adopted or native-born, will rally to its purpose.—National Democrat.

HANNA'S BRIBERY CASE.

The People Are Demanding Prompt Action by the Senate—An Important Question.

What is the United States senate going to do with the bribery charges made against Mark Hanna? These charges, backed by the report of an investigation committee appointed by the Ohio state senate, have been laid before the upper house, and now the people of this country demand that prompt action be taken thereon. Fortunately for Hanna there is a war, though he asserted there would be none, and that war has drawn attention from his disgraceful acts to matters of apparently larger moment.

Apparently they are larger, but not so in reality. There can be nothing of more importance to the people of this country than in the honesty and patriotism of its lawmakers. Foes without can be met and conquered, but foes within are a constant and deadly menace to liberty. It should not be forgotten that the report of the investigating committee declares Mark Hanna personally or through his agents guilty of bribery. He is alleged to have bought his seat in the United States senate as he would buy a seat in the board of trade. Is the senate going to pigeonhole this indictment against one of its members or is it going to investigate the charges, and if it finds them sustained by the facts expel this man, who has corrupted men in order that he might be in a position to corrupt the laws? What is the senate going to do, anyhow?

PRESS COMMENTS.

—Secretary Gage is not pushing his gold standard scheme much these days, but he has it well in hand and ready to slip it through when opportunity offers.—Kansas City Times.

—McKinley is a tried and approved agent of manufacturers, whom he is quick to serve. For the business of war he is not fitted, being neither statesman nor warrior.—Chicago Chronicle.

—Chairman Dingley would find it pleasanter to create a war revenue if he had not cultivated so much unfavorable comment on his failure to bring the receipts up to the expenditures in time of peace.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—What pleasant things our republican contemporaries are saying of the British government these days! And how they used to abuse Ambassador Bayard for uttering similar sentiments two or three years ago!—Rochester Herald.

—McKinley started out to prosecute a holy war, but he has done it in such a way that the public press is beginning to shoot holes in his policy. They want the war prosecuted vigorously whether it is holy or not, and let us have an end of it.—Louisville Dispatch.

—It is hoped that the president is preparing to give the nation cause for an unusually big Fourth of July celebration by pushing the war with vigor, as reported by the administration papers. But if he listens too much to Elkins, Hanna & Co. he may miss connection.—St. Louis Republic.

—It has been remarked that William Mason has not been heard from since an opportunity was given freemen to respond for their country. But the belligerent statesman from Illinois has spoken at last. He has issued an appeal to the gentlemen who robbed his house in Washington offering to compound the felony.—Detroit Free Press.

—The Dingley law is a failure. Custom receipts in May, 1897, under the Wilson law, $17,000,000; in May, 1898, under the Dingley law, $13,466,534. The new tax bill will serve to hide from general view the deficiencies of the Dingley law, but its failure is nevertheless obvious. The treasury deficit for May was $17,800,000. It arises in part, of course, from war expenditures. These aside, however, the ordinary expenditures would have been in excess of the ordinary receipts. Dingley's lauded measure was a good thing for the monopolists whom it protected. As a revenue law it is a failure.—Chicago Chronicle.

A DEGRADING POLICY.

The Appointing Power Abused by the Administration in Military Assignments.

The policy of appointing to military positions men without experience or fitness, simply because they are somebody's sons or grandsons or are able to bring the right influence to bear on the appointing power, is causing widespread dissatisfaction. At one time it looked as if the president did not intend to adopt this policy, but the last few days have been exceedingly prolific in this class of appointments. It is hard to understand how the military service can be strengthened, or such strength as it possesses be preserved through this besotted policy. It is not the way to meet a great national crisis.

It is argued that many of those men with cheaply won commissions will be placed where they will do the least possible harm, but their placing cannot alter the fact that this policy of showing military honors on the nonmilitary and undeserving has it in it to do incalculable harm. What encouragement is there for experience and long service when men who have no military knowledge whatever are put over those who have spent years in training and in fitting themselves for the stern duties of war? It would not be strange if the demoralization of the military service followed upon the heels of such an inexcusable and unjust policy. Doubtless if it were not for the patriotism of the real soldiers, the government would find itself compelled to depend in this crisis upon the brains and the valor of its drawing-room warriors. What a farce popular government is in spots!—Binghamton (N. Y.) Leader.

CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATES.

Present Appearances Indicate Democratic Success at the Polls Next Fall.

Democratic success in returning members to the house of representatives this fall will go a long way towards securing democratic victory in the presidential contest of 1900. But there is danger even in success. The danger will consist in sending unfit men to the lower house. Hot cranks and impractical enthusiasts are elected they will do the party incalculable harm. Democracy is of the people and is for the people. The party does not exist to further the ambitions of aspiring politicians. It has a prouder and more practical mission. There are plenty of wise, careful and brilliant men in the party who can do it and the people good service in congress. Such men should be nominated and elected. Men with some one fixed idea to which all other things are secondary should not be given a place on any democratic ticket. Wild speeches in congress, incendiary utterances on the part of sincere but mistaken fanatics can do no good and cannot fail to do much harm. Conditions point toward democratic success at the polls this fall. That success should not be turned into defeat by a mistaken choice of congressional candidates. Let the selection be made with extreme care and the result in 1900 will fully repay the efforts of the present.

BRYAN'S APPOINTMENT.

Shrewd Trick of the Administration to Get the Democratic Leader Out of the Way.

Secretary of War Alger has weakened on his scheme to keep William J. Bryan out of the army. Clever secretary of war, Alger. It was stupid politics and worse patriotism for him to persecute the man who received 6,500,000 votes for president of the United States. McKinley, with a narrowness characteristic of the man, ignored Bryan's offer for services, and when Bryan began to raise a regiment of soldiers Alger thought it would be a smart thing to prevent the acceptance of that regiment. All the anti-democratic papers were filled with spiteful glee over Alger's shrewd trick. But it seems a new light dawned on the secretary of war. He has discovered that he made a monumental mistake when Missouri offered Bryan a regiment, and so he changed his plan. Now he proposes to accept Bryan's regiment and send it to guard outlying islands of the Philippines. The Ladrones or Mariana islands have been suggested. This banishment of Bryan to the other side of the world is really a brilliant idea. The only wonder is that it did not occur to Alger and McKinley sooner. How anxious Alger and Hanna and McKinley are "to be fair" with the late democratic candidate for president.

Perfidious Republicans.

Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, is about the only republican politician who is true to the St. Louis platform. McKinley, Hanna & Co. used the St. Louis platform as a means to get into power and then they repudiated it, but Chandler is not that kind of a man. In discussing the war revenue bill Senator Chandler vigorously opposed the single gold standard and quoted from the records of McKinley, Allison and other republicans to show that they had frequently voted for silver and had supported the Stanley Matthews resolution. Secretary Gage came in for a share of Chandler criticism and was charged with disregarding the St. Louis platform. When McKinley voted for silver a dollar was quoted at 92 cents. It was a dishonest dollar then. If McKinley was honest then, he is dishonest now. But if he was dishonest then, the republicans have raised a dishonest man to the position of chief executive of this nation. Republican hypocrisy received a sharp rebuke in the speech delivered by Chandler. The perfidy of the party was shown in a clear light.

It is a curious fact that those who jeer Mr. Bryan for raising a regiment have distinguished themselves in this war only by raising their voice.—Chicago Evening News.

FARM & GARDEN.

CIRCULATION IS LIFE.

And for This Reason Farmer and Merchant Are Extremely Interested in Good Roads Building.

The roads and highways of a civil division are as the veins and arteries of the human system, says the Suffern Independent. Life and health, that is, business and prosperity, of each part can be had and secured only by the freest circulation, and the conduits must not be allowed to clog. While the limb would wither if the circulation was interrupted, the heart would also suffer. Where would the proud city of New York be without her magnificent railways, and what would have been her condition if the great blizzard of 1888 had continued a month?

The village with its paved streets and flagged walks may say: "Let the farmer build his roads; he is the party benefited." The lord of the manor who surrounds his grounds with a high wall and morass, and then beautifies his place for his own enjoyment and benefit, may be wise if he has within himself all he requires to satisfy his needs.

ROAD NEAR YARDLEY, PA.
(A Clog to Prosperity as Well as Comfort.)

The village which has placed its streets in perfect condition and has neglected the highways leading thereto, has arranged, like the lord of the manor, to live in seclusion.

Has the village all it requires? Does it depend upon anything or anybody for its existence, growth and prosperity? Is it not, in fact, most dependent? Does not every village depend upon the extent of the necessible area of which it is the center and metropolis, and the prosperity of that area?

The village cannot shift the burden upon the farmer, nor the farmer upon his brother farmer. Each is interested, and the contiguity of the highway is but an incident. Suppose the Erie railroad were abandoned; whose loss would be the greater, that of the farmer living within one-half mile, or the one a mile distant?

LIFE IN THE COUNTRY.

The Numbering of Farm Houses and Free Rural Mail Delivery Would Add to Its Comforts.

Residents of the country desire to see the rural districts placed in every practicable way on an equality with the city, and city dwellers are gradually learning that the whole land would be materially benefited in many ways if this end were attained. The improvement of highways by state aid is a long step in the right direction, and makes possible the introduction of other features calculated to ameliorate conditions and bring the back country districts into closer touch with the world. Easy means of communication, more rapid transit, the electric car everywhere crossing the land, free rural postal delivery, and some plan for naming roads and numbering houses so that the farm house may be as readily located as the city house, are among the improvements that the near future ought to bring.

A plan for the last-named purpose is being pressed by the California Cultivator. All roads, beginning at the county seat or end nearest, are divided into sections of one mile each, and each mile into ten blocks, with an odd number for one side and an even one for the other. The houses on each block are designated by the block number, with a distinguishing letter following it. This locates every house and tells how far it is from the beginning of the road. To find block 436, divide by two (as blocks 1 and 2 are opposite each other), getting 218, and then divide by ten (as there are ten blocks to the mile), and it will be plain that block 436 is 21.8 miles from the beginning of the road. The adoption of this plan, the Cultivator thinks, would pave the way for a speedy enforcement of a rural free delivery of mails.—L. A. W. Bulletin.

Six Best Winter Apples.

The best six kinds of apples for family use in winter and for market as well are the King, Spy, Spitzenburg, Baldwin and Greening, for eating apples; and for sweet apples, Pound Sweet for early use and the Belle Bonne for late use. This last apple is a great keeper, of most delicious quality and a great bearer. It is an old Connecticut fruit and has been crowded out of sight by inferior sorts. To this list might be added Hubbardston, Nonesuch and Seek-No-Further as apples almost sure to return clean crops. It is remarkable how each these apples resist the attacks of insects and fungi.

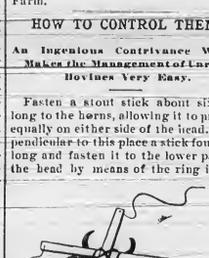
DO NOT OVERFEED.

How Dairymen Can Make a Complete Success of Feeding the Calves by Hand.

We are particularly anxious that our readers should make a complete success in growing calves by hand this year. As we have said before, the hand-raised calf has become an economic necessity both for the farmer and the feeder, and in fact for the state. The impression has become general that this calf cannot be grown on separator milk. We have held steadily to the contrary for two or three years, and have given enough letters from farmers who have been solving the problem to satisfy every reader that, given the separator milk sweet and properly balanced with cornmeal at the beginning, and shelled corn afterward, this calf can be grown to perfection. We wish, however, to warn our readers against overfeeding. It will not do to suppose that if a calf does well on four quarts of milk that it will do twice as well on eight, nor will it do to suppose that if the milk is not properly balanced more of it will make up for the lack of balance. We are satisfied that a large number of the calves that are spoiled in starting them in life on separator milk are spoiled by overfeeding. The separator milk from one good cow will grow two good calves if it is properly balanced. The calves do not need much over half of the milk, and if the other half is fed to the pigs, balanced in the same way, there will be plenty of profit to the man who goes at it intelligently. Be careful about overfeeding with separator milk, and be careful that what you do feed is properly balanced with corn meal or flax seed meal to start on, and with shelled corn after the calf is two months old.—Wallace's Farmer.

RUNNING A CREAMERY.

Why a Good Many Enterprises of This Kind Have Proved Financial Failures.



There are at least two good reasons why many of the creameries in different localities have proven a failure. One of the principal ones is a lack of milk. The creameries were built all right and, with proper management, would have turned out a good quality of product, but the amount of milk was insufficient to pay running expenses and the natural consequence was failure. While creameries pay, they can only be made to pay with plenty of milk, and in working up a cooperative creamery one of the first items to look after is the supply of milk. The farmers must not only keep cows but they must keep good dairy cows and be willing to sell the milk at a fair price, and there must be a sufficient number of cows to keep the creamery running every day. Make sure of the cows before undertaking the building. Another cause is the investment of too much money. Too high a price is paid to the promoters of the scheme. The dairy business is of slow growth and if, after a careful canvas, the milk of only 300 cows can be received it is rather poor economy to invest in a building and machinery to work up the milk of 500 cows. Then be sure that, considering quality, you are paying a fair price. Also, see that you are paying a fair price.

One of the schemes worked that has caused more failures than any other is to induce the farmers and business men to take stock in a company to pay for a creamery that the promoters will put up all complete ready to make butter, and at two to three times what the building and machinery could have been put in had more care been exercised in the buying.—Dakota Field and Farm.

bull's nose, or in the case of any other animal a strap just back of the muzzle. Bind the sticks securely together where they cross. Place ropes in the three ends, get behind the animal, and he can be easily managed, as great leverage is secured. If he tries to run straight ahead pulling on the upright will throw the head up in the air.—Orange Judd Farmer.

DAIRY SUGGESTIONS.

It is claimed that if moldy and rotted feed is fed to cows, the butter will not "come." That is reasonable.

The oil meal trust is socking it to the dairymen and breeders right along. It is advising heavy feeding of oil meal. Don't do it. Feed oil meal in very limited quantities.

Whole flaxseed ground meal is as good, and perhaps better, than oil meal. We believe that oil meal, fed recklessly, fed as it is advised to be fed by the oil meal trust, has killed thousands of animals.

If the butter from the milk of a herd does not come, it may be caused by no fault in one cow. Put the milk of separate cows in self-sealing glass jars, and after 12 hours, shake vigorously until the butter comes. If there is broth instead of butter, that cow's milk is at fault.—Western Plowman.

WHIR OF THE WHEEL.

Russian cycling regulations may be decidedly stringent, but the public is saved many a moral shock by that rule which provides that female riders shall not appear upon the streets unless dressed in conformity with police instructions on the point.

Electric pacing appears to be a widely advertised bluff. So long as we have good, sound human muscles to guide and push the big machines, there is no reason for monkeying with the electric fluid that goes like an express train today and acts like a fizzled firecracker to-morrow.

Military cyclists will have a busy time at the next great maneuvers at Brussels, to occur very shortly. A company of 120 men has been formed and is mounted on folding bicycles of Belgian make, as mounted infantry. Every chief of corps, general, colonel, major or captain will have under his order a certain number of cycling dispatch carriers.

A WAR PLAN.

The Spaniards Made a Brave Stand, But the Fire Was Too Heavy for Them.

A detachment of Spanish infantry approached the silent, gloomy building on Icicle avenue, Boston. "Halt!" cried the brave commanding officer; then he knocked at the door.

A window in the third story flew up and the face of a pretty girl appeared in the opening. "Oh, girls! Oh, girls!" she shouted, "it's the Spanish!"

In another moment every window in the four-story establishment was up, and each casement held a laughing sample of the great American beauty. The hearts of the Spanish beat high with hope. Ha! but what was that?

Something whizzed from a window and a Spaniard bit the dust. Another, and yet another. Then the air was full of flying missiles. Volley after volley, the bullets fairly rained on the small band. Hardly a man was left to tell the tale.

Report of the commanding officer:

"Surrounded a Boston cooking school today and were badly routed; girls attacked us with doughnuts and biscuits; supply of ammunition seemed inexhaustible. Caramba! And I had heard of the 'biscuit shooters' of the great northern section. To be caught napping, oh, it is too mean. Severely dead, but my boys made a brave stand."—N. Y. World.

OF A LOWER ORDER.

Woman Has Progressed, But Man Is Yet in a Benighted State.

A few weeks ago a new play was tried upon a town near New York. The author was a man, but in some way he had learned a good deal about women's mental processes; and when the leading lady proceeded to cut a Gordian knot by methods strictly feminine, a girl in the audience beamed appreciatively.

"Oh, you wily creature," she murmured, addressing the absent dramatist. Then she turned impulsively to a serious-looking woman who sat beside her.

"Now how could he have known she would do just that? He certainly must have been a woman in some far-off incarnation."

Her neighbor's seriousness became severity, and she frowned the frivolous young person down.

"That is quite impossible," she said, with impressive gravity. "Evidently you haven't studied the subject. Woman is a progressed state. A man may look forward to being a woman in a future incarnation; but he belongs to a lower order and has never been feminine in the past."

Then she wondered why the girl found the rest of the play so funny.—N. Y. Sun.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

From the Free Press, Detroit, Mich.

A prominent business man recently expressed the opinion that there is one thing that will prevent women from completely filling man's place in the business world—they can't be depended upon because they are sick too often. This is refuted by Mrs. C. W. Mansfield, a business woman of 58 Farrar St., Detroit, Mich., who says:

"A complication of female ailments kept me awake nights and wore me out. I could get no relief from medicine and hope was slipping away from me. A young lady in my employ gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I took them and was able to rest at night for the first time in months. I bought more and took them and they cured me as they also cured several other people to my knowledge. I think that if you should ask any of the druggists of Detroit who are the best buyers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills they would say the young women. These pills certainly build up the nervous system and many a young woman owes her life to them.

"As a business woman I am pleased to recommend them, as they did more for me than any physician, and I can give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People credit for my general good health to-day.

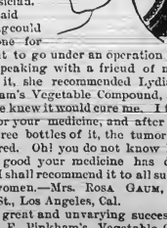
Suddenly Prostrated.

No discovery of modern times has done so much to enable women to take their proper place in life by safeguarding their health as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Acting directly on the blood and nerves, invigorating the body, regulating the functions, they restore the strength and health to the exhausted woman when every effort of the physician proves unavailing.

For the growing girl they are of the greatest benefit, for the mother indispensable, for every woman invaluable.

For paralysis, locomotor ataxia, and other diseases long supposed incurable, these pills have proved their efficacy in thousands of cases.

The first gray hair that a man finds in his hair he thinks must have been caused by trouble; it certainly wasn't age.—Atchison Globe.



AN OPERATION AVOIDED.

Mrs. Rosa Gaum Writes to Mrs. Pinkham About it. She Says:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I take pleasure in writing you a few lines to inform you of the good your Vegetable Compound has done me. I cannot thank you enough for what your medicine has done for me; it has, indeed, helped me wonderfully.

For years I was troubled with an ovarian tumor, each year growing worse, until at last I was compelled to consult with a physician.

He said nothing could be done for me but to go under an operation.

In speaking with a friend of mine about it, she recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, saying she knew it would cure me. I then sent for your medicine, and after taking three bottles of it, the tumor disappeared. Oh! you do not know how much good your medicine has done me. I shall recommend it to all suffering women.—Mrs. ROSA GAUM, 720 Wall St., Los Angeles, Cal.

The great and unvarying success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in relieving every derangement of the female organs, demonstrates as it does the hopeless bondage of woman's happiness and bodily strength. More than a million women have been benefited by it.

Every woman who needs advice about her health is invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass.

A FAMILY FAILING.

The struggle with Heredity.

To heredity, to the transmission of traits from sire to son, we owe most of the possibilities of growth and development. If each newly born being started out anew, without the force of heredity the level of life might be expected to be that of the digger Indian or Bushman. Naturally bad traits descend like the good. Peculiarities of feature, eccentricities of speech and manner, birth marks, etc., are handed down just as surely as manual dexterity, physical beauty, mathematical ability, and the mental and moral qualities in general. A curious example of this descent of family traits is furnished by Mrs. Maggie Pickett, Canton, Ga., in whose family gray hair was hereditary. She writes:

"Gray hair is hereditary in our family. As long as I can recollect, my mother's hair has been gray. About twelve years ago, my hair began to show signs of turning. I resolved to try Ayer's Hair Vigor, and after using it only a few times my hair was restored to its natural color. I still use this dressing occasionally, a bottle lasting me quite a while; and though over forty years of age, my hair retains its youthful color and fullness. To all who have faded and gray hair, I would heartily recommend Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor."—Mrs. MAGGIE PICKETT, Canton, Ga.

There is no shame in gray hair, but there may be some sadness, because it is untimely, and out of season. Gray hairs are a crown of honor to the aged, but to the young they are a stigma. There is no need to be gray in youth. Grayness comes from a deficiency of the coloring matter which gives the hair its natural tint. This coloring matter can be supplied artificially and is so supplied by Dr. J. C. Ayer's Hair Vigor. It is by supplying the lacking pigment that Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray or faded hair to its original color. Beyond this, it makes the hair grow, gives it gloss and softness, stops it from falling, removes dandruff, and cleanses the scalp. Mrs. C. M. Ayres, Mount Airy, Ga., writes:

"About three years ago, my head became full of dandruff, which caused great annoyance; after a time the hair began falling out. The use of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the hair from falling out, and made the scalp clean and healthy."—Mrs. C. M. AYRES, Mount Airy, Ga.

Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor is noted as a dressing. It is used every day by thousands whose chief claim to beauty rests on beautiful hair. Send for Dr. Ayer's Curebook, a story of cures told by the cured. Free. Address the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

"THE LAST SUPPER."

Leonardo da Vinci's Masterpiece—The Fresco at Milan.

The glory of the life of Leonardo da Vinci was his famous painting of "The Last Supper," which has now unfortunately fallen into decay. Da Vinci represented the highest type of the intellect and cultivation of the sixteenth century in Italy. His genius was varied and for all time. In this splendid work the dramatic moment is chosen when Christ announces His approaching betrayal, and the disciples are represented as variously expressing their grief and consternation. The head of Christ has become almost a divinity. It expresses more satisfactorily than any other painting the dignity, majesty, greatness and resignation of the Saviour. The figures are larger than life, painted on the walls of the refectory in the old Santa Maria della Grazia at Milan. It is done in oil, in fugitive pigments, and damp and decay have destroyed its color, and it is falling to pieces. Jesus sits in the middle with the twelve disciples on either hand at a long table on which a light repast is spread. The accessories are simple, but the draperies are finely arranged. The several disciples, expressing, each according to his nature, astonishment or horror at the Saviour's announcement of His betrayal, are wonderfully varied in individual character. It has been said of this masterpiece that it is the most successful effort of Christian art. Raffaelle Morghene's splendid engraving of this beautiful picture is only less famous than the fresco itself, and has put a very satisfactory of interpretation of the original within reach of lovers of Christian art in all lands.—Charles Mason Fairbanks, in Chautauquan.

Livan County Fish Story.

While Lewis A. Goldsmith and William Hoganeamp were hunting ducks on White lake one day recently they shot at a duck, and then noticed a splashing in the water where the duck had been, and, supposing they had wounded it, rowed to the spot and grabbed what they thought was the wounded duck, but imagine their surprise when they found they had, instead of a duck, two large bass. The larger one had the head of the smaller one in its mouth, and its gills had become fastened so that it could not disengage itself, and its efforts to do so had caused the splashing which the hunters had noticed. The large one weighed 3¼ pounds and the smaller one 2¾ pounds. — Monticello Watchman.

Something New in War.

No more striking illustration of the relatively bloodless character of the recent Turko-Grecian war can be given than that afforded by the official returns recently issued, according to which the number of prisoners taken by the rival armies amounted to 200 men each, while in the Greek hospitals there had throughout the campaign not been a single Greek soldier treated for a sabre, bayonet or lance wound, the only injuries being those inflicted by rifle bullets or by the explosion of shells. This is equivalent to a demonstration that there was no hand-to-hand fighting, and that the troops never really came to close quarters throughout the struggle.

THE VICTORY OF LOVE.

A Parable from Life—The Course of Real Romance.

A boy and girl played by the roadside. They were plucking the wild flowers, still sweet and heavy with the dews of the morning. It was spring; the hills were green; there was music in the forest; the sky was clear and serene.

"I love you," smiled the boy, as he gave her the violets he had gathered.

"I am glad you love me," she said.

Methinks that a mist swam before my eyes, and when it grew clear once more I saw Love and Death standing close to the boy and the girl. Death moved impatiently.

"Let them be," said Love, "they are mine."

A youth and maiden leaned on the stile in the meadow. Her eyes were downcast, yet in his hand hers passive lay. It was summer; the golden grains swayed restlessly to the breathing of the wanton breezes; the harvest moon rose round and yellow, frosting the purpling hills in the east.

"I love you!" whispered the youth.

The maiden spoke not, but raised the timid lids of her eyes and gazed into his. Her lips were mute, but there is a language of the eyes which lovers can read. He drew her fair face to his own and kissed her mute lips and speaking eyes.

Again I saw Love and Death.

"I have waited long," said Death, impatiently.

"Let them be," said Love, "they are mine."

The brown leaves of autumn flittered and rustled; from the gaunt forest, where song no longer awakened the dim echoes, they came, whirling over the stubble-fields, whispering to the lonely earth that the glory of the year was dead.

An old man and old woman came slowly down the lane. Their thin locks were as white as the fleecy clouds overhead; their faces were as withered as the apples that lay forgotten in the orchard.

"It was here," said the old man, pointing to the roadside, "that we used to pluck the wild flowers in the spring."

"It was here," said the old woman, pointing to the stile, "that you told me you loved me. Let us sit upon it again."

So they sat there in silence, looking into each other's eyes, knowing that the love which shone from their peaceful deeps was as pure and fresh as in the glorious golden days.

"It is good to have lived and loved," said the old man.

"Yes, as we have done," she added.

"I shall not wait any longer," said Death, grimly.

"Let them be," said Love; "they are mine!"

The snows fell noiselessly on two new graves; the winter winds brawled through the treetops.

"Now," cried Death, exultingly, "where is your vaunted life? They are mine!"

"Vainest of creatures!" said Love, "dost thou think such as these care for thy grubbing worms? Thou has followed me all these years to no purpose. Take man and woman to the grave if thou wilt, and give their bodies to thy worms and sad decay; but there thy task endeth. But I—I am beyond the grave, for I rule not over the clay, as thou dost, but over the Soul! For I, Love, am the Soul!"

And Death stood beside the graves as Love passed beyond into a light more brilliant and dazzling than the light of a thousand suns!—Harold MacGrath, in Town Topics.

KAFFIR ENGLISH.

The Perfect Candor of the Unsophisticated Child of Nature.

The unsophisticated child of nature differs from his brother of civilization mainly in possessing perfect candor. Ignorance of polite usages leads him to speak his mind freely. A Johannesburg correspondent tells a good story of Kaffir simplicity, which shows that while customs differ, human nature is much the same the world over. In civilized countries a wedding invitation is taken to mean a polite demand for a present, but the Kaffir takes no chances. The correspondent says: "A friend of mine in Pretoria has just received the following letter from a 'boy,' formerly in his service: 'Port Elizabeth, September 10, 1897.—R. R——, Esq.,—Dear Sir: I hereby let you know that I am going to get married in November month, in which, therefore, am expecting gifts from you, sir, as you being the only friend of mine. Wish you these few lines reach you in good health, as they are leaving me in good condition. May end then. With best regards, yours faithfully servant, John Mswela.' This epistle was evidently dictated by John, and is a good sample of how English is occasionally written in these parts. The wily John got his marriage present. —London Telegraph.

MYSTERY OF GREATNESS.

No Rule Will Suffice for the Attainment of Literary Success.

Young writers are always anxious to know how the great books were written, and how the immortals felt and behaved when they were writing the same. It is often taken for granted by these young people that there is some secret prescription for compounding literature, and that sufficient perseverence may master this formula. Investigation hardly confirms this view.

A certain well-known author wrote resolutely every day, whether he felt like it or not. He turned out with almost unvarying exactness just about so many thousand words at a sitting. His works have been read with pleasure by hundreds of thousands. He has been proclaimed as the favorite novelist of several famous men. He will not live forever, but he achieved a success which might properly satisfy a high ambition.

Another noted man determined to pursue the same course. He had made marked success in poetry and short-story work. Now he would write a book. Other people had shut their teeth together and sat down and ground out what was, if not real literature, a fair imitation of it. He would do the same. His book fell flat, and he has never attempted to write another.

The author of one of the most successful books of the last 20 years declares that she rewrote every sentence in it at least 40 times. Her people, she said, would not mind. They did queer and unexpected things, and were constantly striving to balk and elude the plot, but by persistent and severe discipline she regulated her mutinous army until her first work was "finished like a very Crichton," and bore almost no mark of crudeness.

Another of the most successful novelists never rewrites, and he corrects and interlines but little. One of the few Americans who has produced a novel which will live said once in reply to a question: "Copy my work! If I had to copy what I write I should never write a line."

One of the most famous of living writers reads the work of no contemporaries, for fear of coloring or corrupting his own output. Other writers, perhaps equally well known, read promiscuously and unflaggingly.

A well-known society woman, shut temporarily away from the world by affliction, deliberately resolved to write a book. She immediately consulted a distinguished professor of rhetoric and literature and put herself under his tuition for some months. She saturated herself during a considerable succeeding period with the scenes and atmosphere in which her story was to be laid. Her friends laughed behind her back, and quoted to each other the fable of the mountain and the mouse, but la grande dame, with all her fuss and feathers, really produced a charming little story—worthy to live with some of those divinely-wrought effusions which have emanated from garrets and from the pens of crust-fed genius.

On the other hand, one of the most conspicuous of living writers certifies that his most brilliant work treats of a land and a people whom he has never seen, though it is considered by the critics a masterpiece of verisimilitude. The story electrified everybody who read it, and was the sensation of the month among literary circles.

Marcus Aurelius enunciated the noblest sentiments, though he lived in a marble palace. Homer begged for bread. Robert Browning was born and brought up a gentleman. Robert Burns was a son of the soil.

In short, there is no rule nor guide to literary any more than to any other sort of success. A few foundation principles form a moral and expedient starting point, but thence each worker must carve his own way. "That by which a man conquers in any passage is profound secret to every other person in the world," said the seer. He might have added, "and it can never be imparted."

The soul with convictions and with enthusiasms, hating shams and despising imitation and flattery, is going to be heard. No amount of model study or statistic hunting can give success to any other kind.—Kate Upson Clark, in Leslie's Weekly.

Unconscious Sarcasm.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles, in Cheyne row, was much struck with the sound-proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life and no human being be one bit the wiser."—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Bison in France.

—A man who has no head, usually has plenty of tongue.—Atchison Globe.

CUBALETS.

In addition to those introduced from abroad 3,500 native plants have been catalogued in Cuba.

Spanish priests in Cuba charge Cuban couples twice the marriage fee that a Spanish couple must pay.

Nearly 13,000,000 acres of uncleared forest remain in Cuba after 300 years of sugar and tobacco cultivation.

At present 3,000 projectiles of the heaviest type are completed daily and shipped to naval stations for transfer to the warships.

The area of the main island of Cuba is estimated at from 40,000 to 43,000 square miles.

Cuba is much subject to hurricanes. One in 1846 leveled nearly 2,000 houses in Havana. Earthquakes are seldom felt in the western districts, but are frequent in the eastern.

The coast line of Cuba measures without its meandering nearly 2,200 miles. Counting the embayments and including islets it is over 6,800 miles.

A Spaniard was born in Spain. His son, who was born in Cuba, is not a Spaniard, but a Cuban. If a Cuban should go to Madrid when he is two weeks old and spend all his life in the place he would still be a Cuban, and not quite so good as a Spaniard. If a Spaniard should go to Havana when he is two weeks old and spend all his life in that city or upon a plantation, he would still be a Spaniard and enjoy the distinction and social position which a Cuban never attains. The sons and daughters of a Spaniard are Cubans if they are born in Cuba; but the sons and grandsons and great-grandsons of a Cuban must always be Cubans, no matter if they were born in Madrid and spend their whole lives in that city. No Cuban can ever become a Spaniard, no matter what happens to him, and from the Spain point of view he is a degenerate.

FIVE CAPTAINS.

There were five Captains chanced to meet-one Russian, one Turk, one Frenchman, one American and one Englishman. One proposed a champagne supper, each one to give a toast of his own native country or pay for the wine drank after supper.

The Russian—Here's to the stars and bars of Russia, that were never pulled down.

The Turk—Here's to the moons of Turkey, whose wings were never clipped.

The Frenchman—Here's to the cock of France, whose feathers were never picked.

The American—Here's to the stars and stripes of the United States of America that never failed to defeat.

The Englishman—Here's to the rampant, roaring lion of Great Britain, that tore down the stars and bars of Russia, clipped the wings of Turkey, picked the feathers off the cock of France, and ran like h—l from the stars and stripes of the United States of America.

FROM OWEN COUNTY.

[News]

W. G. Claxon shipped 1200 lambs to the market last week. He paid 5c for them.

Alex Stewart sold to W. G. Claxon last week three lambs, the product of one ewe whose combined weight was 285 pounds.

Prospects for a good wheat crop were never better. Fruit will not come up to half what it would before the last cold snap.

The report in the daily papers that Owen county had 40 per cent of a crop set is untrue. The best informed farmers say that not more than 10 per cent of an average crop is out.

A great many denizens living on the Kentucky river are much annoyed by parties dynamiting the fish. The violation of this law, they say, is of daily occurence and an effort will be made in the Owen and Henry courts to bring the violaters to account.

[Herald.]

Postmaster Hutcheson has been allowed an increase for clerk hire from $350 to $400.

Eusebius S. Duvall, son of C. H. Duvall, formerly of this county but now of Franklin, met a tragic death last Saturday afternoon. At that time he went out to catch a horse, when by some means not understood his hands became entangled in the animal's mane and he was thrown violently to the ground. He lived until Sunday evening, but never regained consciousness.

The tobacco barn of Dr. H. Trigg, of New Columbus, was destroyed by fire last Wednesday night. The loss to Dr. Trigg is about $2,500, with no insurance, and is a misfortune that his friends are sorry to see come upon him at this time. John H. Sherly had tobacco in the barn to the value of $2,000 or $2,500, upon which he had an insurance of $1,000. The cause of the fire is unknown, but supposed to be the result of smoking about the building by some thoughtless boys.

The First Premium Stallion,

DEXTER B.

Will make the season of 1898 at R. Walton's on the Bellevue pike on Friday, Saturday and Sunday; at Union on Tuesday and Wednesday, and at Burlington on Thursday of each week, at $10 to insure a live colt.

DESCRIPTION & PEDIGREE.

Dexter is a large bay stallion, 16 1-8 hands high, 10 years old. He has made five races in his class and won four and second in the other—time, 2:25.

Dexter was sired by Mambrino Star; he by Mambrino Prim; he by Bod Dedlock. 1st dam by Ned Forest; 2d dam by Cassius Clay; 3d dam by a thoroughbred race mare. By this mare I have five colts—three mares that can trot a mile in less than 3 minutes and two stallions in 2:20.

I will give a premium of $10 for the best colt of this horses' get to be shown at the Florence Fair in 1899.

Jos. D. KENNEDY, Covington, Ky.

The Well known Combined Harness and Saddle Stallion,

Jim Crow,

Will make the season of 1898, at my place, 1½ miles east of Burlington, Ky., on the Florence & Burlington pike, at $8 to insure a living colt.

JIM CROW is from the noted Morgan family of horses, tracing back to Justin Morgan of 1792. Jim Crow is 16 hands high, has good style and great power; he has always been very successful in show rings as a general purpose horse, and he transmits these qualities to his colts, as they have also been successful in the show rings.

The Celebrated Mule Jack,

DON CARLUS,

Will stand at the same place at $8 to insure a living colt, money due when colt comes or mare parted with.

This Jack is black, 15 hands high, has all the best qualities as a mule jack. He is from imported stock on both sides and is the grandson of Imported Starlight who sold for $3,000. Don Carlus has proven himself a superior breeder, being the sire of some of the best mules in Fayette county, Ky.

I will give a premium in the fall of 1899, of $5 for best mare mule and $5 for best horse mule of this jack's get.

Liberal reduction on two or more mares owned by one or in clubs of six mares.

Registered Guernsey bull JESSON 3662, will be found at same place at $1 for a living calf.

Caution to prevent accidents, but will not be responsible should any occur. For pedigrees in full or further particulars call on or address

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1898. NO. 35

If reports be true the Spaniards are very poor marksmen. They can't hit a battle ship, which is much larger than a barn.

Blanco has agreed that Lieutenant Hobson and those captured with him after they had sunk the Merrimac, may be exchanged.

The Appellate Court has affirmed the judgment of the Scott county Circuit Court sentencing Clarence Vinegar to death for the murder of his wife.

David B. Hill, who has been on the political retired list for some time has appeared again in New York State politics. If the Democratic party wont come to David he will go back to the party.

According to the report of the bombardments of the Spanish works about Santiago harbor very few forts are left in tact. It takes an American war ship a remarkably short time to silence a Spanish fort.

There is nothing like knowing when to let go, and had Mr. Leiter been possessed of that very valuable information he could have made a success of his great wheat deal, but he held on until he got Harpered.

If Spain had had such men as Grant, Sherman, Lee and Stonewall Jackson, to face in the field, the war which she has so successfully prolonged would have been drawing to a close with American arms triumphant.

It is reported that President McKinley does not intend that the war shall stop until all the islands between the United States and the Philipines, belonging to Spain, are seized. It is not so much a war for humanity's sake as for conquest after all.

Last week the Court of Appeals decided the appeal involving the controversy of Judge Tarvin with the Covington City Council. Both parties are claiming a victory. It is seldom that a court renders a judgment that is satisfactory to all parties to the contention.

The Republicans nominated Congressman Evans for reelection in the Louisville district, but before he is elected again his party will have to perform the "getting together" act, and as Mayor Todd, who is a strong man in his party is leading the revault against Evans, the Congressman's second term is hanging by a decidedly slender thread.

Nothing connected with the war is giving the President more annoyance than the rush of Congressmen seeking war appointments for constituents. Many of those who the President refused to give civil appointments, are importuning him for appointments in the army. Having failed in securing an opportunity of serving the country in one capacity they are trying for another.

The dynamite cruiser, Vesuvious, has been given a partial trial and she did not blow her self out of the water as many feared would be the result when her guns that throw dynamite shells were discharged. It is claimed that she did immense damage to everything in the neighborhood where her shells struck. Her successful work delighted the navy officials.

The belief that Gen. Miles is only a parlor soldier gains rapidly, and many do not hesitate to intimate that so long as he can prosecute his campaigns in a parlor car, that he is a very big brave. He has acquired the ill feeling of many officers by severe accusations against them, and they say that his recent trip to Tampa was a "pink tea" affair. The time has come when kid glove generals should be replaced by men in whose craw there is a large supply of sand.

The Georgetown News says: "The Seventh District Democratic Congressional Committee met Wednesday at Frankfort and decided that if the present Congressman, Hon. E. E. Settle, has no opposition by July 16th he will be declared the Democratic nominee. Should any person announce himself, precinct conventions will be held on September 3 throughout the District, and the convention to nominate a candidate will be called to order at Frankfort September 6. Mr. Settle having made such a brilliant record during his first term and distinguished himself repeatedly in the halls of Congress, his nomination would almost be a certainty should any one else announce."

In the United States Court at Covington the jury in the case of J. M. Hennessy, a brakeman on the C. & O. railroad company, returned a verdict giving him $5,000 as damages for an injury received while coupling cars that mangled his right hand.

Rack Hall, who resided near Stanton, was shot and instantly killed by Mrs. Tempa Hampton, who lived near him. Hall obtained a judgment against Mrs. Hampton and her aged husband for the possession of the land occupied by them. He walked over the place and was ordered off. He refused to go and Mrs. Hampton shot him in the forehead.

FROM GRANT COUNTY.

[Courier.]

Every Bank in Grant county, under the last decision of the Federal Court will be compelled to pay county, school and town taxes for the years 1893-94-95-96-97-98. Making in all five years for which the Banks will have to pay. The amount due the county from the seven Banks doing business in the county is about $10,000. In addition to this the Banks will have to pay their school and town taxes, which will amount to more than half as much more. Judge C. C. Cram has been employed by the Grant County Fiscal Court to assist the County Attorney in collecting this tax for the county, and steps will be taken at once to secure the collection thereof. It will be pretty hard on the Banks, but the Courts have said that it is the law and the moneyed institutions will have to obey the rule laid down by the Federal Courts.

Grant county's entire crop of tobacco which is probably the largest ever set in the county, is in the ground and growing nicely. If the price of the weed remains at its present figure Grant county farmers will be happy at the end of the year.

There are about one hundred wheel men and women in Williamstown and half as many at Dry Ridge, and when they all get together they make a most creditable exhibition.

The deepest lake in the world is Lake Baikal, in Siberia. In some parts it is 5,261 feet deep; its length is 397 miles, with an are of 15,000 square miles. It is the largest lake in Asia, and the sixth largest in the world.

A report recently made to the Borough Board of Manhattan estimates that 950 new teachers will be required annually for Greater New York—a number far in excess of the annual supply of local normal school graduates.

The policemen of Milwaukee, Wis. take great pride in their brass band, which they claim to be the only one of the kind in the country. The hardest task was to get a drummer. All the men had strong lungs, but deft fingers were found to be scarce.

The curfew law obtains in Seoul, Korea, but it is made applicable to men only. When the huge bronze bell of the city proclaims the hour of sunset and the time for closing the gates every man is obliged to retire to his home, under pain of flogging; but the women are allowed to go about at all hours.

The Castle Nuovo, in Naples, is to become visible to the people by the removal of the inclosing walls and the shops built against them. Under the Bourbons the castle was used as a dungeon for political prisoners, many of whom were shot without trial in the ditch that surrounds the structure.

The abandonment of the post office at Kaskaskia, Ill., for want of patronage, calls to mind the fact that this is the oldest town in the State, having been founded by LaSalle in 1682—the same year in which Penn founded Philadelphia. It has remained distinctively French to this day, and the modern movement seems to have avoided it.

The women of Coffeyville, Kan., made up a package of useful articles for each member of the local company of volunteers, and sent the whole to the camp at San Francisco. A copy of the New Testament went with each package, and one of the recipients objected to the gift. He said he wanted the Old Testament, because there was so much more war in it.

The grave diggers who were employed to dig Mr. Gladstone's grave in Westminister Abbey came upon a leaden coffin of some unknown person. They also found remains of other persons, of whose burial there is no record. And at a greater depth skulls were found, which, like the others, were only kept free from disappearance into the mould by the dryness of the soil.

The most costly hat in the world is probably that worn by a woman in Brunswick, Germany. Having no money with which to pay for it at the time of the purchase, she offered the milliner a lottery ticket in lieu of cash. The ticket was accepted, and a few weeks later it drew the grand prize, $75,000. The woman's husband tried to induce the milliner to share the spoils, but she consented to share only to the extent of $125.

The greatest banquet in history took place August 16, 1839, when the 40,000 Mayors of France sat at a table in the Palace de l'Industrie in Paris. There were three relays of about 13,000 guests each. To prepare the feast required 75 chief cooks, 13,000 waiters, scullions, cellarmen and helpers, 80,000 plates, 52,000 glasses, knives, forks and spoons in proportion, 40,000 rolls, and fish, meat and fowl by the ton. The banquet was part of the centenary celebration of the events of 1789.

If those concentradoes whose starving condition plunged the United States into a war for their relief, are living at this time they have learned how to subsist on air and remote prospects of succor from this country. America's war for humanity was sidetracked in its infancy—in fact before it was begun.

There is one Protestant congregation on the island of Puerto Pico. It is of the Scotch Presbyterian variety.

A Colorado paper says that state "is to-day employing 25 per cent. more miners than at any previous time in its history. It is treating more ore than ever."

That California woman who aimed a revolver at her husband and killed another man nearly 50 feet away has dealt unwittingly a terrible blow to the aspirations of advanced women who want to fight for Uncle Sam.

The death of that great tragedian, Thomas W. Keene, after 30 years' prominence in his profession, removes from the stage one of the best and most talented actors America has ever produced. Overwork, for which there was no need, was the prime cause of his death.

Henri Gilbert, a French journalist who is walking around the world for a wager of $10,000, has arrived in Adelaide, South Australia. The distance to be traversed is 41,500 miles, and it has to be accomplished in five years. Since he started, in February, 1895, he has covered 23,220 miles.

American bravery is not limited to any particular section. Ensign Bagley was from North Carolina, Lieut. Rowan lives in Kansas, Admiral Dewey hails from Vermont and Lieut. Hodson's home is in Alabama. It really makes no difference where a man lives, provided he is an American.

The Schley family—to which the commodore belongs—has long been prominent in Frederick county, Md. In fact, the first house ever built in the town of Frederick was erected by Thomas Schley. Dr. Fairfax Schley, an old gentleman of suavest grace and courtly manner, is now a distinguished representative resident at the old place.

Dr. Nansen has unfolded the plan of his next expedition, which will start from Behring straits or a point further north. The expedition will last probably five or six years. Dr. Nansen said it was not important to reach the north pole. It was sufficient to continue scientific investigations. The cost of the expedition will be about 300,000 rubles.

An American syndicate has received imperial authority in China to construct a railroad from Hankow to Canton, a distance of 900 miles, through a region containing 60,000,000 inhabitants. The company will buy 350 locomotives, 2,000 cars and an immense amount of material in this country. American industries are becoming quite cosmopolitan.

Still another element is said to have been found in air, forming one part in 20,000. The discoverer calls it krypton, which might be supposed to mean something hidden. Not long ago a gas which has been named argon was identified as a component of the atmosphere. Now if the scientists will tell what argon and krypton are the world will breathe easier.

The various state game wardens will have their hands full if they make serious effort to stop the traffic in song birds, but they should not be weary in well doing. The trappers who sell larks, robins and goldfinches to dealers for the adornment of women's headgear are a species of outlaw that would disgrace a community much less civilized than we profess to be.

Capt. Waters, of Los Angeles, Cal., the owner of San Miguel island, has made the discovery that this bit of land was never ceded to Mexico by Spain. By some oversight it was omitted from the list of islands given up when Mexican independence was acknowledged. As soon as he learned this fact Capt. Waters hastened to his little island, hoisted the American flag, and took formal possession in the name of the United States.

Our forgotten Klondike boom breaks in upon the war news in a way that gives melancholy forebodings. The collapse of another transport tub and the drowning of nearly two score passengers en route to the promised Eldorado is a fresh illustration of the risks voluntarily undertaken in the mad haste for easy riches. It will be fortunate if the Klondike craze is ended before other and still more harrowing catastrophes follow the trail of the modern argonauts.

Ex-President Harrison once said: "I would be glad if there could be an American flag in every American home. There is inspiration in it. It has a story wrought into its every fold, until each thread has come lesson to tell of sacrifice and heroism. It is the promise of all that we hope for. It is to it and about it that we must gather, and hold the affections of our people if these institutions are to be preserved." That was several years ago. His desire that there be an American flag in every American home has been fulfilled.

INSURGENN FLEET.

The Success of the Rebel Forces is Wonderful—Aguinaldo Has Captured 3,000 Spanish Prisoners—Native Proclamation of Independence.

LONDON, June 20.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Daily Mail telegraphing says:

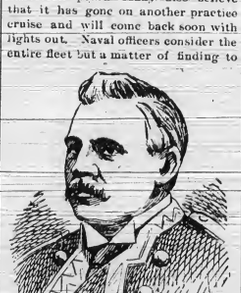
"A conspicuous object in Manila bay is the nucleus of an insurgent fleet. It consists of a vessel of a hundred tons burden, presented to Gen. Aguinaldo by a rich native. The vessel flies the flag of the Philippine republic—three triangles of red, white and blue on a white ground, or a ground formed of the old rebel flag of the sun rising above the hills.

"The native proclamation of independence was signed on Monday. Manila is completely surrounded by the insurgents, of whom there are three forces deployed about the city, one posted to the south between Malate and the river Pasig; another occupying a position to the east and cutting off communication with the lake or Laguna de Bay, and the third operating on the north side, stopping all railway communication between Manila and the rich supply towns to which the line runs.

"The success of the rebel forces is wonderful. Gen. Aguinaldo has more than surpassed the expectations of those who favored his return to the Philippines. He has captured 3,000 Spanish troops, including 900 regulars. Among the latter are 11 officers of and above the rank of lieutenant colonel, including two brigadier generals, and he has taken 70 officers below the rank of lieutenant colonel. In addition his forces have captured five prominent priests, heads of important parishes in provinces recently overrun by the insurgents. These men the insurgents hate even more than they hate the Spaniards and the rebels chuckle with joy when they point them out in their prisons.

"They have captured, too, Old Cavite church, taking 270 prisoners, and they now hold the entire shore of the bay right round to Malate. A foreign fire brigade, composed of British, Swiss and Germans, who intend to remain ashore, are quartered at the premises of Ker & Co. to guard foreign property against fire, applied to the Spaniards to receive arms, but were refused."

TO APPLY THE TORCH.



Straw and Oil Strewn in the Streets of Caimanera Ready to Wipe the Town From Existence.

OFF GUANTANAMO, June 18, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 20.—Cuban scouts report to-day that the inhabitants of Caimanera have strewn the streets with straw and oil with the intention of destroying the city and fleeing to the hills.

Caimanera lies four miles up the bay from Camp Metalla, under the guns of the American ships, and the situation is desperate. Starving and famine-stricken, convinced of the triumph of the American arms, and without faith in the protection of the Spanish soldiery, the people are believed to have determined to leave their houses in ashes behind them and seek safety in the mountains of the north.

Adm. Camara's Fleet.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The Cadiz fleet of 16 vessels is still gone and many believed it has sailed for an American point. Many also believe that it has gone on another practice cruise and will come back soon with lights out. Naval officers consider the entire fleet but a matter of finding to destroy it. With the Monterey and his present fleet Adm. Dewey could defeat it. A threat is made to send it against the Atlantic coast cities. A new flying squadron, with the Yale and Harvard as scouts, will be made to watch for the coming of Camara.

VICE ADMIRAL CAMARA.
(Commanding Spain's Reserve Fleet Said to Have Sailed from Cadiz.)

Unable to Form a Cabinet.

PARIS, June 20.—After consultation with Mm. Peytral, Sarrien and Dupuy Saturday morning, M. Ribot informed President Faure that he is unable to form a cabinet to succeed the Meline ministry. President Faure accepted the latter's resignation on June 15.

MERRIMAC HEROES.

Should They Be Harmed Gen. Pando and Adm. Cervera Will Be Hanged, If They Are Captured.

NEW YORK, June 20. A Washington dispatch says the administration is aroused over Spain's refusal to exchange the Merrimac heroes and will instruct Sampson and Shafter to send a flag of truce to Cervera, informing him that he and Gen. Pando will be hanged when the latter fall into the hands of the Americans, if Hobson and his comrades shall be harmed.

ADMIRAL CERVERA.

MADRID, June 20.—The statement that President McKinley has sent to Adm. Cervera and Gen. Pando messages saying that he would hold them personally responsible for the lives of Lieut. Hobson and his men has produced a disagreeable impression here in military circles as showing that President McKinley distrusts the military honor of the Spaniards who, on their part, despise all threats. Such messages, it is declared, ended the future exchange of the prisoners most unlikely.

Two Killed in a Wreck.

EASTON, Pa., June 20.—The passenger train on the Central railroad of New Jersey, due here shortly after 6 o'clock Sunday evening, was wrecked six miles above Manch Chunk, at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and the engineer, Richard McHale, of Easton, and the news agent, Charles Ebner, of South Easton, were killed. Wilfred Yeomans, the fireman, and Charles Taylor, the baggage master, both of Easton, were badly hurt.

Riot Narrowly Averted.

CLEVELAND, O., June 20.—A riot between the Hanna and McKisson factions was narrowly averted at the republican county convention here Saturday. The trouble started when the Hannaites attempted to organize the convention, which the McKissonites resisted. A wild scene followed. The police made a number of arrests. The Hannaites finally withdrew from the hall and are now holding a rump convention.

The Enlistment of Cooks.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The house committee on military affairs has agreed on and favorably reported to the house bills for the enlistment of a cook in each company, battery and troop of volunteers, with the assistance of detailed enlisted men; also for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlistment of the 1st regiment, Ohio volunteer light artillery, three months men.

Near Manila.

LONDON, June 20.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Times says: The rebels hold Manila at their mercy, but Adm. Dewey is anxious that the American troops should have the honor of receiving the Spanish capitulation. The steamer Yuen Sing reports passing the United States troop ship City of Peking on the morning of the 15th near Manila.

Shipping Coal to Honolulu.

TACOMA, Wash., June 20.—J. B. Steele, Hawaiian consul and United States commissioner, has just returned from the east. He says that shipments of coal aggregating 40,000 tons are soon to be made to Honolulu. One American ship, the St. Francis, is now at Baltimore loading a portion of this coal.

Died Suddenly on the Street.

CINCINNATI, June 20.—Dr. H. L. Medaris, 1639 Fremont street, Fairmount, died suddenly on Hopple street, near the Stockyards station, Saturday morning. Dr. Van Meter was called and said that he probably died from heat. The coroner was notified and the body removed to the late home of deceased.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., June 20.—When about to go in bathing at Pablo beach Sunday afternoon James T. Gatewood, private stenographer to Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. Gatewood was from Richmond, Va., and had been here about a week.

Flour Mills Closed Down.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 20.—Owing to the musteadiness of the flour market, four of Milwaukee's large flour mills have closed down. There are only two mills running and those on short time. This condition will probably exist until the market becomes settled.

Troops With Camara's Fleet.

GIBRALTAR, June 20.—It is asserted here that six trans-Atlantic liners, having on board 4,000 Spanish troops, accompanied Adm. Camara's fleet.

WRECK AND RUIN.

Thursday's Bombardment Played Havoc With Fortifications at Santiago.

The Flag Over Morro Castle Was Half-Masted for Several Hours—Possibly a Spanish Leader Was Killed or Hobson and Men Were Murdered.

OFF SANTIAGO DE CUBA, June 18, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 20.—A careful inspection of the fortifications along the crest of the hills defending Santiago harbor since the bombardment Thursday morning shows that the American gunners spread wreck and ruin everywhere. Some of the batteries were demolished beyond repair. The vultures which circled on level wings over the hills as thick as swallows around a chimney for hours after the firing ceased furnished grnesome evidence of the fatality among the Spanish soldiers. Hundreds of troops could be seen from the ships digging in mounds of earth piled up by the explosions of the projectiles from the heavy guns for bodies while their heads were fanned by the wings of the black scavengers of the battlefield. There were two spots, one on the east and the other on the west of the harbor entrance which were denuded of the foliage. The hill tops seem literally blown away. These marked the places where the 200 pound charges of gun cotton blown by the Vesuvius landed. But the most ominous token of death flew from Morro castle. The saffron flag of Spain was half masted for several hours. The significance of this is not known. It is not customary to half mast flags, but possibly some Spanish leader was killed by the heavy fire of our guns, though some officers of the squadron believe that the flag was half masted as a notification to the Americans that Lieut. Hobson and his brave men were dead.

If such is the case they must have been wantonly murdered. The Spanish might seek to lay their death to the bombardment, but not a shot from the American ships struck the fortress. Neither Adm. Sampson nor Commodore Schley believe that Lieut. Hobson and his party have been killed. We have 17 prisoners taken at Guantanamo, including a lieutenant, for reprisals or exchange.

There was evident demoralization among the Spanish troops during the bombardment. Officers could be seen with drawn swords driving the men to the guns, but even then they could not be forced to stay so long as our guns were directed at them. The fifteen minutes' night work of the Vesuvius had shattered their nerves. It is believed by some that the 15-inch projectile fired from the Texas which was reported to have exploded the powder magazine in one of the western batteries did not fall in the battery but went beyond and blew up one of the ships in the harbor.

A dramatic incident of the bombardment was the act of a Spanish officer who bravely ran along the parapet under a heavy fire encouraging his men to stand by their guns. Shot and shell rained about him and after one terrific explosion he was seen no more and the parapet had disappeared. He could not have escaped death.

From the foretop of the Brooklyn, 2,000 yards distant, the men in the grounds could be noticed, but a minute later dust and flying debris would take their places and when the smoke cleared away only a spot of red earth could be seen—guns and gunners had been swept away. It was the most deadly and destructive bombardment of the war thus far. Scarcely a shot from the big guns of the squadron went astray. The aim of our gunners was superb and not only were the coast forts annihilated, but the batteries on Cayo Smith, up the harbor, were destroyed.

Had all the ships used smokeless powder as did the New Orleans there would remain no signs of guns or fortifications to indicate that there had ever been any defenses there.

There were no casualties in the fleet, although the ships held a fixed position as if inviting the Spaniards to fire at them. The half-stripped ships' gunners never worked with more enthusiasm. The words of Rr. Adm. Sampson were: "First silence the batteries on the shore and then continue firing until the fortifications are reduced."

This order was strictly obeyed. It was the first time that such instructions had been given and the men responded with a will. In 38 minutes the order was given to cease firing and the message went to each ship from the admiral. "Well done," and the officers and men turned in for breakfast. Every detail of the engagement had been executed to the letter, from the opening fire by the New York to the last shot from the Iowa. The Spaniards were evidently surprised while strengthening their fortifications.

A Manifesto in Favor of Peace.

MADRID, June 20.—The Spanish papers Saturday published a manifesto in favor of peace. There is much comment here over a long conference which the British ambassador has just had with the minister for war.

Gen. Joral Reported Killed.

OFF SANTIAGO, June 20.—Spies report to Adm. Sampson that the Spanish Gen. Joral and several officers were killed by the gun cotton explosions at the first trial of the batteries of the Vesuvius.

CUBAN VICTORIES.

Many Spaniards Killed, Stores Seized, Forts and Bridges Destroyed in Two Provinces—All Wires Cut.

KEY WEST, Fla., June 18.—Further information from Pinar del Rio and Porto Principe shows that the Cubans are vigorous and the Spaniards are weakening. Gen. Diaz and other Cuban commanders have seized or destroyed all the tobacco in Pinar del Rio and have stored it along the coast. San Antonio lighthouse was wrested from the Spaniards. All wires of the Havana & Pinar del Rio railroad are cut. The two principal bridges between Cortemisa and Pinar del Rio were blown up by Diaz.

A Spanish column was routed four weeks ago near Pinar del Rio City. 70 were killed, four cannons captured and food was seized. A turnpike bridge between Cabanas and Muriel in Havana province was dynamited by Cubans. Thirty Spaniards were killed and three Cubans wounded. The Esperand sugar estate was raided and burned and the Spanish owner and guard of 15 were killed. Cubans have captured Spanish cattle in Havana and Pinar del Rio provinces.

BACKS OUT.

Spain Refuses to Exchange Lieut. Hobson and the Other Brave Men of the Merrimac for Spanish Prisoners.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The following telegram has been received from Commodore Watson:

"On the 14th I sent Capt. Indlow on the Maple, under flag of truce, with full power to negotiate exchange of Hobson and the seven petty officers. Chief of staff answered by letter that after reference to Madrid the captain general will communicate by flag of truce. Capt. Ludlow will, if possible, have exchange made as desired and soon. (Signed) "WATSON."

HAVANA, June 18, via London.—The Spanish torpedo boat Vincente Yenez Pinzon left the harbor Friday morning to communicate to the American fleet Spain's refusal to exchange Merrimac prisoners.

Four Hanged by a Mob.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18.—A telephone from Wetumpka states that four of the prisoners taken from the jail there Thursday night were hung Friday morning at a point ten miles from Wetumpka and three miles from the scene of the crime. The four were Sol Jackson, Lewis Spier, Jesse Thompson and Camp Reese. The troops from here did not succeed in locating the prisoners, as the country is hilly, rough and wooded. The most of the night and Friday morning were spent in a sort of trial investigating the crime and getting at the guilty ones.

Insurgents Attack Manila.

LONDON, June 18.—The Madrid correspondent of the London Daily Mail says: "An official dispatch from Manila asserts that the insurgents have closed around the town and are now attacking the walled part where the defenders are still holding out. The insurgents have cut the water supply but the city has remaining wells available. Fighting is going on all on the sea front, but the American are taking no part in the attack."

Mobbing Jews.

CRACOW, Austrian Galicia, June 18.—The situation in the district of Gorlice in connection with the anti-Semitic excesses is of the most serious character. Bands of men from other districts have reinforced the petroleum-workers and peasants of Gorlice and are attacking, plundering and burning public buildings. They have attacked the towns of Biecz and Gorlice, which had to be defended by troops.

More Destructive Than a Monitor.

NEW YORK, June 18.—The United States dynamite cruiser Vesuvius evidently began a new era in warfare when she made havoc of the Santiago harbor fortifications Monday night with three of her giant shells. Army and navy men are talking about her as reverently as if she were supernatural. Citizens generally compared her with Ericsson's monitor, and said she is a hundred times more destructive.

Recruits Leave for Tampa.

ATLANTA, Ga., June 18.—Out of the 5,000 recruits at Fort McPherson, about 500 were Friday started for Tampa over the Southern railway. Every man was uniformed and equipped, and Post Quartermaster Normoyle announces that in future all recruits leaving Fort McPherson will be ready for active service. The new men continue to arrive at the rate of 150 a day.

Big Fellows After It Also.

"I like the building well enough," said the househunter to the agent, who had spent half an hour showing him over the premises, "but I am not certain about the surroundings. Is it a quiet neighborhood?"

"Quiet?" said the agent. "You can't find a quieter place in the whole city. Why—Still, I suppose the newsboys come around here bright and early Sunday morning, just when a man wants to sleep the soundest, with their yells of 'Mornin' pa-a-per!' "

Compromise on Silver Coinage.

The senate recedes from its coinage of the silver seigniorage amendment, but substitute is agreed to simply authorizing and directing the coinage of not less than 2,000,000 silver dollars per month from the silver bullion held in the treasury, said silver dollars to be applied as provided by the act of July 14, 1890.

TEACHERS TO GATHER.

Meeting of Trans-Mississippi Educators June 28-30 in Omaha to Be Notable in Scholastic Events.

Omaha, Neb., June 13. — Notable among the educational conventions of the year will be that of the Trans-Mississippi teachers, to be held in this city June 28, 29 and 30. The scope of the convention is quite large and several of the famous educators of the country will be present and will make addresses to the delegates.

The importance of a Trans-Mississippi educational congress can scarcely be overestimated. According to the best circulations there are 126,450 teachers in the schools of the Trans-Mississippi states, directing the training of a rapidly-rising generation of 3,884,085 pupils in 19 states. The total valuation of school property in this territory is estimated at the time of the last census to be $146,749,300, though it is safe to say that the actual conditions at the present time are much greater. In 16 of the Trans-Mississippi states, without any regard for population, there are 112 universities and colleges. Illinois heads the list with 28 institutions whose aggregate valuation of grounds, buildings and other property is $3,458,625. Missouri is second, with 25; Iowa third, with 20; Kansas fourth, with 14. Minnesota, California and Nebraska in order named. Nebraska's six college institutions have property worth $1,114,000. There are 572,290 enrolled pupils in the state, 6,687 schoolhouses and 9,491 teachers. Over 16,380 pupils are enrolled in the Omaha schools and the value of the property is $1,500,000.

Noted Physician Dead.

Louisville, Ky., June 13.—Dr. John A. Larrabee, one of Louisville's best known physicians and prominently known in his profession all over the country, died at his home in this city Sunday of Bright's disease, aged 58 years. Dr. Larrabee was a native of Maine and was a man of wide popularity. He contributed largely to medical journals and was the author of many treatises upon diseases of children.

THE REBEL ARMY.

It Is Said Gen. Gomez Can Concentrate Thirty Thousand Armed Men.

A Definite Plan for the Co-Operation of the Troops Under Gomez With United States Forces When Time Comes Has Been Arranged.

New York, June 20.—Capt. Rafael Conte, of the Cuban army, has arrived at the headquarters of the Cuban junta in this city with dispatches from Gen. Gomez. He was accompanied by a lieutenant of the "army of liberation."

Capt. Conte and his companion left Gomez in Las Villas. The general then had with him a body guard of only 60 men—a cavalry escort. There was little food in the region where Gomez was making his headquarters, so he did not mass any large number of men there, but had them spread over a large extent of territory and directed their movements from his headquarters.

He has all the necessary arrangements made for the concentration of troops when the proper time comes, but keeps them scattered and employed in a guerrilla warfare in the meantime so that they may find food.

The captain claims that Gomez can concentrate 50,000 armed men in a short time at any point where it is desirable. There are several thousand more men who are attached to Gomez' army, and are only waiting for arms to be available for defensive or offensive operations.

In a skirmish with guerrillas about three weeks ago, Gomez was wounded in the left arm by a Mauser bullet. The would healed quickly, however, in spite of the general's advanced age, and when the captain left headquarters the old chief was able to use his arm as well as before he was hit.

After leaving Gomez the envoys made their way to the sea coast, living upon sweet potatoes and fruit which they found along the way. For two days they were without food at all. Finally they reached the sea coast between Manzanas and Cardenas and were taken by a fishing boat to a small cave, where they waited until a vessel of the blockading fleet was reported, when they put off in a row boat and were picked up six miles off the coast.

The vessel which picked them up was the tug Osceola, Capt. Purcell. The Osceola is one of the auxiliary fleet. They were nearly naked and nearly famished when they were taken on board the Osceola, but the officers of the vessel supplied them with food and clothing and carried them into Key West. From there they came on at once to this city with their dispatches.

Gomez is now especially desirous of receiving arms and food. It is understood that a definite plan for the co-operation of the troops under Gomez with the United States troops, when the time for such co-operation arrives, has been arranged between the general and the war department at Washington. Meanwhile Gomez will keep his forces scattered.

Capt. Conte says that from information received from Gomez's spies it is known that in all the garrison towns held by the Spaniards sickness is making great ravages among the troops. The hospitals in Havana are so overcrowded with sick that proper medical attention can not be given them, and the number of dead increases every day.

The coal supply of Havana is nearly exhausted, and what there is left has been taken in charge by Blanco, who has his officers supervise consumption. The electric lighting company recently received an order to shut off their dynamos at 9 o'clock so that the coal might be husbanded. Promptly at the hour at which the electric light works shut down Havana is now in darkness.

To Select a Site for a Military Camp.

Washington, June 20.—Secretary Alger has appointed a board of officers consisting of First Lieut. M. W. Rowell, of the Fifth cavalry, and First Lieut. A. R. Joyce, the adjutant of the Tenth United States Volunteer infantry, to proceed to Sugar Loaf mountain with a view to the selection of a tract of land suitable for a military camp. Sugar Loaf mountain is not far from Harper's Ferry, Va., which loeality the war department has considered as offering several eligible locations for the assembling of large bodies of men.

An Absurd Story.

London, June 20.—The Star Saturday published an absurd story from Paris to the effect that Capt. Gen. Augusti has informed the Spanish premier, Senor Segasta, that he has handed Manilla over to Adm. Didrichs, the commander of the German fleet, who has occupied the citadel and arsenal on the plea of protecting the inhabitants from the insurgents.

The Landing of the Troops.

Washington, June 20.—A few thousand men will probably be landed at Caimanera to reinforce the marines and complete the capture of Guantanamo. The remainder of the army will land at one or more points near Santiago. Within a few days Washington will be in direct cable communication with Caimanera. The French Cable company has sent an expedition to pick up several ends of the Hayden line and re-establish an office there. The new line will be operated by the French company.

MANILA FALTERS.

The City May Fall Into Dewey's Hands Before Arrival of the Troops—Augusti About to Surrender.

New York, June 18.—A special cablegram from Hong Kong to the Journal says:

The most severe and important battle since Adm. Dewey's anniniation of the Spanish fleet has occurred at Manila. One thousand insurgents attacked 3,000 Spaniards inflicting heavy losses and almost forcing the entrance to the city.

The insurgents under Gen. Aguinaldo and the American sailors and marines of Adm. Dewey's fleet completely surrounded Manila.

The foreign residents have fled to the ships.

Gen. Augusti is reported to be willing to surrender to the Americans in order to prevent the insurgents from capturing the capital, setting it on fire and killing the Spaniards. The archbishop however is opposed to surrender and has overruled Augusti.

The success of the insurgents is wonderful. The Spaniards taken prisoners in the two weeks' campaign aggregate 3,000, including 2,000 soldiers of the regular army. Prominent among them are Managed Garcia and Cordoba.

The governors of [illegible] and Provinces of Cavite, Baluean and Ba[illegible] are also made prisoners.

Two million rounds of cartridges were seized in the fortified cathedral of Old Cavite. The large garrison of Old Cavite has surrendered, thus giving the insurgents command of the shore of the entire bay.

All interior sources of supply are now cut off from the Spanish forces in Manila.

The Americans can take Manila within 24 hours after the arrival of the troops. The city is now at the mercy of the American fleet.

Adm. Dewey's conduct during the blockade has been admirable.

A great fire is raging north of Manila. The insurgents have captured the waterworks, on which the supply of the city depends.

Gen. Augusti has issued an order declaring that all males above the age of 15 shall join the army and do military duty.

Manila, June 6, via Hong Kong, June 18.—Spanish power is crumbling in the Philippine islands.

Gen. Pena and a thousand Spanish soldiers have surrendered at Santa Cruz. Similar surrenders have taken place at La Guna and at Pampanga, and in each case hardly anybody was killed.

It is reported that Rr. Adm. Dewey is unable to restrain the insurgents, but their conduct has been satisfactory so far. There is no necessity for interference, as no excesses whatever have been committed. This is partly due to the merely nominal assistance furnished the insurgents. The latter proposed to form a republic under Anglo-American tutelage and threatened to visit with severe penalties the insurgents who have become turncoats, especially in the case of Paterno, a prominent native protege of the Spaniards.

There was desultory firing to-day in every quarter on the outskirts of the town, with no material result, although there were several artillery accidents and one explosion which killed six Spaniards and wounded many others.

The ammunition of the Spaniards is utterly untrustworthy because it is old, rotten and has never been tested.

The Spaniards are impotent with rage, bewilderment and despair.

The insurgents yesterday rushed the passage of the Zapota river and also descended from the lagoon, took the Spaniards in flank and captured several guns. The Spanish soldiers made a good stand until they were ordered to retreat. Probably their ammunition was inadequate.

The insurgents to-day captured Las Palmas, Parangue, Tugalo, Mali Bay and Pineday, all on the coast line. The Spaniards lost 90 men killed and wounded and 7,000 returned here unhurt.

The insurgents are now firing into Halute, the southernmost quarter of Manila, and a mile and a half from the center place containing the fort, magazine, telegraph office and club house.

The captain general held a council of war, at which it was proposed to surrender, because resistance is clearly useless and a deplorable expenditure of blood and heroic efforts would be rendered futile by lack of training, insufficient supplies and the smallness of the force.

The council was furious at this "humiliation by mere natives" and he resigned (?) and was superseded by his second in command, who countermanded the withdrawal of the troops from the field.

Peary's Arctic Expedition.

St. Johns, N. H., June 18.—Capt. John Bartlett, with a crew of 11 men, sailed Friday night for New York to man Lieut. Peary's Arctic steamer Windward, which will leave that city on a polar expedition about July 1.

Senate Adjourns Until Monday.

Washington, June 18.—In the executive session of senate held late in the day an agreement was reached to adjourn over until Monday, thus postponing the taking up of the annexation question until that time.

A BOMBARDMENT.

Sampson's Fleet Still Pounding the Batteries at Santiago Harbor.

A Charge of Gun Cotton Exploded on Cayo Smith and a Hole Big Enough to Hold a Church Was Blown Out of the Side of the Fort.

Off Santiago de Cuba, June 15, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 17.—Rr. Adm. Sampson's fleet bombarded the batteries at Santiago de Cuba for the third time at daylight this morning. For hours the ships pounded the batteries at the right and left of the entrance, only sparing El Morro, where Lieut. Hobson and his companions of the Merrimae are in prison.

The western batteries, against which the main assault was directed, were badly wrecked. One was utterly destroyed. In others many guns were dismounted.

At first the Spaniards answered passionately and wildly, but impotently. Then most of the guns were deserted. Not a ship was struck, nor a man injured on the American side.

It is believed that the enemy's loss of life was heavy.

As a preliminary to the hammering given the batteries, the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius last night at midnight was given another chance. Three 250 pound charges of gun cotton were sent over the fortifications at the entrance. The design was to drop them in the bay, around the angle back of the eminence on which El Morro is situated, where it was known that the Spanish torpedo boat destroyers were lying. Two charges went true, as no reports were heard—a peculiarity of the explosion of gun-cotton in water. Whether the destroyers were demolished is not known but the destructive area of gun cotton is large and it would not be surprising if it is subsequently ascertained that one or both were destroyed.

The third charge exploded with terrific violence on Cayo Smith. From where the fleet lay the entrance to the harbor looked, in the black night, like a door opening into a livid fire of a Titanic furnace. A crater big enough to hold a church was blown out of the side of the Cayo Smith and was clearly seen from the ships this morning.

Adm. Sampson issued the orders for the bombardment last night. Coffee was served to the men at half-past three this morning and with the first blush of dawn the men were called quietly to quarters. The ships steamed in five-knot speed to a 3,000 yards range, when they closed up, broadside on, until a distance of three cable lengths separated them. They were strung out in the form of a crescent, the heavy fighting ships in the center, the flagship on the right flank and the Massachusetts on the left flank. The line remained stationary throughout the bombardment. The Vixen and Scorpion took up positions on opposite flanks, close in shore for the purpose of enfilading any infantry that might fire upon the ships.

Fifteen minutes later at 5:25 a. m. the New York opened with a broadside from her main battery at the works on the east of the entrance to the harbor. All the ships followed in red streaks of flame. The fleet, enveloped in smoke, pelted the hills and kicked up dirt and masonry. It was a magnificent spectacle from where the Dauntless lay. Though the gun captains had been cautioned not to waste ammunition but to fire with deliberation, the fire was so rapid that there was an almost continuous report. The measured crash of the big 13-inch guns of the battle ships sounded above the rattle of the guns of the secondary batteries like thunder claps above the din of a hurricane. A strong land breeze off the shore carried the smoke of the ships seaward, while it let down a thick curtain in front of the Spanish gunners.

The dons responded spiritedly at first, but their frenzied, half crazed fire could not match the cool nerve trained eyes and skilled gunnery of the American sailors. Our fire was much more effective than in preceding bombardments. The admiral's ordnance expert had given explicit directions to reduce the powder charges and to elevate the guns, so as to shorten the trajectory and thus to secure a plunging fire. As the shells in the preceding bombardments dropped with the almost straight trajectories of projectiles with full charges, it was almost impossible to plant them. They would shoot into the air, encircling the batteries owing to the high elevation, and fall far over the fortifications, the effect of the reduced charges was marvelous. In 15 minutes one western battery was completely wrecked. The Massachusetts tore a gaping hole in the emplacement with a thousand pound projectile and the Texas dropped a shell into the powder magazine. The explosion wrought terrible havoc.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

Washington, June 14.—Senate.—For nearly two hours Monday the senate had under discussion the resolution of Mr. Lodge (Mass.), directing the claims committee to make an inquiry as to the disposition of the money appropriated by congress to pay the claim of the book concern of the Methodist Episcopal church south. A heated colloquy between Mr. Chandler (N. H.) and Mr. Pasco was the feature of the discussion. At 2 o'clock the consideration of the bill providing for the incorporation of the international American bank was begun. The measure was still under discussion when the senate adjourned.

House.—The debate upon Hawaiian annexation continued in the house Monday, ten speeches being made. Very little interest was manifest, either upon the floor or in the galleries, few occupants of the latter being present and the attendance upon the floor hardly exceeding at any time 40 members. A night session will be held Tuesday evening to afford opportunity for many members to speak, to whom otherwise it would be impossible to give time before the vote Wednesday afternoon. The speeches made Monday were by Messrs. Newlands (silver, Nev.), Pearson (rep., N. C.), Henry (rep., Ind.), Barrows (rep., Mass.), Stewart (rep., N. J.), Kirkpatrick (rep., Pa.), Mann (rep., Ill.) for and by Messrs. Bell (pop., Col.), Bland (dem., Mo.) and Smith (dem., Ariz.) against the resolution. The house passed a bill appropriating $473,151.36 to pay the Behring sea award.

Washington, June 15.—Senate.—At Tuesday's session of the senate the resolution of Mr. Lodge (Mass.) directing that an inquiry be made into the disposition made of the Methodist Book Concern publishing fund paid recently by congress was adopted without division. The measure to incorporate the International American bank was under discussion for three hours, and developed some interesting facts concerning the foreign trade of this country. Final action was not taken on the bill. A house joint resolution appropriating $473,151.36 to pay the Behring sea award was adopted. The appropriation is carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill, but that measure is still in conference and the award has to be paid on the 16th instant.

House.—Eight hours, comprising a afternoon and evening sessions of the house Tuesday, were devoted to debate of the new lands resolutions for the annexation of Hawaii. Twenty speeches were delivered, most of them brief. A vote will be taken at 5 p. m. Wednesday, and in order to give time for speeches which members desire to make, the house agreed to meet at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. The resolution, according to estimates Tuesday, will command the exception of not more than 12 all republican votes and will enlist the support of from 15 to 20 democratic and members of other parties.

Washington, June 16.—Senate.—After the passage of a number of private pension bills and listening to a carefully prepared speech on the advantages of republican tariff legislation by Mr. Pritchard (N. C.) the senate Wednesday resumed consideration of the international American bank bill. An amendment was accepted by the committee and adopted extending the privileges of the measure to all citizens of the United States instead of restricting them to those mentioned in the bill. When the senate adjourned consideration of the bill had not been concluded.

House.—By a vote of 90 to 91 the house of representatives Wednesday afternoon adopted the Newland resolutions providing for the annexation of Hawaii by a vote of 209 to 91. The debate which has been proceeding without interruption since Saturday, has been one of the most notable of this congress, the proposed annexation being considered of great commercial and strategic importance by its advocates, and being looked upon by its opponents as involving a radical departure from the long established policy of the country and likely to be followed by the inauguration of a pronounced policy of colonization, the abandonment of the Monroe doctrine and participation in international wrangles. More than half a hundred members participated in the debate.

Washington, June 17.—Senate.—After devoting an hour Thursday to the discussion of a bill recognizing the annuities to the Sission and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians, the senate resumed the consideration of the bill to incorporate the International American bank. A test vote on amendment clearly indicated that a majority of the senate favors the measure. A final vote on it is expected Friday.

House.—The general deficiency bill was considered Thursday by the house but was not disposed of. It probably will be taken up Friday and passed unless the private calendar is urged.

Washington, June 18.—Senate.—The foreign relations committee, through Mr. Davis, the chairman, Friday reported favorably to the senate the Newlands resolution for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. Davis announced his purpose of calling up the resolutions Saturday for consideration, but the senate decided later to adjourn until Monday, the debate upon the resolutions will not begin until that time. The bill to incorporate the International American bank, in accordance with the recommendation of the Pan American congress, which has occupied a greater part of the senate's time this week, was passed by a vote of 39 to 23. The design of the measure is to furnish such banking and exchange facilities as will promote trade between the United States and the countries of Central and South America. The bill provides that the bank shall have a capital stock of $5,000,000, and that the capital stock may be increased to $25,000,000. The institution in accordance with the terms of the bill, shall be under the supervision of the controller of the currency and in the character of the corporation, which the bill grants, certain privileges are accorded to the incorporators in view of advantages which are expected to accrue to those interested in trade with southern countries. An amendment to the bill provides that any coterie of citizens who comply with the requirements of the charter may organize and establish an international bank.

House.—The general deficiency bill occupied the attention of the house Friday. It probably will not pass the house before Monday, the session Saturday after 2 o'clock being set apart for eulogies upon the late Senator Harris of Tennessee.

Five Thousand Spaniards Deserted.

Key West, Fla., June 17.—Information of a stirring nature has been received by the Cuban Junta here from Ubieta, secretary of the Cuban civil government. Porto Principe, is doomed. Blanco's conscripts, 5,000 strong, deserted, and went over to the Cuban army. The Spanish garrison at Nuevitas abandoned the city after burning nearly all the buildings, and retreated to Porto Principe. The Cubans tore up the railroad tracks. Ubieta says more than 10,000 Cuban volunteers in Havana will turn on the Spaniards at the right moment. A small detachment, Ubieta says can force Porto Principe to surrender, as the Cubans are besieging the place.

The Blade Club held a meeting Saturnight and elected new officers. The new editor in chief read a poem entitled: "A Modern Soldier of the Legion," and the first verse runs something like this: "The battleship Maine lies mangled near Havana's piers; There was no lack of Spanish hypocritical sympathy or dearth of crocodile tears. But soon a comrade will stand beside her to hear what the waves may have to say, for Sampson is likely to get there some morning just at peep o' day. The new assistant editor in chief said this war would be known as the "War of fruitless search," or else go down to history as the "War of Successful Evasion." The sidewalk in front of Fink's new building is the best in town, and the cement steps are without a parallel anywhere around Walton. Mr. Craven knows how to do things of that kind, and the great hope is that he may have more of it to do. A person can now get into the postoffice or the jewelry store without risking the breaking of his neck or injuring other parts of his anatomical formation.

The soda fountain is succeeding as well as the proprietor expected. Three youthful criers paraded the streets Saturday afternoon with a banner and occasionally vociferating, "ice cream soda water! A nickel a glass." Having never partaken of the beverage only with "Speihk" and not wishing to chill and surprise our stomach with any icy compound, we did not go down as we also learned the "speihk" could not be had.

After reaching Chickamauga a Missouri soldier wrote as follows to his home paper: "We thought we received a royal reception at Cincinnati, but, after crossing the Ohio river, the atmosphere seemed different, and at the first town we made a stop we were greeted with a hospitality only known to Kentuckians. The town was Erlanger. Here we were met by a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen, who carried pails of buttermilk, hot coffee, baskets of pies and cakes and sandwiches, and great bouquets of flowers. All this was free, and was passed along the car windows to the boys, who were being complimented from every side. Ed McKim was fishing in the "Lonesome hole," down on Gunpowder, one day last week, and stuck his pole in the bank and went off to catch his supply of bait which was about exhausted. When he returned, his pole had disappeared, and being unable to locate it after a close search, he concluded some fellow had come along while he was absent and swiped it. About the time Ed was getting real mad, he saw the pole shoot up out of the water at the lower end of the lake. Knowing that a fish that could propel the pole as had been done was a monster, he started out to bank it. Up and down the long lake they chased until Ed became desperate and rushed into the water up to his neck and grabbed the pole, when the struggle began, but the line was not equal to the emergency and the fish was soon free again, while its would-be captor was greatly chagrined at not being able to string the ten pound fish of the cat variety.

Jim—"Yes I saw them. They borrowed all the chisels from the marble works and were knocking holes in the cliff loam and putting it in pretty rapid. They had a man on a horse going for plants and as he ran over the surface the fire flew worse than the sparks from the wheels of a trolley car. They are doing good work."

Judge—"Jim, that's a lie, and if you can't come over here without lying you had better remain at home. The court don't need you."

UNION, - - - - - - KENTUCKY.

Never was there a gayer assemblage of handsome young ladies and gentlemen congregated at the popular Harvest Home picnic grounds than that of last Saturday. They came from nearly every neighborhood in the county, all bent on having a good time, and they were not disappointed. The music was all that could have been desired, and the lovers of the dance followed its enchanting strains until the shades of evening warned them the hour had arrived for turning their faces homeward. Union, it is said, sent over the largest delegation.

William Moore, aged 71, of Boone county, Ky., has lain in bed for sixty-three years. When about 9 years of age his spine was injured by a fall from a horse, producing partial paralysis and rendering him helpless for life. For a time his mind was affected by his long years of intense sufferings, but recently his memory has returned, and he can distinctly recall and relate incidents and events of 50 years or more ago with wonderful accuracy, and discloses a surprising strength of mind and intellect for one of his age and condition.—Enquire, June 12.

For many years Mr. Moore has had charge of a large farm which he has handled most successfully, and notwithstanding the depression which has prevailed in this country he has made money right along. He is well posted on all topics of the day.

The State Baptist Association in session at Hopkinsville, has adopted the following resolutions in regard to Dr. Whitsitt by a vote of 202 to 25:

Resolved, 1, That the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary shall not be allowed to make any report nor present any appeals of any sort whatever to this body so long as Dr. Whitsett shall be in any manner connected with this lustitution.

2. That if Dr. Whitsitt's connection with the Seminary has not ceased at the time of the next session of the Southern Baptist Convention we urge that body to adopt as the only means of preserving the unity. The resolution proposed by Dr. B. H. Carroll, of Texas, whereby the convention shall dissolve the bond of connection between that body and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

The following extracts from a letter from his nephew, who is at Chickamauga, is printed by permission of Mr. S. L. Edwards, of Walton:

"We are all well and drilling about five hours a day. It is mostly a skirmish drill. Each corporal has his squad of seven men, and commands them. The officers seem to think that will be the mode of fighting—to take advantage of all protecting rocks and trees. I like to drill and am learning very fast. Some will never learn.

Everything goes like clock work—reveille at six a. m., then roll call; drill from 7 till half past nine; drill from 3 till 5½ p. m.; dress parade at 6, when the whole battalion is in line. So we are kept very busy all day. All lights must be out at taps.

We received our uniforms about four days ago and have all of our equipments except the guns. We have those small tents they call dog tents—two men to a tent, and carry them on the march. The captain called me up the other day and appointed me to assist in the hospital core. I stay in the ranks and drill, but take lessons in binding wounds and stopping the flow of blood. I think it will be beneficial, but I will not hold it long.

I don't think we will stay here very long as Colonel Grant, I understand he is a general now, is trying very hard to have the Second Ky. transferred to his division. If so we will go to Manila. That would just suit me."

The Doctor thinks he has them all removed and Fred will get along all right.

A certain individual of this vicinity, who poses as a practical chimney builder and an originator of fancy tops, was somewhat set back the other day when he had finished one of his latest patterns, to have the house dog (one of the pot-licking hound species) to spy it and mistaking it for some kind of an animal, set up a terrible fuss, refusing to be comforted. The chimney builder remarked that the dog acted like it had no sense.

HEALTHFUL AMUSEMENT

It is Essential to the Making of a Healthful Christian.

It is Not the True Spirit of the Church to Be Cadaverous Instead of Invigorating.

Sermon by Rev. T. De. Witt Talmage, D.D.

From an unusual standpoint Dr. Talmage in this discourse discusses amusements and applies tests by which they may be known as good or bad. The text is Judges xvi., 25: "And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, 'call for Samson, that he may make us sport.' And they called for samson out of the prison house; and he made them sport."

There were 3,000 people assembled in the temple of Dagon. They had come to make sport of eyeless samson. They were all ready for the entertainment. They began to clap and pound, impatient for the amusement to begin, and they cried, "Fetch him out! Fetch him out!" Yonder I see the blind old giant coming, led by the hand of a child into the very midst of the temple. At his first appearance there goes up a shout of laughter and derision. The blind old giant pretends he is tired and wants to rest himself against the pillars of the house, so he says to the lad who leads him, "Bring me where the main pillars are." The lad does so. Then the strong man put his hands on one of the pillars, and, with the mightiest push that mortal ever made, throws himself forward until the whole house comes down in thunderous crash, grinding the audience like grapes in a wine press. "And so it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for samson out of the prison house; and he made them sport." In other words, there are amusements that are destructive and bring down disaster and death upon the heads of those who practice them. While they laugh and cheer, they sin. The three thousand who perished that day in Gaza are nothing compared with the tens of thousands who have been destroyed, body, mind and soul, by bad amusements and by good amusements carried to excess.

In my sermons you must have noticed that I have no sympathy with ecclesiastical strutlijackets, or with that wholesale denunciation of amusements to which many are pledged. I believe the church of to-day has made a tremendous mistake in trying to suppress the sportfulness of youth and thrust out from men their love of amusement. If God ever implanted anything in us He implanted this desire. But instead of providing for this demand of our nature the church of God has for the main part ignored it. As in a riot the mayor plants a battery at the end of the street and has it fired off, so that everything is cut down that happens to stand in the range, the good as well as the bad, so there are men in the church who plant their batteries of condemnation and fire away indiscriminately. Everything is condemned. They talk as if they would like to have our youth dress in blue uniform, like the children of an orphan asylum, and march down the path of life to the time of the "Dead March" in Saul. They hate a blue sash, or a rosebud in the hair, or a tasseled gaiter, and think a man almost fatally for the lunatic asylum who attempts a somersault.

Young Men's Christian associations of the country are doing a glorious work. They have fine reading rooms, and all the influences are of the best kind, and are now adding gymnasiums and bowling alleys where, without any evil surroundings, our young men may get physical as well as spiritual improvement. We are tending away to a narrow-chested, weak-armed, feeble-voiced race, when God calls us to a work in which He wants physical as well as spiritual athletes. I would to God that the time might soon come when all our colleges and theological seminaries, as at Princeton, a gymnasium shall be established. We spend seven years of hard study in preparation for the ministry, and come out with bronchitis and dyspepsia, and liver complaint, and then crawl up into the pulpit, and the people say, "Doesn't he look heavenly?" because he looks sickly. Let the church of God direct, rather than attempt to suppress, the desire for amusement. The best men that the world ever knew have had their sports. William Wilberforce trundled a hoop with his children. Martin Luther helped dress the Christmas tree. Ministers have pitched quoits, philanthropists have gone skating. Prime ministers have played ball.

Our communities are filled with men and women who starve in their souls immeasurably for resources in sportfulness and fraternity. Show me a man who never lights up with sportfulness and has no sympathy with the recreations of others, and I will show you a man who is a stumbling block to the Kingdom of God. Such men are caricatures of religion.

They lead young people to think that a man is good in proportion as he groans and frowns and looks sallow, and that the height of a man's Christian stature is in proportion to the length of his face. I would trade off 500 such men for one bright-faced, radiant Christian on whose face are the words, "Rejoice evermore!" Every morning by his cheerful face he preaches 50 sermons. I will go further and say that I have no confidence in a man who makes a religion of his gloomy looks. That kind of a man always turns out badly. I would not want him for the treasurer of an orphan asylum. The orphans would suffer.

Among 40 people whom I received into the church at one communion, there was only one applicant of whose piety I was suspicious. He had the longest story to tell; had seen the most visions, and gave an experience so wonderful that all the other applicants were discouraged. I was not surprised the year after to learn that he had run off with the funds of the bank with which he was connected. Who is this black angel that you call religion—wings black, feet black, feathers black? Our religion is a bright angel—feet bright, eyes bright, wings bright, taking her place in the soul. She pulls a rope that reaches to the skies and sets all the bells of Heaven a-chiming. There are some persons who, when talking to a minister, always feel it politic to look lugubrious. Go forth, O people, to your lawful amusement. God means you to be happy. But, when there are so many sources of innocent pleasure, why hamper with anything that is dangerous and polluting? Why stop our ears to a Heaven full of songsters to the hiss of dragon? Why turn back from the mountain side all abloom with wild flowers and adash with the nimble torrents, and with blistered feet attempt to climb the hot sides of Cotopaxi?

Now, all opera houses, theaters, bowling alleys, skating rinks and all styles of amusement, good and bad, I put on trial to-day and judge of them for certain cardinal principals. First, you may judge of any amusement by its healthful result or by its baneful reaction. There are people who seem made up of hard facts. They are a combination of multiplication tables and statistics. If you show them an exquisite picture they will begin to discuss the pigments involved in the coloring; if you show them a beautiful rose they will submit it to a botanical analysis, which is only the post-mortem examination of a flower. They never do anything more than feebly smile. There are no great tides of feeling surging up from the depth of their soul in billow after billow of reverberating laughter. They seem as if Nature had built them by contract and made a bungling job out of it. But, blessed be God, there are people in the world who have bright faces and whose life is a song, an anthem a pæan of victory. Even their troubles are like the vines that crawl up the side of a great tower, on the top of which the sunlight sits and the soft airs of summer hold perpetual carnival. They are the people you like to have come to your house; they are the people I like to have come to my house. Now, it is these exhilarant and sympathetic and warm-hearted people that are most tempted to pernicious amusements, in proportion as a ship is swift it wants a strong helmsman; in proportion as a horse is gay it wants a strong driver; and these people of exuberant nature will do well to look at the reaction of their amusements. If an amusement sends you home at night nervous so you can not sleep, and you rise in the morning, not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from slumbers, you have been where you ought not to have been. There are amusements that send a man next day to his work moodshot, yawning, stupid, nauseated, and they are wrong kinds of amusements. There are entertainments that give a man disgust with the drudgery of life, with tools because they are not swords, with working aprons because they are not robes, with cattle because they are not infuriated bulls of the arena. If any amusement sends you home longing for a life of romance and thrilling adventure, love that takes poison and shoots itself, moonlight and torrent and harebreadth escapes, you may depend upon it that you are the sacrificed victim of unsanctified pleasure. Recreations are intended to build us up, and if they pull us down, as to our moral or our physical strength, you may come to the conclusion that they are obnoxious.

Still further: Those amusements are wrong which lead into expenditure beyond your means. Money spent in recreation is not thrown away. It is all folly for us to come from a place of amusement feeling that we have wasted our money and time. You may by it have made an investment worth more than the transaction that yielded you $100 or $1,000. But how many properties have been riddled by costly amusements? The table has been robbed to pay the club. The champagne has emptied the children's wardrobe. The carousing party has burned up the boy's primer. The table cloth of the corner saloon is in debt to the wife's faded dress. Excursions that in a day make a tour around a whole month's wages; ladies whose lifetime business it is to "go shopping" have their counterpart in inebriated children, bankruptcies that shock the money market and appall the church, and that send thunderings staggering across the ricnly figured carpet of the mansion and dashing into the mirror, and drowning out the carol of music with the whooping of blasted sons come home to break their old mother's heart. When men go into amusements that they can not afford they first borrow what they can not earn, and then they steal what they can not borrow. First they go into embarrassment and then into theft, and when a man gets as far on as that he does not stop short of the penitentiary. There is not a prison in the land where there are not victims of unsanctified amusements. How often I have had parents come to me and ask me to go and beg their boy off from the consequence of crimes that he had committed against his employer—the taking of funds out of the employer's till, or the disarrangements of the accounts! Why, he had salary enough to pay all lawful expenditure, but not enough salary to meet his sinful amusements. And again and again I have gone and implored for the young man—sometimes, alas! the petition unavailing.

How brightly the path of nare-strained amusement opens! The young man says: "Now I am off for a good time. Never mind economy; I'll get money somehow. What a fine road! What a beautiful day for a ride! Crack the whip and over the turnpike! Come, boys, all high your glasses! Drink! Long life, health, plenty of rides just like this!" Hard-working men hear the clatter of the hoofs and look up and say, "Why, I wonder where those fellows get their money from. We have to toil and drudge. They do nothing." To these gay men life is a thrill and an excitement. They stare at other people and in turn are stared at. The watch chain jingles. The cup foams. The cheeks flush, the eyes flash. The midnight hears their guffaw. They swagger. They jostle decent men off the sidewalk. They take the name of God in vain. They parody the hymn they learned at their mother's knee, and to all pictures of coming disaster they cry out, "Who cares!" and to the counsel of some Christian friend, "Who are you?" Passing along the street some night you hear a shriek in a grog shop, the rattle of a watchman's club, the rush of the police. What is the matter now? Oh, this reckless young man has been killed in a grog-shop fight. Carry him home to his father's house. Parents will come down and wash his wounds and close his eyes in death. They forgive him all he ever did, though he can not in his silence ask it. The prodigal has got home at last. Mother will go to her little garden and get the sweetest flowers and twist them into a chaplet for the silent heart of the wayward boy and push back from the bloated brow the long locks that were once her pride. And the air will be rent with the father's cry: "Oh, my son! my son, my poor son; would God I had died for thee, oh, my son, my son!"

You may judge of amusements by their effect upon physical health. The need of many good people is physical recuperation. There are Christian men who write hard things against their immortal souls when there is incompetent liver. There are Christian people who seem to think that it is a good sign to be poorly, and because Richard Baxter and Robert Hall were invalids they think that by the same sickness they may come to the same grandeur of character. I want to tell Christian people that God will hold you responsible for your invalidism if it is your own fault, and when through right exercise and prudence you might be athletic and well. The effect of the blood upon the soul you acknowledge. Put a man of mild disposition upon the animal diet of which the Indian partakes, and in a little while his blood will change its chemical propositions. It will become like unto the blood of the lion or the tiger or the bear, while his disposition will change and become fierce, cruel and unrelenting. The body has a powerful effect upon the soul. There are people whose ideas of Heaven are all shut out with clouds of tobacco smoke. There are people who dare to shatter the physical vase in which God put the jewel of eternity. There are men with great hearts and intellects in bodies worn out by their own neglects. Magnificent machinery capable of propelling a great Etruria across the Atlantic, yet fastened in a rickety North river propeller. Physical development which merely shows itself in a fabulous lifting, or in perilous rope walking, or in pugilistic encounter, excites only our contempt, but we confess to great admiration for the man who has a great soul in an athletic body, every nerve, muscle and bone of which is consecrated to right uses. Oh, it seems to me outrageous that men through neglect should allow their physical health to go down beyond repair; spending the rest of their life not in some great enterprise for God and the world, but in studying what is the best thing to take for dyspepsia. A ship which ought with all sails set and every man at his post to be carrying a rich cargo for eternity, employing all its men in stopping up leakages! When you may through some of the popular and healthful recreations of our time work off your spleen and your querulousness and one half of your physical and mental ailments, do not turn your back from such grand medicament. Again, judge of the places of amusement by the companionship into which they put you. If you belong to an organization where you have to associate with the intemperate, with the unclean, with the abandoned, however well they may be dressed, in the name of God quit it. They will despoil your nature. They will undermine your moral character. They will drop you when you are destroyed. They will not give one cent to support your children when you are dead. They will weep not one tear at your burial. They will chuckle over your damnation. But the day comes when the men who have exerted evil influence upon their fellows will be brought to judgment. Scene: the last day. Stage: the rocking earth. Enter dukes, lords, kings, beggars, clowns. No sword. No truck. No crown. For footlights, the kindling flames of a world. For orchestra, the trumpets that wake the dead. For gallery, the clouds filled with angel spectators. For applause, the clapping floods of the sea. For curtains, the heavens rolled together as a scroll. For tragedy, the doomed of the destroyed. For farce, the effort to serve the world and God at the same time. For the last scene of the fifth act, the tramp of nations across the stage—some to the right, others to the left.

Again, any amusement that gives you a distaste for domestic life is bad. How many bright domestic circles have been broken up by sinful amusements? The father went off, the mother went off, the child went off. There are all around us the fragments of blasted households. Oh! if you have wandered away, I would like to charm you back by the sound of that one word, "Home." Do you know that you have but little more time to give to domestic welfare? Do you not see, father, that your children are soon to go out into the world, and all the influence for good you are to have over them you must have now? Death will break in on your conjugal relations, and, alas! if you have to stand over the grave of one who perished from your neglect

HE LAUGHED FIRST.

Jopkins had read somewhere that if a woman got hold of a newspaper with a clipping cut out of it she would never rest until she had procured a complete paper and read the missing item. This struck Jopkins as a very shrewd and Machiavelian plan of exposing this well-known weakness of lovely woman, and he resolved to put it into practice.

So that night when he went home from the office there ostentatiously protruded from his coat pocket the day's paper, from which he had neatly cut a paragraph referring to the rings of Jupiter or some such matter.

He threw the paper to one side in a careless way, and after supper he noted with an unholy glee that Mrs. Jopkins had secured it and was running her eye over the bargain ads. and working her way, after the manner of her sex, through the personals, marriage notices and back to the telegraphic dispatches.

Presently Jopkins observed a sudden and suspicious frown overcast her face. She had come upon the hiatus made by the waggish penknife. Jopkins reveled with internal hilarity, but preserved an outward appearance of innocent unconsciousness.

"My dear," said Mrs. Jopkins, laying the paper gently aside, "I'm going to run over to Mrs. Hopkius' a minute. I won't be gone long."

She went over to the opposite neighbor's, and while she was gone Jopkins had lots of fun. She came back presently and Jopkins noticed she carried another paper under her shawl. She went upstairs and Jopkins leaned back in his chair and shook all over with joy.

"Best joke I ever got off," he said to himself. "Won't she be sold when I tell her!"

Mrs. Jopkins remained upstairs about 20 minutes, and when she came down she had on her hat and street dress, and Jopkins felt his knees shake when he looked into her eye.

"Where are you going?" he asked.

"Where am I going?" said his wife. "You want to know where I am going, you deceitful, disreputable, underhanded, depraved, villainous, brutal, wicked, unprincipled, scandalous, abandoned monster! I'm going home to my father."

"Wha—what's the matter?" said Jopkins.

"Look at that!" said Mrs. Jopkins, thrusting the paper in his face. "Cut it out to hide it from me, did you? To think that I should ever have married such a ruffian!"

Jopkins looked where her finger pointed and read:

"After the performance of 'The Devil's Auction' last night quite a recherche little supper was given to the leading lady actresses by a few of their admirers. A prominent merchant, whose name we withhold, is said to have cut up some rather high jinks on the occasion. We wonder if his estimable and charming wife knew of his whereabouts?"

A cold shiver ran over Jopkins. He was innocent, but he had neglected to read the other side of the clipping when he cut it out. He began to explain, and the milkman says he was still at it when he called with his regular morning supply of chemicals.

As Mrs. Jopkins was seen a week later wearing an elegnat new silk dress, to say nothing of "a dremn of a bonnet," it is presumed that the matter was satisfactorily arranged.—Tit-Bits.

THE MAD DOG BUGABOO.

Scientists Insist That There Is No Such Thing as "Hydrophobia"—Women Needlessly Alarmed.

What the newspapers so essentially report as cases of "hydrophobia" are, in reality, nothing more nor less than instances of people who have been bitten by dogs and frightened into hysterical conditions in which they involuntarily reproduce all the supposed symptoms of "hydrophobia." It is a pity that our newspaper editors cannot have a more careful regard for the feelings of women during the summer months and agree to suppress the reports of cases supposed to be "hydrophobia." They make the public mind nervous, and do more to spread the silly notion of a belief in "hydrophobia" than anything else. Women have had their feelings played upon long enough by this foolish notion of "hydrophobia," and enough unnecessary suffering has been inflicted upon the dog, who is often killed for nothing but a popular fallacy. It is high time that commonsense should rule; that we should believe the fact that there is no such thing as "hydrophobia," and rid ourselves of this bugaboo of the mad dog.—Edward W. Bok, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Consumption Among Soldiers.

According to the recent government statistics, the French army is in a highly unfavorable condition from a hygienic standpoint. The general mortality of the army increases year by year. In 1895 it was 6.85 per 1,000 soldiers. Since the epidemic of 1889 each year the army goes through a similar epidemic. Large number of soldiers die from lung troubles, the rate steadily rising. This condition is attributed to the unsanitary condition of the barracks, the habit of drinking absinthe and the smoking of cigarettes, all of which have a tendency to produce consumption, although the soldiers live in the open air and have plenty of exercise.—Philadelphia Record.

Spiders on Telegraph Lines.

Spiders are tangling up the Japanese telegraph lines. They start their webs on the wires, and are so numerous as to cause a serious loss of insulation. Sweeping the webs off does little good, as the spiders begin all over again.—Chicago Times Herald.

PROSPERITY FOR FARMERS.

The Republican Policy of Protection Is Hostile to American Producers.

"Farmers will vote with 'prosperity's party,'" says a prominent republican organ. Prosperity, according to the republican statesman upon whose observations it bases its remark, is all due to the republican party. To speak more exactly, the organs and the politicians think they can make the farmers believe that and thus induce them to vote for the republican candidates.

The Chronicle is inclined to entertain a higher opinion of the intelligence of American farmers. It is inclined to think that they know the difference between polities and weather so far as not to accept the theory of the republicans that good crops in the United States and scant crops elsewhere last year were caused by ballot boxing in this country alone in 1896.

Farmers can read, generally speaking, and in the same newspapers which tell them that they are indebted to the republican party for prosperity they will read about the enormous exports of last year's crops and the high prices obtained from foreigners for their produce.

The very organ which declares that the farmers will vote with 'prosperity's party" contains the statement, based on official reports, that agricultural exports for the fiscal year ending with this month "will be considerably in excess of $800,000,000, the total for the year being likely to reach $835,000,000. Never before have the exports of agricultural products reached the $800,000,000 line and never but twice have they been as much as $700,000,000"—in 1881 and 1892.

When the farmers read this very likely they will fail to perceive any relation between the election of a republican president and congress in 1896 and the abundant crops in the United States in 1897 and the extraordinary foreign demand for them in 1897 and 1898.

They will not be able to see that the casting of more votes for McKinley than for Bryan in 1896 caused our agricultural exports to be $150,000,000 greater in value this fiscal year than they were last and $250,000,000 greater than in 1895. They will fail to discover a causative relation between an American election in 1896 and extraordinary exports of American produce at high prices in 1897 and 1898. Failing in that they will be very likely to conclude that the republican politicians and their organs are arrant humbugs. They are likely to conclude that men who claim that their political policy is the cause of abundant crops at home and short crops abroad and high prices for agricultural products the world over are not deserving of confidence.

If the farmers will consider the matter they will perceive that the attitude of the republican party toward foreign trade is strongly hostile to the interests of farmers. Whatever restricts imports also tends to restrict exports. And a tax on imports necessarily prevents the producer of an article of export from obtaining the full value of his products. The republican duties on woolens, averaging more than 100 per cent., make it impossible for the farmer to get half the quantity of woolen goods for 100 bushels of wheat that he could get if such goods were admitted duty free. And the like is true of other dutiable goods.

When the farmer sees that his produce may be sold abroad to the value of $800,000,000 a year and that the republican tariff prevents him from getting more than 70 per cent. of the foreign goods in exchange for his produce that he could get under free trade he will understand that the republican party, so far from promoting his prosperity, is taking from his pockets $240,000,000 a year on his exported products, not to speak of the larger amounts it takes for the benefit of protectees when he exchanges his produce for protected home-made goods. He will see that, while the politicians cannot give him good crops, they can rob him of much of the fruits of his crop.—Chicago Chronicle.

OPINIONS AND POINTERS.

—The real "lesson" of the Oregon election undoubtedly is that none of the republicans up there have left home and joined the army.—St. Louis Republic.

—Mark Hanna is also in favor of laying aside sectional disputes and letting every section dispose of its United States senatorships to suit itself.—Albany Argus.

—Speaker Reed is still occasionally alluded to as the man who is likely to make trouble for President McKinley. The war, though, has had a tendency to clip the wings of the czar's consequence.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—The republicans of the senate, aided by five or six alleged democrats, have fastened upon the country an additional bonded interest-bearing indebtedness of $300,000,000, as an unnecessary n bonded debt as was ever forced upon a people.—Illinois State Register.

—Bonds for the capitalist, tariff for the trusts, protection for the monopolies, immunity from taxation for the incomes of the rich, war prices for bread and meat and clothing, peace prices for the products of the farm. What a beautiful system of government.—Louisville Dispatch.

—The coinage of the silver bullion in the treasury, commonly called seignorage, was the tub thrown to a few free silver senators to induce them to vote for the bond issue. These and five or six recreant democrats furnished the Mellannaites the needed votes to secure the adoption of the interest-bearing bond provision of the war revenue bill. The people of the country who are thus placed in further bondage to the shylocks, will hereafter overwhelm with their wrath the men who forged their shackles.—Illinois State Register.

THE NEW BOND BILL.

One of the Worst Measures of Class Legislation That Was Ever Drawn.

The passage of the bond issue bill through the senate draws the lines of our politics for the next quarter of a century. That the bill was dictated from London, there is no doubt. Its importance in international history is so great that the Spanish war is trivial in comparison.

As a measure for the collection of war revenues, the bill is one of the worst measures of class legislation ever drawn. The democrats and populists in the senate attempted to force amendments, lessening its discriminations against the masses of the people, but owing to the fact that Messrs. Gorman, Caffery, Lindsay, McEnery, Mitchell, Murphy and Turpie, elected as democrats, are controlled by the sugar trust, the whisky trust, the trunk line pool, the Rothschild bond syndicate and similar combinations, the trust and corporation forces under Hanna were enabled to do as they pleased. What it pleased them to do was this:

1. They voted down all amendments taxing incomes under which plutocratic campaign fund contributors would have been compelled to contribute to the expense of the war.

2. They voted against all propositions to avoid bond issues by using silver bullion on hand.

3. They voted down all amendments imposing war taxes on trusts and other combinations formed in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

4. They voted down all propositions to issue non-interest-bearing treasury notes instead of interest-bearing bonds—this regardless of whether such notes were made legal tender or not.

5. They voted clearly and unmistakably to make everything else in the bill itself, in the conduct of the war and in the domestic policies of the country subservient to the interests of the international bankers, who demand the issue of more bonds and the indefinite continuance of the debt already existing.

As our politics have been carried on, any party taking in a national campaign the attitude now openly assumed by the republican party under Hanna's leadership, could not have carried a state south of Pennsylvania and west of New York. Perhaps the Spanish war, Hanna's leadership and our new "world politics" of cooperation with London bond syndicates will change all this. It remains to be seen. What can be seen already is that in one way and another—in every way in fact—the bill draws the lines for a great political revolution. Either the plutocracy under Hanna will be wiped out as the federalists were under Adams, or the United States will cease to be an independent republic of equal and self governing states, and will become an empire with Baron Rothschild as its Cæsar and London as the real seat of its government.—Mississippi Valley Democrat.

RANK IDIOCY.

Republicans Display Their Stupidity and Selfishness at a Critical Time.

Republican newspapers that are roaring about the partisan attitude of democrats on the war revenue bill are also demanding that "monetary reform" be pushed in congress.

Stupidity and selfishness could not go further than this. The men who urge the currency measure know that it cannot pass the senate. They know that such a bill would arouse bitter opposition in both houses. They know that nothing could more surely provoke political division, and yet they urge that this bill be taken up and passed by the house.

What is the object of such a proposition? Simply the desire of crazy fanatics to push the currency question into prominence. Good political sense on the part of administration newspapers would prompt them to keep the money question in the background. If the republicans gain any sort of standing before the people it must be from a vigorous prosecution of the war.

But the republicans are not prosecuting the war with vigor, and it is alleged that they will not prosecute it vigorously until after congress has voted to issue bonds.

To sink political differences and to unite in a patriotic support of the president in the war against Spain means from a republican point of view, sacrifices by democrats and a grab at every possible political advantage by republicans. But that sort of thing won't work.—Chicago Dispatch.

Trusts in Power.

With absolute unanimity the republican senators have voted to tax the people and not to tax the trusts. Solid as a Roman phalanx the republicans presented an unbroken front to the democratic attempts at reaching the hoarded millions of the plutocrats. Taxes on the necessities of life were favored by the republicans. The poor man's luxuries were gladly placed on the tax list by these patriotic and noble-minded gentlemen. When a tax on corporations was suggested a howl of indignant protest was raised and the proposition was promptly voted down. When the republicans could not argue they descended to ridicule and pretended to see something extremely funny in the idea of taxing trusts. That is just the way the aristocrats treated the demands of the people before the French revolution inaugurated a reign of terror. There will be no reign of terror in the United States, but, thanks to the intelligence of the common people, there will cease to exist the reign of trust.

—Boss Hanna failed to ram the odious Demas down the throats of his senatorial associates, but he is succeeding to his heart's content in punishing Louisianians for voting against McKinley by investing Demas with the power to oppress them.—St. Louis Republic.

GLAL SHE DIDN'T YELL.

When She Found Out That Her Industrious Neighbor Was Not Committing Suicide.

A certain East end man delights in doing odd jobs about his home. He cuts his grass and trims the walks, and handles a paint brush like an old master. Carpenter tools come handy to him, too, and the sound of his merry saw makes pleasant music for the neighbors, who have no objection to being awakened early. In short, he is a clever all-round workman, and decidedly handy to have about that house.

One day not long ago the woman of the house next door happened to come out on her back porch. There she casually looked over the low fence into the back yard of the man's yard. What she saw scared her so that she couldn't move hand or foot. The handy man was lying prone on his back, his body concealed beneath his porch, but with his face in strong relief. He was very pale, his hair was disordered, and his eyes were rolled up and fixed in a ghastly intentness. Against his breast he seemed to be pressing some deadly weapon that glistened as a ray of light touched it.

The woman on the porch tried to scream, and couldn't. She knew the handy man was committing suicide.

He panted, his face grew red, and his form seemed convulsed.

The woman on the porch caught her agonized breath and was about to let out a 40 horse power yell when she heard the supposed suicide anxiously ask:

"Isn't it through yet?"

"Yes," said a voice from above, "it been yonst through."

About this time the woman on the porch understood that the handy man was boring an auger hole through the floor of his porch, that the deadly weapon was an auger, and that the hired girl was on hand to watch the operation.

Then the woman on the porch was glad she didn't yell.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A FATALITY AVOIDED.

From the Democrat, Goshen, Ind.

When neuralgia is accompanied by a dull, heavy pain near the heart, frequently becoming intense, it generally culminates fatally. Mrs. Nancy Flynn, who lives near Goshen, Indiana, survived such an attack and her case is worth heeding.

"In the fall of '92," she said, "I began to have trouble with my heart. There was a sharp pain in my breast which became rapidly worse. The doctor was puzzled and put me under the influence of opiates. These sharp attacks followed one another at intervals and I became weak and had a haggard look. I suffered constantly in pain, seldom slept and had no appetite.

"At the end of two years I was confined to my couch most of the time and the doctors agreed that my death was only a matter of a short time.

A Serious Time.

"One day I noticed in a newspaper an item about a woman having been cured of neuralgia of the heart by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and concluded to try them.

"When I had finished one box I noticed an improvement in my condition, and when I had taken twelve boxes I was completely cured. Those pills have done for you what we could not do, and one of my physicians, they have saved your life."

"That was two years ago and my heart has not troubled me since. I believe I owe my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I take pleasure in telling others about them."

Among the many forms of neuralgia are headache, nervousness, paralysis, apoplexy and locomotor ataxia. Some of these were considered incurable until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People were formulated. To-day thousands testify to having been cured of such diseases by these pills.

Doctors frequently prescribe them and all druggists sell them.

SQUIRE JONES' ECONOMY.

He Raised His Own Tobacco and First Chewed and Then Smoked It.

"The most economical person I ever knew," remarked a West side barber as he turned from a patient customer whom he had been torturing with his wise remarks for half an hour to strop his razor, "was an old lady who always declared that she hated to see anything wasted, even the affections."

"Did you know old Nancy Dance?" cried the hitherto speechless customer, rising to a full sitting posture. "Must remember her husband, old Squire Jones."

"Can't say that I do," replied the barber, who, like all his craft, was a wise man and feared a trap of some sort.

"He went the old woman one or two better," continued the customer; "not in words, for he hadn't the gift of gab like some in this city, but in actions, being closer than a twin brother."

"What did he do that indicated greater economy than the sentiment expressed by his wife?" asked the barber, who had recovered his self-possession.

"He was a fearful chewer and used to raise his own tobacco. After he'd got what strength he could out of his quids he would lay them on a shelf and smoke them in a cob pipe of his own manufacture when they got dry."

"He got it all," said the barber.

"He did, but not when he finished smoking. Why, that old fellow used to snuff the ashes. You needn't use any bay rum if it costs five cents extra."—Chicago Chronicle.

Blood-Cleansing.

House-cleaning is a duty in every well-regulated household. People don't wait until the filth becomes pain ally apparent, but it stands to reason that in every day use more or less dust or dirt accumulate. It is so with the human blood. From the enormous variety of eatables taken into the stomach, a quantity of useless material is bound to accumulate in the blood and clog the free and wholesome flow in the vessels. Every person should from time to time have a "blood-cleaning" and the best cleanser and blood purifier is Cascarets Candy Cathartic. We recommend them to all our readers.

"Why to you?"

"Well, aren't you a 'nigger?'"

"Yes, sah; dat's jest it!"—Truth.

FARM AND GARDEN

FARM WATER SUPPLY.

Why the Wall of the Well Should Be Substantially and Carefully Backed with Gravel.

If when the well is first built the wall, although of stone, brick or sewer pipe, is properly backed with gravel no mud or sand will come into the well, no cavern will be formed and no "clearing out" will be required.

I have made a drawing to illustrate this. It is a section through the bottom of the well. On the right-hand side the wall is shown backed with gravel as it should be, the earth beyond standing intact. The left-hand side shows the result where the inevitable spaces behind the wall were not so filled when the well was built. The dark shading to the left is a section through the soft slime in the bottom of the cavern; the cavern above being shown in something the shape it will take where the water is very shallow, as it is in many old wells.

SECTION OF WELL WALL.

Of course we do not find the walls regular and in courses, as in the drawing, but shapeless, or in all shapes. The top of the wall is shown ready to serve as the foundation of a tube of concrete, to be built to near the top, where also cemented brickwork begins which is to make it watertight. "Jung-proof" joint with the floor and well-curb of the well-room. Of course this brickwork must come up through the floor, and the joint must be on this side, and not on top of it, because the wall will settle.

The hanging platform, and the adjustable form behind which the concrete is filled in, would require a separate article with illustrations. But I consider concrete much the best as well as cheapest wall, chiefly because it is as easily built 2½ or 3 feet in the clear as smaller; thus giving ample room to let down inside tubing and do the work in case it should become necessary to sink the well deeper.

The practical limit of size for a sewer-pipe well is about two feet in the clear, but even that is too small to work in with comfort. But sewer-pipe seems such an ideal wall that it will be extensively used, anyway. In that case the well should be dug two or three feet deeper after 1 e average well digger says "it is plenty deep enough," even if a pump has to be rigged to keep out the water. Then it should be enlarged for gravel, the bottom pipe rested and plumbed on three brickbats, chiefly behind with the washed gravel to above high water, and the bottom of the well covered with gravel to a couple of inches above the bottom of the sewer-pipe. This gives free circulation between the water in the gravel behind and that in the well, but no trace of mud can enter.

One thing more and the bottom of the well is complete. Make the space wide enough behind the next sewer-pipe above high water to back it solid with concrete, made, say, of Akron water lime and gravel poured in behind and, if need be, broken stone tamped into it. This protects the gravel and water behind from any rats or vermin that might burrow into the cavity behind the sewer-pipe above.

The sinking of the bottom sewer-pipe through quicksand, by shrinking on to the bottom end a hoop, say of heavy galvanized iron, with the cutting edge projecting a couple of inches below; and the mode of standing on a strip of hard wood laid across and of cutting away and dipping out from under water the sand, clay, etc., and the mode of making the pipe go down plumb by striking the high side, on said wooden strip, with a heavy "jar" can only be indicated here. In the case of old wells where the wall cannot be disturbed with safety, I generally sink deeper by this method.—J. W. Pike, in Ohio Farmer.

ALL AROUND THE FARM.

We know a man who has broken implements enough in cultivating stumpy ground to buy two stump pullers.

Somebody calls attention to the fact that crooked furrows make more distance in plowing. It is a little thing, but the little things count.

We saw the other day a large herd of cattle on a newly-started pasture, on wet ground. Bad management both for the cattle and the pasture.

It is a good deal cheaper to prevent disease in stock than it is to cure it, and to prevent the attacks of insects than it is to remedy their depredations.

We have seen men plow right through a spot of quicksand, miring the team, straining it and endangering the harness. It is foolish. Take time to go round the worthless spot.

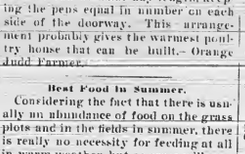
It is not what our fathers did, but what we are doing that counts. A good many do not have the respect for our fathers that we do, and have adopted better methods, and we are being beaten in the race.—Western Plowman.

BUSY BUMBLE-BEES.

The Part Which These Busy Little Workers Play in the Fertilization of Many Flowers.

Barney Hoskin Standish writes an article on "The Bumble-Bee" for St. Nicholas. Mr. Standish says: The work of the bumble-bee in bringing about the cross-fertilization of flowers is as important as that of the honey-bee, and these two stand at the head of the list of insects useful in this respect. Each has its flowers which it alone visits, but there are many flowers on neutral ground, visited by both. So we may say of the bumble-bee, as of the honey-bee, the more bumble-bee the more seeds; the more seeds the more flowers —especially wild flowers, as the tall bell-flower, touch-me-not, Solomon's-seal, gentian, Dutchmen's-breeches and turtle-head. But probably the most important work this insect does for agriculture is upon the fields of red clover. There is abundant proof that this plant will not produce seed without the cooperation of the bumble-bee. It is impossible for the wind to bring about the fertilization of the seed, as it may do in the case of Indian corn, grain and some forest trees. The tube of red-clover blossoms, too, is so long that other insects (including the honey-bee) are not regular visitants.

Here is proof that this plant must have visits from the bumble-bee. This insect is not a native of Australia, and red clover failed to produce seed there until bumble-bees were imported. As soon as they became numerous the plant could be depended upon for seed. Again, the blossoms of the first crop of the "medium red clover" of our own country are just as perfect as those of the second crop, but there are too few bumble-bees in the field, so early in the season, to produce fertilization; hence little or no seed in this crop. If bumble-bees were sufficiently numerous there is no reason why much larger yields of clover seed might not be expected than at present.



Here is what a well-informed farmer says about it:

"It was formerly thought that the world rested on the shoulders of Atlas. I can prove that its prosperity rests on the bumble-bee. The world cannot prosper without the farmers' product. The farm will not be productive without clover. We cannot raise clover without seed, and we cannot have clover-seed without the bumble-bee, because it is this insect that carries the pollen from flower to flower, securing its development and continuance. Let us learn to know and to protect our friends."

BANK POULTRY HOUSE.

A New Idea That Probably Gives the Most Comfortable Quarters That Can Be Built.

The poultry house shown herewith is built into a bank and faces south. The wall up to the surface is of rough stone. There is no door at the east end to let in the cold, the door being on the south, where the roof is cut as for a dormer window. One enters and passes through to the back side of the house, where there is a walk behind the pens. Such a house can be made any length, keeping the pens equal in number on each side of the doorway. This arrangement probably gives the warmest poultry house that can be built.—Orange Judd Farmer.

BANK POULTRY HOUSE.

Best Food in Summer.

Considering the fact that there is usually an abundance of food on the grass plots and in the fields in summer, there is really no necessity for feeding at all in warm weather, but as some will prefer to allow food, the best substance is raw meat, using only that which is lean, giving none of the fat portions. The meat must be fresh, or it will prove injurious, and the cheaper kinds, such as the neck, liver and other undesirable portions, will serve the purpose as well as the best. Blood is excellent, as it may be mixed with corn meal and cooked in a bag. It is highly nitrogenous, and gives excellent results. Grain is not necessary in summer, as the hens find substitutes therefor in the form of seeds.—American Gardening.

Care of Turkey Chicks.

Little turkeys need no food for the first 24 hours, and then should be fed something light and nutritious. They require considerable care for the first eight or ten weeks. Some growers confine the hen turkey in a movable slat crate the first few days and allow the little ones full liberty. Others instead of confining the hen, tie one of her feet to a peg driven in the ground. Another plan, quite generally followed, is to put the little turkeys inside a large triangular pen and give the hen her liberty. The pen is moved frequently to fresh ground. When the little ones can jump over the 12-inch board they wander at full liberty with the hen.—Rural World.

The Best Paying Ducks.

The pure breeds of ducks are kept more profitably than the puddle-ducks, as they can be made to thrive without providing ponds. The breeds best known and which are the most popular are the Pekin, Aylesbury, Rouen and Cayuga, the first two breeds being white in color, the Cayuga being black, while the Rouen has a plumage of several colors. These breeds grow to a large size, and individual specimens have reached ten pounds in weight. As they grow rapidly they reach the market at an early age.

PLUGGING THE PIANO.

Mr. Gozzleby Finds Temporary Relief from the Heavy Pedal by Simple Means.

"It is a familiar fact," said Mr. Gozzleby, "or it is a fact at least familiar to all fond parents, that children, without exception, like to play the piano with the hard pedal on all the time. All children like to make all the noise they can, in playing the piano as in everything else. Playing upon the piano without the heavy pedal does not disturb me at all; but the minute the heavy pedal is put on I am greatly disturbed, and the continued resounding of the notes fairly racks me.

"Of course, I can't be forever saying 'don't, and it's ungracious to say it at all, I suppose, for why shouldn't the children have their fun? And so I hit upon the desperate expedient of blocking the heavy pedal. I have whittled out a nice little piece of soft white pine into a plug that just fits into the space under the pedal in the opening in which it works, so that the pedal cannot be depressed.

"It has only been there two days now, but it has been two days of blessed relief. It can't last much longer, because the children are liable to ask me any minute what's the matter—I wonder they haven't asked me long ago—and of course I'll have to tell 'em, but I am grateful for the rest I have had, and the respite has given me strength the better to withstand, for a time at least, the uproar that will surely come when the children discover the plug."—N. Y. Sun.

THE ILLS OF WOMEN

And How Mrs. Pinkham Helps Overcome Them.

Mrs. MARY BOLLINGER, 1101 Marianna St., Chicago, Ill., to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I have been troubled for the past two years with falling of the womb, leucorrhœa, pains over my body, sick headaches, backache, nervousness and weakness. I tried doctors and various remedies without relief. After taking two bottles of your Vegetable Compound, the relief I obtained was truly wonderful. I have now taken several more bottles of your famous medicine, and can say that I am entirely cured."

Mrs. HENRY DORR, No. 806 Findley St., Cincinnati, Ohio, to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For a long time I suffered with chronic inflammation of the womb, pain in abdomen and bearing-down feeling. Was very nervous at times, and so weak I was hardly able to do anything. Was subject to headaches, also troubled with leucorrhœa. After doctoring for many months with different physicians, and getting no relief, I had given up all hope of being well again when I read of the great good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing. I decided immediately to give it a trial. The result was simply past belief. After taking four bottles of Vegetable Compound and using three packages of Sanative Wash I can say I feel like a new woman. I deem it my duty to announce the fact to my fellow sufferers that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable remedies have entirely cured me of all my pains and suffering. I have her alone to thank for my recovery, for which I am grateful. May heaven bless her for the good work she is doing for our sex."

Can Our Coast Be Effectually Blockaded?

If confidence can be felt in the opinion of military and naval officers in high places at the seat of government, such is the vast extent of our sea coast to blockade it effectually, even if our navy and sea coast defences could offer no adequate resistance, seems to be impossible. When a blockade of the bowels exists, relieve constipation with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which conquers dyspepsia, malaria, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

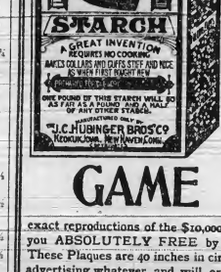
AN OLD BULLY.

People who live in fear of his attacks.

How to avoid him or beat him off.



If biliousness isn't the bully of the body then what is? When one biliousness gets the upper hand you don't dare say your stomach is your own. "Don't you dare eat that dish says biliousness, or you'll see what I'll do." You take the dare and you do see or rather feel, the weight of the bully's revenge. The head aches, not a regular ache, but an open and shut ache. The eyes ache, not with a dull, tired ache, but with an aggressive ache, as if they were being bored by a gimlet. The stomach trembles with nausea. "The whole head is sick and the whole heart is faint." There are scores of hundreds of people who live so under the dominion of this bully biliousness that they don't dare eat or drink without his permission. There's no need of such slavery. Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills cure effectually cure biliousness.

"For fifteen years I have used Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills, and find them very effective in all kinds of bilious complaints. They are mild in operation and easy to take. I prefer them to any other pill, and have sent to me the case where they have failed to cure."—A. SWANGER, Texarkana, Ark.

"I have used Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills in cases of biliousness and general disorders of the stomach and bowels and have found them to be always reliable. They are less liable to gripe than other purgatives, and although mild in action, they are thorough in operation."—PETER J. DUFFY, Rockport, Texas.

"Having used Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills for years and thoroughly tested them, both as a preventive and cure for biliousness, I can truthfully say that I believe them to be the best medicine for the purpose and they do all that is claimed for them."—JNO. BO KOLB, Shark, Ark.

Biliousness is in general but a symptom of a more stubborn disorder, constipation. Constipation is the root of almost all physical evils, and Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills cure almost all these physical evils by going to the root. They cure constipation, and the consequent maladies, biliousness, heartburn, palpitation, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, foul breath, coated tongue, and a score of other miserable maladies that have their origin in constipation. Dr. Ayer's Pills are the surest and safest remedy for all diseases of the liver, stomach, and bowels. Send for Dr. Ayer's Curebook, and read the story of cures told by the cured. Free. Address the J. WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please state that you saw the Advertisement in this paper.

THE TRUTH OF THE MATTER.

Advice to Young People Who Have Journalistic Aspirations.

I suppose the reason why experienced writers do not sound a warning note regarding the charmingly told tales of country girls going to the city and getting on the staff of some great daily paper in the twinkling of an eye, is because they all know so well that such stories are not true, and that every one also knows just how unreasonable anything of the kind must be. I was reading not long ago of a young lady who went from a little country town to New York, intending to be a "journalist" (real writers are mere workers). She did not even know the meaning of "copy," "slug," "special," "space," "stick," "string" or "spread;" nevertheless, five minutes after she entered the editor's office she was given a big "special," and the promise that if she got up a "rattling good story," she should be placed on the regular staff. Needless to say here, she had the "story" ready for the next day's paper, although it would have taken an experienced writer at least three days to gather the material together, aside from the "write-up." This lady ended by marrying the managing editor. Anything different could hardly be expected from such a remarkable person.

The truth of the matter is, it is one of the hardest things in the world to get a position on the staff of a daily paper, to say nothing of being entrusted with big "specials." Staff members are generally taken from the ranks of "space" writers, and "space" writers arrive by a route which all of us who have been there know, but which is impossible to describe to one just starting out. It is rocky and thorny, narrow and slippery, but can be got over in time, and the thing that takes you over is energy, perseverance and special aptness for the work. First, you must know news when you see it; then, you must know how to tell it. If you are a born newspaper person, you will not only know news when you see it, but you will "smell" it and work; you will work with your pen, exactly as a man works with pick and shovel. A writer never writes; he gets to work—digs in; and as for writing the things you want to, that's out of the question; you must write the things wanted.

It is very difficult to give rules or advice to young beginners. One of the best rules is to write and keep writing, on any and every subject, as it helps train the mind, always remembering that from many failures comes success. But no poor widow will ever pay off a mortgage from the proceeds of her first story, or her second one, either. Many people mistake the desire to write for natural genius. It is a great mistake, as they are not even relations, and that is one reason editors are so often misjudged, and thought hard and unfeeling.—J. L. T., in Housekeeper.

Not Killed by Electric Shocks.

"There is a lot of misapprehension about the deadly effects of a shock from a trolley wire," said Chief Electrician Whittley, of the Brooklyn Heights railroad to a reporter of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Standard Union. "Most people believe that a contact with one of these feed wires is fatal; but the fact is that, so far as known, only one person has ever been killed in this country as a direct result of contact with a trolley wire, and that was a week boy in Boston who threw another wire over the feed wire and held it taut from both ends. The fact is that 500 volts is not sufficient to kill a man in ordinary bodily health. I have received shocks of that voltage many times, and while they produce nervous shocks, have no permanent bad effects. As a matter of fact, most linemen who are killed while working on the electric roads dies from fractured skulls. The electric shock throws them from the platforms on which they work and they strike from the drop to the pavement. It takes nearly 1,000 volts to kill a man outright."

Vitality of Dragon-Flies.

The great vitality of dragon-flies is shown by McLachland, who, having struck at a large Aeschna at rest on a twig, the head was seen to tumble down, while the rest of the insect flew away in an "undecided manner" for a considerable distance. Upon picking up the head, he noticed that the insect had been eating a fly at the time. "The mandibles continued working as if nothing had happened, and the masticated portion of the fly passed out at the back of the head."

Building of Nests.

That birds build their nests by imitation has been called in question by Mr. A. G. Butler, of London, who says that the reason why many of them at the beginning of the season trifle with building material for some time before they produce a satisfactory result is that they are unable at once exactly to remember what the character of the nest was in which they first saw the light of day.

CHINA'S SALT WELLS.

Have Been Worked Twenty Centuries in the Same Old Way.

The salt wells of China are one of the most unique industries of that country, having been worked for over 2,000 years with the same apparatus and methods now in use. The wells are drilled to a depth of from 2,000 to 3,000 feet, and supply not only brine from which the salt is obtained by boiling, but also a natural gas which is burned under the pans. Over the mouth of each well stands a great derrick carrying a pulley from which descends the bamboo rope which supports the bucket.

The bucket is a large piece of bamboo, almost as high as the derrick, strengthened by having hempen cords wound around the outside, and iron rings at the two ends. The valve is a strong piece of skin opening inward. This bucket, which is not larger than two or three inches in diameter, will bring up 250 pounds of water. The end of the bucket when brought to the surface is veered over a tub in the ground near by, where it is filtered and stored in reservoirs for sale to the various boilers. Buffaloes are employed instead of horses or steam engines to lift the bucket, winding the lifting rope up on a drum. This rope is made of bamboo lines, twisted like hempen ropes and spliced with strong hide thongs.

The brine is boiled in large iron pans several inches thick, long rows of them being supplied with gas from bamboo conduits, the gas being derived from the salt wells, either those exhausted or sometimes from wells which have never produced brine, but merely gas. Some of the brine produces 25 per cent. of its weight of salt. The pan salt is evaporated until it becomes as hard as stone. Each pan turns out a cake weighing 666 pounds, which is split into four quarters, in which form it is sold. It takes a little over 24 hours to boil a panful of salt. The government buys all the salt and sells it again at an advance of several hundred per cent. These salt wells occur in but two districts, about 200 miles apart, and are family heirlooms, being handed down from generation to generation, the names of Li and Wang being the most prominent associated with them.—Atlanta Constitution.

ANOTHER HORROR.

The Car Weighed Heavily on the Darky's Head.

Without a warning of any sort the trolley car came at full speed around the corner.

There was a sudden cry of alarm from a group standing on the nearest sidewalk, and the motorman made a frantic but impotent effort to stop the car.

It was too late. There was a horrible grinding sound, and a human being disappeared beneath the wheels of the modern Juggernaut.

Who was it?

Only an aged colored man!

What was he doing in the middle of the track, anyhow?

Did he not know the street belonged to the trolley car company?

Still the car stopped at last. It was under no obligation to stop, but it stopped.

Pale with horror the passengers rose to their feet and looked back over the track.

There was nothing to be seen. Evidently the mangled and motionless victim of corporate greed was still under the car.

Hark!

From beneath came the sound of a muffled but indignant voice:

Abandonment of Sunday.

During the "Reign of Terror," 1793, the infamous decree to abandon the Christian religion in France and to substitute for it the worship of Liberty, Equality and Reason was passed. Churches were quickly despoiled of their ornaments, and civic feasts substituted for religious festivals. The convention also enacted that time, instead of being reckoned from the birth of Christ, should be reckoned from the birth of the French republic; and that the Christian Sabbath might not be observed, a day of rest being granted only at the close of every ten days. No other instance is known where the observance of one day in seven as a day of rest has been abandoned since the command for its regular observance was given to Moses on Mount Sinai. It is a singular coincidence that, by keeping this command, there is at present a perpetual Sabbath, since the Greeks observe Monday; the Persians, Tuesday; the Assyrians, Wednesday; the Egyptians, Thursday; the Turks, Friday; the Jews, Saturday, and the Christians, Sunday.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, June 18th, 1898.

If it took three weeks or more to get Gen. Shafter's army embarked at Tampa, after the men and the transports were there, how long will it take to land the army in Cuba after this much convoyed fleets of transports joins Admiral Sampson's fleet, off Santiago? This is the conumdrum of the hour, and it is by no means an easy one to answer. According to the figuring of War Department officials, the army will reach the points chosen for debarkation about Monday, and it ought not to require more than 24 hours to land the troops, but if the discrepancy between the time it ought to take and that actually taken should be as great as it was at Tampa, he is a wise man, indeed, who can tell when this army will begin operations against Santiago.

Late last week, relying upon his advices from Washington that the army had started for Cuba, Admiral Sampson captured Guantanamo Bay, where he will establish a navy supply station, and landed 600 marines to hold a position from which his shells had driven Spanish troops and where he hopes to put a cable station. For three days they successfully maintained an almost continuous night and day fight with a force of Spaniards outnumbering them five to one, but there is little doubt that these marines would have been to a man killed had they not been reinforced by a considerable body of insurgents. Thanks to the Cuban insurgents, the marines, with the exception of a few who were killed—some of the corpses being barbarously mutilated by the Spaniards—still hold the position they were sent to hold, and Sampson says can do so until the army arrives.

Some of his colleagues are disposed to poke a little fun at Senator "Billy" Mason, of Ill., because of the marked discrepancy between that portion of his speech to the Illinois Republican state convention, in which he said of the conduct of the war: "We went out to the world as a good Samaritan, and while performing the act of a good Samaritan I want no larceny on behalf of my country," and the following sentence in the platform adopted by the convention: "Resolved, that the U. S. should hold all of the possessions it has conquered and may couquer from Spain.

So many members of the party favored the annexation of Hawaii that it was deemed inadvisable to have the Democratic House caucus take any more positive action against annexation than the adoption of a resolution declaring annexation dangerous and unwise and that it reverses our traditional policy and may lead to colonial aggrandizement and ultimately to the destruction of Republican institution. The vote upon the resolution was 50 to 17, but more than fifty of the Democratic members of the House were absent from the caucus. Upon the vote by which the House adopted the resolution for the annexation of Hawaii 18 Democrats voted aye and 78 no, while a number were purposely absent. The total vote was 210 to 92.

The Senate adopted, without division, the resolution offered by Senator Lodge, instructing the committee on claims to investigate the Statement that a lobbyist had received 35 per cent. of the amount recently appropriated by Congress to pay a war claim of the book publishing house of the Southern Methodist church, but while the matter was under discussion there was some plain talk. Senator Morgan charged that the resolution was intended for political effect, and asked why it did not include an investigation of the payment to lobbyists of 50 per cent. of the $388,000 recently appropriated by Congress to pay claims of the heirs of John Roach, the shipbuilder. It was not claimed by anybody that the claim of the Southern Methodist was not a perfectly just one, but the objection was to their having employed a lobbyist to push their bill. Senator Pasco, who was instrumental in getting the bill through, stated in the course of a speech that "there is an obligation upon high church authorities to conduct an investigation of the action of some of its officials." The whole thing is a sort of a tempest in a teapot. Although Senators must know as well as anybody else that there are hundreds of attorneys in Washington whose principal employment is promoting legislation—in common parlance, lobbying—yet they invariably become excited whenever any particular case of lobbying happens to be mentioned in public. This claim, although admitted to be just, had been before Congress for more than 20 years, and in hiring an attorney to help them push it through, those interested only followed the common practice, except that they agreed to pay too much.

Nothing has yet been accomplished in behalf of those starving Cubans.

A Christian county farmer sold his 1898 crop of wheat, consisting of 600 acres, to be delivered after harvest, at $1 per bushel.

The steamer Algoa, on its last trip from San Francisco to Marseilles, carried wheat that would have filled thirty freight trains with 1,200 cars.

Many farmers are disturbed about the wheat. They say the chintz bug is becoming serious. Others, however think the insect is what is known as the midge. The midge is harmless.—Advocate.

Boss Vandiver, of White Cloud, says the reason so many hogs die of cholera is that they are fed too much corn during the winter. His hogs have not had the cholera for fifteen years, and the reason is he feeds them very little corn. If Mr. Vandiver is correct, the remedy is a very cheap one.—Harrodsburg Sayings.

FROM CARROLL COUNTY.

[News]

On Monday morning about 11 o'clock while Mrs. Hulda Spencer, of the Cove Hill neighborhood, was coming down Cove Hill, in company with Frank Johnson, the buggy ran up on the side of the gully, throwing Mrs. Spencer out. She struck the hard pike on her head and when Mr. Johnson went to her assistance he found that she was dead, her neck having been broken by the fall. Her husband, who was a brother of Levi Spencer, of Prestonville, died only a few months ago.

One day the latter part of last week Charley Washburn, aged about 20 years, son of the late Henry Washburn, of Trimble, attempted suicide by shooting himself in the chest with a pistol. The physicians say the ball penetrated the lung and is necessarily fatal. A love affair is said to be at the bottom of it.

A fine young horse belonging to John Supplee, on Notch Lick, was killed by lightning during a thunder storm last Thursday evening. It was standing under a bush at the time.

Twenty cents per hour was the regular price for tobacco setters Friday and Saturday, although many got as high as 25 cents per hour.

FROM OWEN COUNTY.

[News]

Dr. Hugh G. Smith died Thursday morning at 6:05 o'clock, after a painful illness of 17 months duration. The deceased was born in Owen county, September, 26, 1829. In 1860 he threw his sympathies with the South and enlisted with the famous Orphan Brigade, or First Kentucky. From assistant surgeon he arose to chief surgeon, an finally surrendered with the Confederate army in 1865 at some place in South Carolina.

An interesting suit was tried before Judge Hill last Monday in which there is some interesting history. Mr. Jo Blackwell, of New Liberty, lost a diamond ring. He offered a reward of $50 to Mr. Jack Hanlon for the recovery of the ring. The ring was produced and other parties claimed the reward. Blackwell paid them and Hanlon sued Blackwell. Hanlon recovered.

The terrific rains in the northern portion of the county last Thursday washed the ground very badly, although it gave the farmers a good tobacco season. The rain was so heavy that the flood of water which came down the hillsides washed rails out on the pike. Stage driver Schooler says that the water was a foot deep on the pike, it being almost impossible to keep the team on the road.

On the first day of next month the new revenue law goes into effect and then a revenue stamp will have to be put on every deed, mortgage, note, draft, and bank check. The cost of the war is reaching out for the pocket books.

Last Saturday's Post contained pictures of Drs. S. S. Scott and A. Sayre, together with a short account of their visit to Cuba, when they came near losing their lives before they escaped.

One peculiar feature abuot Admiral Sampson's silencing the Spanish forts is he always draws off, and the silenced forts renew their firing at his ships.

ALL WOMEN

Nine-tenths of all the pain and sickness from which women suffer is caused by weakness or derangement in the organs of menstruation. Nearly always when a woman is not well these organs are affected. But when they are strong and healthy a woman is very seldom sick.

Wine of Cardui

Is nature's provision for the regulation of the menstrual function. It cures all "female troubles." It is equally effective for the girl in her teens, the young wife with domestic and maternal cares, and the woman approaching the period known as the "Change of Life." They all need it. They are all benefitted by it.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, the Ladies' Advisory Department, The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

THOS. J. COOPER, Tupelo, Miss., says: "My sister suffered from very irregular and painful menstruation and doctors could not relieve her. Wine of Cardui entirely cured her and also helped my mother through the Change of Life."

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1898. NO. 36.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)
Washington, June 24th, 1898.

More Spanish rumors; more caution, hesitation and delay! The fears of delay in landing Gen. Shafter's army after it reached Admiral Sampson's fleet were all realized The army arrived off Santiago on schedule time, last Monday, but it was two days later before its advance guard was landed, presumably because of the wild stories stating that the Spanish garrison at Santiago consisted of 40,000; and it is unofficially understood that Santiago is not to be attacked until the reinforcements which have been rushed from Camp Alger aboard of the auxillary cruisers Harvard and Yale, at Newport News, shall have joined Gen. Shafter. It looks as though that cable station at Guantanamo Bay, which put the administration in communication with Shafter and Sampson, was reopened a few days too soon. Perhaps if there had been no orders from Washington there would have been less delay. It is now stated, unofficially, of course, that the movement against Porto Rico has been suspended until the Santiago campaign is over and that the whole available army may be sent to help Shafter. Caution is a good thing, in moderation, but overcaution in the conduct of a war is about the worst policy that could be adopted.

Representative Carmack, of Tennessee, doesn't fancy the talk of an alliance with England, and doesn't believe that the people do; consequently he has offered a resolution declaring that this country looks with disfavor on every suggestion of an alliance with any European power.

Among the volunteer brigadiers nominated this week, was the notorious Adelbert Ames, whose career as a carpet-bag Senator from Mississippi, and as governor of that State, both under the military regime and during the short time that it was under negro domination, must be well remembered in that State. His home was in Massachusetts, before he became a carpet-bagger, and he has resided in that State since the respectable people virtually drove him out of their State. He is a son-in-law of the late Benjamin F. Butler, and was graduated at West Point.

A prominent citizen of Minnesota, now in Washington, says of the political situation in that State: "A thorough fusion has been effected between the Silver Republicans, the Democrats, and Populists, and they expect to elect John Lind governor. The Republican machine, which is run by men who are in office only for what there is in it, is offensive to thousands of good citizens who will help to throw out as corrupt a clique as ever disgraced a State. Every candidate on the fusion ticket is able, clean and popular."

The debate on the resolution for the annexation of Hawaii has not reached the filibustering stage in the Senate, and it may not. Some of anti-annexationists have said that they did not see what good filibustering would do, and that after they had stated their objections they would not oppose taking a vote. The fact that many Democrats, regardless of their opinion of annexation, think it would be a good thing for Congress to remain in session while the war is going on, may play a more important part in postponing a vote on annexation than is apparent. It is well known that the Republican program is to hurry adjournment after the annexation resolution has been adopted by the Senate.

Jerry Simpson managed to pour a hot broadside into Representative Grosvenor for his misrepresentation of the Democrats, the silver Republicans and the Populists in his speech to the Ohio Republican Convention, in which he charged nine out of every ten of them with having voted against every appropriation for the conduct of the war, except the first one for $50,000,000, before he was shut off on a point of order. Jerry said after reading that portion of Grosvenor's speech containing the charge: "The assertion as regards the vote of members on this side is false. Every man on this side has voted for every appropriation bill, and no man would have cast the reflection upon a large portion of this House, contained in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, were he not dead to all sense of honor and truthfulness, having in his possession the facts with which the gentleman must have been familiar."

The Democratic Senators have decided to defeat the bill recently passed by the House, authorizing volunteer soldiers to vote for Congressmen in their camps, regardless of the tactics they may have to adopt to do it. Their grounds of opposition is that the bill directly recognizes the right of the Federal government to control the polls at Congressional elections—the same recognition given by the notorious Federal election law, which was repealed a few years ago—which has always been opposed by the Democratic party.

Europe Wants Our Products.

The farmers of the United States are drawing upon other parts of the world for more money in the fiscal year which ends with this month than in any preceeding year in the history of the country. Even the high water mark of 1892, when our exports of agricultural products amounted to $799,328,232 will be surpassed by the record of the year which closes with this month. The preliminary report of May exportations which have reached the bureau of statistics makes it quite apparent that the exports of the year will be considerably in excess of $800,060,000, the total for the year being likely to reach $835,000,000. Never before have the exports of agricultural products reached the $800,000,000 line, and never but twice have they been as much as $700,000,000, the two occasions in which they passed $700,000,000 line being in 1881 and 1892. Compared with last fiscal year the increase in exports of agricultural products will be fully $150,000,000, and compared with the preceding year the increase will be $250,000,000, while the total will be fully 50 per cent in excess of that of the fiscal year 1895.

In breadstuffs alone the exports of the year will amount to nearly $1,000,000 for each business day, and will be more than $100,000,000 in excess of last year's breadstuffs. Nearly all articles classed as breadstuffs have participated in this increase. Of wheat the value of the exports for fiscal year 1898 will be more than double those of the fiscal year 1897, while the increase in flour will be nearly 50 per cent and of corn nearly 50 per cent in value. May exports of corn were larger than those of any other month in the history of the country, while the total exports for the year for the first time will pass the 200,000,000 bushel line, the total in only three preceeding years having reached 1000,000,000 bushels. Cornmeal, oats and oatmeal and rye show a sticking increase, the gain in oatmeal being more than 60 per cent ever that of last year, and that of oats 100 per cent while in rye the gain is also phenomenally large.

Several nations are much concerned about what we intend to do with the Philippines. The answer is that we propose to do what we consider right. It would not be right for us to take the risks of a great battle with Spain and then allow an outside nation to run away with our victory.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

UNDER the terms of the new bond issue every one who has saved up $20 has a chance to become a bloated bondholder and a coupon-clipper, while the banks and big capitalists will have to wait until the small lenders are served before getting any of the bonds and will not get any then if the small lenders want them all.

IT is said that lake sailors make the best seamen. A sailor may cross the Atlantic without danger of running into a small island, and he may hardly see more than two or three ships during the entire voyage, but on the lakes it is just the other way. The lake sailor, therefore, becomes more alert, watchful and careful.

AMONG the governors of states, Pingree of Michigan has offered to buy shoes for a regiment out of his own pocket; Towers, of Maine, paid the state bounty—$27,000—of the Maine volunteers; Tyler, of Virginia, will be responsible for his order for shoes for all his troops, and Adams, of Colorado, has offered to advance all the money needed to equip the Colorado troops, but several citizens are insisting on sharing this honor with him.

HOLLAND holds the first place in the world as a nation of smokers. Every Dutchman consumes, on an average, 100 ounces a year. Then Belgium comes a good second with an annual consumption of 80 ounces, followed closely by Turkey with 70 ounces, and the United States with 60 ounces. Germany, France, Spain and Italy tread closely on their heels, while the United Kingdom comes comparatively low on the list with 23 ounces.

THE Washington agent of a life insurance company who had written a $10,000 policy on the life of Lieut. Hobson, the hero of Santiago, recently received a request from Lieut. Hobson for a permit to engage in war service without invalidating the policy, according to the rules of the company. The permit was issued, and it has since been found that the date of the letter corresponded with the date of Lieut. Hobson's daring exploit. If he had been killed in the attempt his father would have received $10,000.

FOR those who are standing around waiting for dead men's shoes, there is a consoling paragraph in the new revenue law. When it goes into effect legacies left by millionaires will, under some conditions, pay a tax of 15 per cent. As this is extraordinarily heavy, it may act as an inducement for men and women of wealth to give away while yet on earth the major part of the fortunes with which they are endowed. The tax is graded as if it was the purpose of the framers of the bill to discourage the accumulation of great wealth.

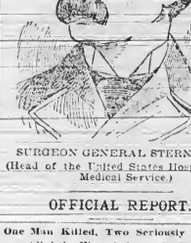
THREE of the grandsons of Adm. Raphael Semmes, who commanded the famous confederate commerce destroyer, Alabama, are now in the army and navy of the United States. They are the sons of Gen. L. E. Wright, who married the admiral's daughter. Gen. Wright was himself an artillery officer in the confederate army. One son, a cadet at Annapolis, is now with Sampson's fleet, another is a sergeant in the First Tennessee volunteers, and another, E. E. Wright, has been commissioned a major in the Fourth Tennessee volunteers.

THE south is carrying off its full share of the honors in the war with Spain. The Nashville made the first capture of the war, and the erratic Texas is making just the record which might be expected of a Texan when he is steered up against real fighting. A southern ensign was the first officer killed and another southern officer has performed the heroic feat of securely hemming in the Spanish fleet at Santiago—a deed which has sent Hobson's name ringing round the world and extorted praise even from Cervera himself.

THE easternmost island of the Caroline group of 50 named islands and as many more that are unnamed is 2,000 miles nearer to San Francisco than is Manila. These islands are Spanish by reason of Spain's ownership of them, but their population is mongrel, the large majority being descendants of aborigines, who, however, speak the Spanish language. These people are not governed directly from Madrid, and they have no government of their own, but are dependent upon Manila for such laws and policing as they have, which is very little.

NEARLY all the battleships and gunboats are equipped with shark-hooks, but the most original apparatus for killing the man-eaters is used by one of the gunboats blockading Havana harbor. This boat has a small electric battery, with a long wire attached to it, and small dynamite cartridges are attached to the end of the wire. A piece of fresh pork is lashed to the cartridge and thrown overboard to the shark. After he has swallowed the pork and dynamite the electric current is turned on, exploding the dynamite and blowing the shark to pieces.

THE proposed iron bridge over the Amu-Daria river, on the Central Asian railway, would replace a wooden bridge built when the Transcaspian railway was built. The site is about 130 miles northeast of Merv. As the river overflows its banks, the new bridge would be 15,887 feet, or almost three miles long, and 72 feet above the normal water level to keep clear of the drift coming down. The estimated total cost of the bridge is $2,500,000, and a Russian firm has secured the contract for the metal work. The [illegible] probably be commenced [illegible]



SPANISH RETREAT.

Two Brigades of American Troops Advance to Within Four Miles of Santiago de Cuba.

HEADQUARTERS OF GEN. CHAFFEE, two miles beyond Sevilla, June 26, via Port Antonio, Jamaica, June 27.—The American troops are now within four miles of Santiago de Cuba. Two brigades of Brig. Gen. Lawton's division in command of Gen. Chaffee and Col. R. H. Hall of the 2d Massachusetts volunteers, Saturday night and Sunday moved forward past the village of Sevilla, where the Spaniards were expected to make a stand, and occupied the hills to the right and left.

Two miles beyond, far out in front of the American forces and occupying the roads leading to Santiago, is a force of 1,500 Cubans under Gen. Carlos Gonzales. The entire Cuban army, under direction of Gen. Calixto Garcia, is massing for a co-operative attack on Santiago. Garcia, with 5,000 Cubans, is expected from the interior before nightfall, while from Aecrraderos, 20 miles to the west of Santiago, 2,000 Cubans arrived Sunday.

There are no Spaniards in the entire country between Baiquiri, where most of the American troops were landed, and Santiago. The retreat of the enemy after Friday's battle apparently became a rout, which did not end until the fortifications around the city were reached. The transport Leona Sunday brought to Juragua from Aecrraderos nearly 2,000 insurgents, thoroughly armed and plentifully supplied with ammunition. They are part of the army of Gen. Garcia and have been sent to the front to join the insurgents already occupying the roads to Santiago.

SURGEON GENERAL STERNBERG. (Head of the United States Hospital and Medical Service.)

OFFICIAL REPORT.

One Man Killed, Two Seriously and Six Slightly Wounded on the Texas Last Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Last Wednesday, while the troops of Gen. Shafter's army were landing near Baiquiri, Cuba, Adm. Sampson, with the idea of diverting the attention of the Spaniards from the landing, made a demonstration with the battle ship Texas at Cabanas, about five miles east of Guantanamo. The Texas engaged the west battery of Cabanas for several hours. During the engagement a shell from the battery struck the Texas and, bursting, killed one man and injured several others. Sunday night the navy department received this dispatch from Adm. Sampson:

PLAYA DEL ESTE, June 26.—The following is a list of casualties on the Texas, June 22: Killed—Apprentice Frank J. Blakely.

Seriously Wounded—Apprentice Raymond Russell, George Franeis Mullin.

Slightly Wounded—Seaman Rudolph Earl Engel, Seaman Hugh Amos Lee, Landsman John Emory Lively, Coxswain John J. Simonson, Apprentice John Edward Nelson, Seaman Avoid Sjogvist.

INTO A TRAP.

Only Stubborn Fighting and American Grit Saved Gen. Young's Command From Annihilation or Capture.

JURAGUA, Cuba, June 25, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 27.—The initial fight of Col. Wood's rough riders and the troopers of the 1st and 10th regular cavalry will be known in history as the battle of La Quasina. That it did not end in the complete slaughter of the Americans was not due to any miscalculation in the plan of the Spaniards, for as perfect an ambuscade as was ever formed in the brain of an Apache Indian was prepared and Lieut. Col. Roosevelt and his men walked squarely into it. For an hour and a half they held their ground under a perfect storm of bullets from the front and sides, and then Col. Wood at the right and Lieut. Col. Roosevelt at the left led a charge which turned the tide of battle and sent the enemy flying over the hills toward Santiago.

It is now definitely known that 16 men on the American side were killed, while 60 were wounded or are reported to be missing.

The Game Prevented By the Authorities.

CLEVELAND, O., June 27.—The game to have been played between Cleveland and New York at Euclid Beach park Sunday afternoon, was prevented by officials of Collinwood village. The players were notified that they would be arrested as soon as the first ball was pitched and the game was therefore abandoned. Four thousand persons were outside the gates, but were not admitted to the ground. The postponed game will be played Tuesday.

FEW MILES APART.

American and Spanish Armies Almost Face to Face Near Santiago.

Gen. Wheeler Places the Number of Killed in the Battle of Sevilla at 22 and Wounded Between 70 and 80 —Spanish Loss Heavier.

OFF JURAGUA, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 27.—Troops of the United States and Spain are almost face to face and less than four miles apart.

To-night the picket lines at certain points are within hailing distance of the enemy. It seems certain that the battle of Santiago must come within a week.

The troops are all ashore here and at Baiquiri with the exception of a few scattered companies that have gone forward. The supplies are sufficient to encampson arrive to sustain a week's campaign, wherewith landing points.

Steppi[illegible] are riding onto the beach through the pounding surf and, as one by one rations are already landed, it is believed the required supplies will all be ashore by Tuesday, the 28th.

The landing of troops, horses and supplies has been extraordinary. With only one steam barge and compelled to depend on treacherous small boats, Gen. Shafter had landed over 16,000 men, hundreds of horses and mules and thousands of dollars' worth of supplies on the exposed beaches and only two men have lost their lives. No more than 50 animals have been drowned and scarcely a package of supplies has been lost.

The officers generally are surprised at the small loss of life and property. Gen. Shafter said Saturday:

"I am well satisfied with the progress that is being made. The disembarkation is slow, but considering the limited facilities and the exposed nature of the landing places, the men have done well. I only await the landing of sufficient supplies to begin the movement on Santiago. I am unable to say when it will take place. I am much pleased at the gallant conduct of our men in the action at Sevilla yesterday and with their cool and veteran-like work. The victory was complete."

Gen. Wheeler in his official report places the number of dead in the engagement at Sevilla as 22 and the wounded as between 70 and 80. No attempt has yet been made to prepare an official list with the names of the dead and wounded. The high grass and bushes of the battle ground make it difficult to find the bodies but an official list will probably be prepared by Monday.

The bodies of 39 Spaniards have been found and the Spanish loss in killed and wounded was doubtless much heavier than the American.

The majority of the American troops are now here or at the front in the vicinity of Sevilla. The force at the latter place, which is about nine miles from Santiago, numbers 6,000 Americans and 1,500 Cubans. Gen. Wheeler is in command there, with Gens. Young, Lawton and Chaffee. Gen. Wheeler will remain at Sevilla, which will be made a rendezvous for the troops landing at Baiquiri, and at this point, the artillery and cavalry being put forward from Baiquiri. The cavalry have been sent ahead to cut a wagon road through the underbrush.

From the American position at Sevilla, Santiago is plainly visible and the fortifications can be seen. The following reports to Gen. Shafter from generals at the front show the conditions:

To Gen. Shafter: "I have just seen two Negro boys who left Santiago this morning (Saturday). They report that the soldiers and citizens are very short of food. The soldiers and officers have seized all the food in the shops. They are killing young horses for food and in the hospitals are subsisting on bread made of rice flour.

"Three Spanish generals took part in the fight at Sevilla yesterday. Five wagon loads of wounded were carried into Santiago, and many others wounded got there on horses or afoot. We can see Morro castle and the flag very distinctly from our position. The Cubans confirm the reports as to the fine character of the fortifications around the city. Seven lines of barbed wire are stretched around the trenches. The Spaniards have recently dug deep trenches around the entire city, connecting a series of small forts.

"WHEELER."

"We can plainly see Santiago less than seven miles away. The country is level for six miles this side of the city, except for hills on the south, which extend to within a mile of Santiago. These hills appear de-erted. The country is fairly open and it will not be difficult to move troops over it. Gen. Chaffee occupies Sevilla to-day.

"YOUNG."

Father and Son Drowned.

ST. LOUIS, June 27.—Dr. Louis Jacob and his son Daniel, 18 years old, both dentists of this city, were drowned Sunday at Creve Coeur lake by the overturning of their boat. Two other men who were rescued had a narrow escape from death.

Prize Captured by the Vicksburg.

KEY WEST, Fla., June 27.—Another prize, the Amapala, of Honduras, was brought in here Saturday morning, having been captured by the Vicksburg.

REINA CHRISTINA.

The Cruiser Reported to Have Run the Blockade at Santiago Lies at the Bottom of Manila Bay.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The naval authorities here are satisfied that no Spanish war ship has escaped from Santiago harbor so far, and the Spanish newspaper stories to the effect that "the cruiser Reina Christina escaped from Santiago, etc." were received here with a good deal of amusement. As one officer put it the [illegible] of our [illegible] regular "Flying Dutchman" in the Reina Christina, for at last accounts, and [illegible] recent ones, too, that particular vessel was lying in the bottom of Manila bay, where Dewey had sunk her on May day. The story is regarded as a fair sample of those put afloat to deceive the Spaniards at home and give comfort to their friends in Europe.

The formal statement by the Spanish minister of marine that the Maria Christina had succeeded in running the blockade into Cienfuegos naturally demanded more attention than the first publication, although the officials do not hesitate to express doubt of its accuracy.

This vessel is not, as may be supposed, a formidable craft, but is nothing more than one of the ships of the Compagnie Trans-Atlantique of Cadiz, hastily fitted up with a few 5½ inch Hontoria guns. She was built in 1888 and is a 16-knot vessel of 4,681 tons displacement. If she has gotten into Cienfuegos she has crossed over from some of the smaller islands of the West Indies, or may be from Porto Rico. It is believed, however, that if the vessel actually reached Cuba she has gotten in at Batabano or perhaps Manzanillo, both of which ports are outside the blockade lines.

PARIS, June 25.—M. Petral has succeeded in forming a cabinet to succeed the retiring ministry of M. Meline. It is constituted as follows:

Premier and minister of the interior, M. Paul Peytral.

Minister of foreign affairs, M. Chas. DeFreycinet.

Minister of war, M. Godefrey Cavaignac.

Minister of finance, M. Paul De Lombre.

Minister of commerce, M. Emile Marnejouls.

CABINET MEETING.

The Administration Satisfied That Germany Has No Intention to Interfere in Our Affairs at Manila.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The only important development at Friday's cabinet meeting was the positive settlement of the question of the attitude of Germany with respect to the Philippines. The secretary of state has received assurances which settles beyond question all doubts on this point. Germany has no intention, present or prospective, of interfering in any way with the policy or plans of the United States in regard to the occupation of the islands. Its attitude has been and will continue to be one of strict neutrality.

This statement coming from high official sources is accepted by this government in perfect good faith and is regarded as final and conclusive. No further attention will be paid by this government to any reports to the contrary, which are constantly being sent out, it is believed, in the interests of Spain.

Steamer transfer No. 1, which was incorrectly reported wrecked a few days ago, has safely arrived at Vancouver from Alaska, where she carried a large batch of cattle. She reports that there are about 1,000 head of cattle and a large number of horses at Pyramid harbor destined for the Klondike.

Reports from Manila say a special dispatch from Shanghai indicate the existence of fears that Senora Augusti, wife of Capt. Gen. Augusti, and children have been massacred by the rebels on the Bulacan.

A LEAF FROM CAMP LIFE.

The Varied Commissions of Lieut. Mahoney V. — He Went to Town.

When Lieut. Mahoney came to Sioux City to recruit men he was intrusted with a number of errands for the members of companies H and L. He jotted them all down on a piece of paper, and referred to them when he came to Sioux City. This piece of paper will give an idea of what the men wanted in Sioux City and some of the things Lieut. Mahoney had to do. It reads as follows:

"Get three .38-caliber Colt's, for officers."

"Get a ruler and some black lead pencils."

"Kiss Harry Hamilton's girl."

"Have that order of roses countermanded for cigars."

"Take Claypoole's new vest, and get his old one out of the closet."

"Get 'Pa' Brown's manual for army cooking, his sword knot, and his French dictionary."

"Get any old thing."—Sioux City Journal.

Something Important.

After trying them, if you would like to act as agent send for terms.

Rebukes His Tired Auditors.

A clergyman preached a rather long sermon from the text: "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." After the congregation had listened about an hour some one began to get weary and went out; others soon followed, greatly to the annoyance of the minister. Another person started, whereupon the parson stopped his sermon and said: "Dear is right gentlemen; as fast as you are weighed pass out!" He continued his sermon some time after that, but no one disturbed him by leaving.—Chicago Caromele.

Electric Fans in Sleeping Cars.

The Baltimore & Ohio South Western Railway officials have solved the problem of cooling sleeping cars in stations at night. At Cincinnati, Louisville and St. Louis this line has sleeping cars placed in the stations at 10 p. m. which do not depart until after midnight, and in order to make them comfortable and cool have placed small rotary electric fans in each end of the sleepers, thus removing the heated and impure air from all parts of the car. The fans have been in operation about three weeks, and have been the subject of many favorable comments from the traveling public.

Life and the Liver.

"Success in life depends upon the liver" is the way Chas. Lamb, the poet and punster, put it. Medical science has proven that nine-tenths of the ailments of living have their origin in the liver, and in constipation caused by its derangements. Keep the liver lively and all will be well. Modern science points out Cascarets as the only perfect, gentle, positive liver regulator fit to be used in the delicate human organism. All druggists sell Cascarets 10c, 25c, 50c and we recommend them most heartily.

Sailors and Their Grievances.

The grievances of sailors examined by the authorities in ports of entry, where the seamen belong, often turn out to be imaginary or greatly exaggerated. But there are plenty of cruel and conscienceless skippers who abuse their crews. Violence is always objectionable, and pointedly so when it is exerted upon an unfortunate liver, stomach or bowels by dosing with drastic purgatives which weaken the intestines. Use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Rest From Earthly Labors Comes Only With the Grave's Refuge.

Those Who Have Toiled and Those Who Have Grieved May Find Consolation in God's Promise—With the Soul's Transition Peace is Found.

Dr. Talmage's text Sunday was Micah ii., 10: "Arise ye and depart, for this is not your rest."

This was the drum beat of a prophet who wanted to arouse his people from their oppressed and sinful condition; but it may just as properly be uttered now as then. Bells, by long exposure and much ringing, lose their clearness of tone; but this ronsing bell of the Gospel strikes in as clear a tone as when it first rang on the air.

As far as I can see your great want and mine is rest. From the time we enter life, a great many vexations and annoyances take after us. We have our holidays and our seasons of recreation and quiet, but where is the man in this world who has found entire rest? The fact is that God did not make this world to rest in. A ship might as well go down off Cape Hatteras to find smooth water as a man in this world to find quiet. From the way that God has strewn the thorns and hung the clubs, and sharpened the tusks; from the colds that distress us, and the heats that smite us, and the pluerisies that stab us, and the fevers that consume us, I know that he did not make this world as a place to loiter in. God does everything successfully, and this world would be a very different world if it were intended for us to lounge in. It does right well for a few years. Indeed, it is magnificent. Nothing but infinite wisdom and goodness could have mixed this beverage of water, or hung up these brackets of stars; or trained these voices of rill, and bird, and ocean—so that God has but to lift His hand and the whole world breaks forth into orchestra. But after all, it is only the splendors of a king's highway, over which we are to march on to eternal conquests.

You and I have seen men who tried to rest here. They gathered around them the patronage of merchant princes. The voice of their bills should the money markets. They had a track in the most successful railroads, and in safe deposit vaults great rolls of government securities. They had emblazoned carriages, high-mettled steeds, footmen, plate that confounded lords and senators who sat at their table, tapestry on which floated the richest designs of foreign looms, splendor of canvas on the walls, exquisiteness of music rising among pedestals of bronze and dropping, soft and light, on snow of sculpture. Here let them rest. Put back the embroidered curtain and shake up the pillow of down. Turn out the lights. It is 11 o'clock at night. Let slumber drop upon the eyelids and the air float through the half-opened lattice, drowsy with midsummer perfume. Stand back, all care, anxiety and trouble! But no! they will not stand back. They rattle the lattice. They look under the canopy. With rough torch they startle his pulses. They cry out at 12 o'clock at night. Awake man; how can you sleep when things are so uncertain? What about those stocks? Hark to the tap of the bell! It is your district. How if you should die soon? Awake man! Think of it! Who will get your property when you are gone? What will they do with it? Wake up! Riches sometimes take wings. How if you should get poor? Wake up!" Rising on one elbow, the man of fortune looks out into the darkness of the room, and wipes the dampness from his forehead and says, "Alas! For all this scene of wealth and magnificence—no rest."

I passed down a street of a city with a merchant. He knew all the finest houses on the street. He said: "There is something the matter in all these houses. In that one it is conjugal infelicity. In that one, a dissipated son. In that, a dissolute father. In that, an idiot child. In that, the prospect of bankruptcy." This world's wealth can give no permanent satisfaction. This is not your rest.

You and I have seen men try in another direction. A man says, "If I could only rise to such and such a place of renown; if I could only gain that office; if I could only get the stand, and have my sentiments met with one good round of hand-clapping applause; if I could only write a book that would live, or make a speech that would thrill, or do an action that would resound!" The tide turns in his favor. His name is on 10,000 lips. He is bowed to, and sought after, and advanced. Men drink his health at great dinners. At his fiery words the multitudes huzza. From galleries of beauty they throw garlands. From housetops as he passes in long procession, they shake out the national standards. Here let him rest. It is 11 o'clock at night. On pillows stuffed with a nation's praise let him lie down. Hush! all disturbant voices. In his dreams let there be hoisted a throne, and across it march a coronation. Hush! Hush!

"Wake up!" says a rough voice. "Political sentiment is changing. How if you should lose this place of honor? Wake up! The morning papers are to be full of denunciation. Hearken to the execrations of those who once caressed you. By to-morrow night there will be multitudes sneering at the words which last night you expected would be universally admired. How can you sleep when everything depends upon the next turn of the tragedy? Up, man! Off of this pillow!" The man, with head yet hot from his last oration, starts up suddenly, looks out upon the night, but sees nothing except the flowers that lie upon his stand, or the soft from which he reads his speech, or the books from which he quoted his authorities, and goes to his desk to finish his neglected correspondence, or to pen an indignant line to some reporter, or sketch the plan for a public defense against the assaults of the people. Happy when he got his first lawyer's brief, exultant when he triumphed over his first political rival; yet, sitting on the very top of all that this world offers of praise, he exclaims: "No rest! No rest!"

The very world that now applauds will soon hiss. That world said of the great Webster, "What a statesman! What wonderful exposition of the constitution! A man fit for any position!" That same world said, after a while, "Down with him! He is an office seeker. He is a sot. He is a libertine. Away with him!" And there is no peace for the man until he lays down his broken heart in the grave at Marshfield.

While Charles Matthews was performing in London before immense audiences, one day he went out and gloomy man came into a doctor's shop saying: "Doctor, what can you do for me?" The doctor examined his case and said: "My advice is that you go and see Charles Matthews." "Alas! Alas!" said the man, "I myself am Charles Matthews." Jeffrey thought that if he could only be judge that would be the making of him; got to be judge, and cursed the day in which he was born. Alexander wanted to submerge the world with his greatness; submerged it, and then drank himself to death because he could not stand the trouble. Burns thought he would give everything if he could win the favor of courts and princes; won it, and amid the shouts of a great entertainment, when poets, and orators, and duchesses were adoring his genius, wished that he could creep back into the obscurity in which he dwelt on the day when he wrote of the "Daisy, wee modest, crimson-tipped flower."

Napoleon wanted to make all Europe tremble at his power; made it tremble. then died, his entire military achievements crumbling down to a pair of muddy boots, which he insisted on having on his feet when dying. At Versailles I saw a picture of Napoleon in his triumphs. I went into another room and saw a bust of Napoleon as he appeared at St. Helena; but oh, what grief and anguish in the face of the latter! The first was Napoleon in triumph, the last was Napoleon with his heart broken. How they laughed and cried when silver-tongued Sheridan, in the midday of prosperity, harangued the people of the commons, and they howled at and execrated him when, outside of the room where his corpse lay, his creditors tried to get his miserable bones and sell them.

This world for rest? "Aha!" cry the waters, "no rest here—we plunge to the sea." "Aha!" cry the mountains, "no rest here—we crumble to the plain." "Aha!" cry the towers, "no rest here—we follow Babylon, and Thebes, and Nineveh into the dust." No rest for the flowers; they fade. No rest for man; he must work, toil, suffer and shave.

Now, for what have I said all this? Just to prepare you for the text: "Arise ye and depart; for this is not your rest." I am going to make you a grand offer. Some of you remember that when gold was discovered in California, large companies were made up and started off to get their fortune, and a year ago for the same purpose hundreds dared the cold of Alaska. To day I want to make up a party for the land of gold. I hear it my hand is ready to enroll your name in the muster roll of the company in which He offers all who will join the company 10,000 shares of infinite value, in a city whose streets are gold, whose harps are gold, whose crowns are gold. You have read of the Crusaders—how that many thousands of them went off to conquer the holy sepulcher. I ask you to join a grander crusade—not for the purpose of conquering the sepulcher of a dead Christ, but for the purpose of reaching the throne of a living Jesus. When an army is to be made up, the recruiting officer examines the volunteers, he tests their eyesight; he sounds their lungs; he measures their stature; they must be just right or they are rejected. But there shall be no partiality in making up this army of Christ. Whatever your moral or physical stature, whatever your dissipations, whatever your crimes, whatever your weakness, I have a commission from the Lord Almighty to make up this regiment of redeemed souls, and I cry, "Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest." Many of you have lately joined this company, and my desire is that you all may join it. Why not? You know in your own hearts' experience that what I have said about this world is true—that it is no place to rest in. There are hundreds here weary—oh, how weary—weary with sin; weary with trouble; weary with bereavement. Some of you have been pierced through and through. You carry the scars of a score of conflicts, in which you have bled at every pore; and you sigh, "Oh, that I had the wings of a dove, that I might fly away and be at rest!" You have taken the cup of this world's pleasures and drank it to the dregs, and still the thirst claws at your tongue, and the fever strikes to your brain. You have chased pleasure through every valley by every stream, amid every brightness, and under every shadow; but just at the moment when you were all ready to put your hand upon the rosy, laughing sylph of the wood, she turned upon you with the glare of a fiend and the eye of asatyr. Her locks adders and her breath the chill damp of a grave. Out of Jesus Christ no rest. No voice to silence the storm. No light to kindle the darkness. No dry dock to repair the split bulwark.

Thank God, I can tell you something better. If there is no rest on earth, there is rest in Heaven. Oh, ye who are worn out with work, your hands callonsed, your backs bent, your eyes half put out, your fingers worn with the needle, that in this world you may never lay down, ye disouraged ones, who have been waging a hand-to-hand fight for bread; ye to whom the night brings little rest and the morning more drudgery—Oh, ye of the weary hand and the weary side, and the weary foot, hear me talk about rest!

Look at that company of enthroned ones. It can not be that those bright ones ever toiled? Yes! yes! These packed the Chinese tea boxes, and through missionary instruction escaped into glory. These sweltered on southern plantations, and one night, after the cotton-picking, went up as white as if they had never been black. Those died of overtoil in the Lowell carpet factories, and these in Manchester mills; those help lay the Pyramids, and these broke [illegible] from work on the day Christ [illegible] ended out of Jerusalem. No [illegible] to build; Heaven is done. [illegible] garments to weave; the robes [illegible] ished. No more harvests to raise; the [illegible] ners are full. Oh, sons and daughters of toil! arise ye and depart, for [illegible] is your rest.

Seawill McCallum, a boy of [illegible] Sunday-school, while dying, said [illegible] his mother, "Dear, cry, but sing, sing, sing.

"There is rest for the weary.
There is rest for the weary."

Then putting his wasted hand over his heart, he said: "There is rest for me."

But there are some of you who want to hear about the land where they never have any heartbreaks, and no graves are dug. Where are your father and mother? The most of you are orphans. I look around, and where I see one man who has parents living, I see ten who are orphans. Where are your children? Where I see one family circle that is unbroken I see three or four that have been desolated. One lamb gone out of this fold; one flower plucked from that garland; one golden link broken from that chain; here a bright light put out, and there another, and yonder another. With such griefs, how are you to rest? Will there ever be a power that can attune that silent voice, or kindle the luster of that closed eye, or put spring and dance into that little foot?

When we bank up the dust over the dead, is the sod never to be broken? Is the cemetery to hear no sound but the tire of the hearse-wheel, or the tap of the bell at the gate as the processions come in with their awful burdens of grief? Is the bottom of the grave gravel and the top dust? No! no! no! The tomb is only a place where we wrap our robes about us for a pleasant nap on our way home. The swellings of Jordan will only wash off the dust of the way. From the top of the grave of the elk a glimpse of the mountains gleamed with the sun that never sets.

Oh, ye whose locks are wet with the dews of the night of grief; ye whose hearts are heavy, because those well-known footsteps sound no more at the doorway, yonder is your rest! There is David triumphant; but once he bemoaned Absalom. There is Abraham enthroned; but once he wept for Sarah. There is Paul exultant; but he once sat with his feet in the stocks. There is Payson radiant with immortal health; but oh, how ill he was always sick. No toil, no tears, no partings, no strife, no agonizing cough, no night. No storm to ruffle the crystal sea. No alarm to strike from the cathedral towers. No dirge throbbing from seraphic harps. No tremor in the everlasting song; but rest—perfect rest—unending rest.

Into that rest how many have gone! How many have gone! Some put down the work of mid-life, feeling they could hardly be spared from the store or shop for a day, but are to be spared from it for all eternity. Some in old age. One came tottering on his staff, and used to sit at the foot of the pulpit; his wrinkled face radiant with the light that falls from the throne of God. Another having lived a life of Christian consistency here, ever busy with kindnesses for children, her heart full of that meek and quiet spirit that is in the sight of God of great price, suddenly her countenance was transfigured, and the gate was opened, and she took her place amid that great cloud of witnesses that hover about the throne, glorious consolation! They are not dead. You can not make me believe they are dead. They have only moved on. With more love than that with which they greeted us on earth, they watch us from their high place, and their voices cheer us in our struggle for the skey. Hail, spirits blessed! now that ye have passed the flood and won the crown. With weary feet we press up the shining way, until in everlasting reunion we shall meet again. Oh! won't it be grand when our conflicts done and our partings over, we shall clasp hands and cry out, "This is Heaven!"

By the thrones of your departed kindred, by their gentle hearts, and the tenderness and love with which they now call you from the skies, I beg you start on the high road to Heaven. In the everlasting rest we may all meet.

One of the old writers wished he could have been three things: Rome in its prosperity; Paul preaching; Christ in the body. I have three wishes. First, To see Christ in glory, surrounded by His redeemed. Second, To see Christ in glory, surrounded by His redeemed. Third. To see Christ in glory, surrounded by His redeemed.

UNLESS the Chicago papers are working on fiction, a Dr. J. R. Murphy, of that city, has discovered a consumption cure which looks plausible, and is said to be effective. His process is to throw a diseased lung into temporary collapse by filling it with nitrogen, and allowing it absolute rest while the other lung does the work of respiration. This prevents the throwing off by coughing of the curative fluids secreted by nature and causes the death of the bacilli. The lung is said to resume its functions when the nitrogen is withdrawn. One would suppose that such a process would cure a person or kill him in a short time.

The will of John Kipp, an army veteran, probated in Jersey City recently, provided that $100 should be expended for his burial, $50 for a band, $50 for a headstone, $50 for a casket, $16 for beer, $15 for tobacco and pipes, each pipe to be painted with red, white and blue stripes; $40 for carriages, and $4 for opening the grave.

NAVY IS WAITING.

Main Portion of Sampson's Fleet Lies Patiently in Front of Morro.

It is the Opinion Among Naval Experts That the City of Santiago Will Be Burned by the Spanish Troops Before They Surrender.

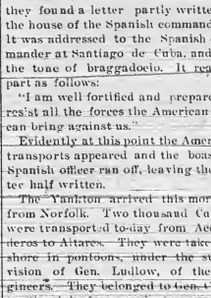
OFF SANTIAGO DE CUBA, June 23, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 27.—While the army advances the main portion of the fleet lies patiently in front of Morro castle awaiting its opportunity. Before the end of next week the fate of Santiago and Adm. Cervera should be decided.

By that time it is believed, the Spanish troops will have been forced back upon the city and defeated in a decisive engagement. Simultaneously the forts at the mouth of the harbor should be captured, under cover of a naval bombardment.

Three things will then be left to Cervera—to surrender, [illegible] ships, to surrender after desperate [illegible] ships, or to make a dash out. No necessity for action. He may forestall any [illegible] making an attempt to get out, or [illegible] arbor before the army accomplishes its end. The first Spanish ship to [illegible] off Morro Castle would be sunk within 15 minutes. Nothing in Adm. Cervera's fleet could survive the concentrated fire of all the battle ships in the navy and three of the best cruisers.

The general opinion among naval experts is that Santiago town will be burned by the Spanish troops before they surrender, that Adm. Cervera will destroy his ships and that he will then submit to the enemy. If this supposition is correct the whole work should be accomplished in a week. It is hardly likely that the army can effect its purpose without considerable loss, although its superiority in numbers, caliber and generalship insures an ultimate sweeping victory.

There is every possibility that the Spanish troops may surrender independently of Adm. Cervera. If the Spanish admiral should insist upon thus prolonging the agony he would be subjected to a fire from his own forts and the army siege guns. If these proved ineffective the harbor mouth would be dragged, the mines removed, Adm. Sampson's ships would enter and Adm. Cervera would be finished off.



When the Americans took Baiquiri they found a letter partly written in the house of the Spanish commandant. It was addressed to the Spanish commander at Santiago de Cuba, and had the tone of braggadocio. It read in part as follows:

"I am well fortified and prepared to resist all the forces the American pigs can bring against us."

Evidently at this point the American transports appeared and the boasting Spanish officer ran off, leaving the letter half written.

The Yankton arrived this morning from Norfolk. Two thousand Cubans were transported to-day from Aeceraderos to Aitares. They were taken off shore in pontoons, under the supervision of Gen. Ludlow, of the engineers. They belonged to Gen. Calixto Garcia's force and transporting them by water from the west to the east side of Santiago saved several days. It also saves unnecessary fighting. The Cubans will join the army's van. All the convoy ships except the battle ship Indiana, which is off the harbor, are coaling at Guantanamo.

This morning the Gloucester shelled a Spanish party that was working at the railroad trestle east of El Morro.

Going to Cuba as Nurses.

TAMPA, Fla., June 27.—Miss Annie Wheeler, Mrs. Maud Kissaim Babcock and Mrs. Liscomb, wife of Lieut. Col. Liscomb, of the 24th artillery, will leave here Tuesday night for Key West. From there they will go to the Cuban battle fields in the capacity of nurses. Miss Wheeler is a daughter of Gen. Wheeler and Mrs. Babcock's husband's is a sergeant in the 71st New York.

Lieut. Ames to Be Court-Martialed.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—First Lieut. Charles G. Ames, of the 7th Ohio regiment at Camp Alger, will be court-martialed within a few days. He applied for leave of absence to go to Columbus, O., to be married. This was refused, but he obtained permission to go to Washington. From there he went to Columbus and was absent three days. The charges against him are absence without leave, disobedience of orders and conduct unbecoming an officer.

DROVE THEM BACK.

A Fight in Which Sixteen Americans Were Killed and Fifty Wounded—Spanish Loss Was Larger.

OFF JURAGUA, June 24, via Playa Del Este, Guantanamo Bay, June 24.—Friday morning four troops of the 1st cavalry, four troops of the 10th cavalry and eight troops of Roosevelt's rough riders, less than a thousand men in all, dismounted and attacked 3,000 Spanish soldiers in the thickets within five miles of Santiago de Cuba.

The Americans beat the enemy back into the city, but they left the following dead upon the field:

Rough Riders—Capt. Allyn K. Capron, of Troop L; Sergt. Hamilton Fish, jr.; Privates Tilman and Dawson, both of Troop L; Private Dougherty, of Troop A; Private W. T. Erwin, of Troop F.

First Cavalry—Privates Dix, York, Bejork, Kolbe, Berlin and Lenmock.

Tenth Cavalry—Corporal White; Privates James Crews and Edward Culver.

Capt. Luna, of the Cuban army.

Forty Cubans were killed in another engagement.

At least fifty Americans were wounded, including six officers. Several of the wounded will die.

Twelve dead Spaniards were found in the bush after the fight, but their loss was doubtless far in excess of that.

Gen. Young commanded the expedition, and was with the regulars, while Col. Wood directed the operations of the rough riders several miles west.

Both parties struck the Spaniards about the same time and the fight lasted ag hour.

The Spaniards opened fire from the thick brush and had every advantage of numbers and position, but the troops drove them back from the start, stormed the blockhouse around which they made the final stand and sent them scattering over the mountains.

The cavalrymen were afterward reinforced by the 7th, 12th and 17th infantry, part of the 9th cavalry, the 2d Massachusetts and the 71st New York.

The Americans now hold the positions at the threshold of Santiago de Cuba with more troops going forward constantly and they are preparing for a final assault upon the city.

The following officers were wounded: Maj. Brodie, shot through the right forearm; Capt. McClintock, Troop B, shot through the right leg; Lieut. J. R. Thomas, Troop L, shot through right leg. His condition is serious. All the foregoing officers are rough riders.

Other officers wounded are: Capt. Knox, whose condition is serious; Maj. Bell, Lieut. Byram. These officers are of the 1st cavalry.

The following are among the soldiers wounded:

Rough Riders—Troop B: Privates E. M. Hill, Shelley F. Ishler, M. S. Newcomb, Fred N. Beale and Corporal J. D. Rhodes. Troop E: Corporal James F. Bean, Privates Frank B. Booth, Albert C. Hartle, R. G. Bailey, H. Alvers, E. J. Atherton, Clifford Reed and Sergeant G. W. Arringo. Troop G: Sergeant Thomas F. Cavanaugh, Corporal L. L. Stewart, Privates George Rowland, H. J. Haefner, Michael Cegle, R. M. Reid and M. Russell. Troop L: Privates J. R. Kean, John P. Dernap, Thomas F. Meagher, Edward Calborst and Nathaniel Poe.

Tenth Cavalry—Troop B: Privates Russell, Gaines, Miller, Cross, Braxton and Wheeler. Troop I: Privates Ridd and Mayberry.

Edward Marshall, correspondent of the New York Journal and Advertiser, was seriously wounded in the small of the back. It is probable that at least ten in the list of wounded will die.

NEW YORK, June 25.—Hamilton Fish, jr., one of the killed, was one of the young New Yorkers of good position and family who went to the front with Roosevelt's rough riders. He was of distinguished ancestry, his family being one of the oldest in this state. His father Nicholas Fish is the son of the late Hamilton Fish, who was secretary of state in Grant's cabinet. He is a banker and lives in this city. Hamilton Fish was over six feet tall, of herculean build and rowed as No. 7 of the Columbia college crew in its winning race of 1894, over the Poughkeepsie course.

Engineer Killed, Fireman Fatally Scalded.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 25.—As the second section of the Burlington train, carrying the Torrey cowboy regiment of cavalry from Fort D. A. Russell to Jacksonville, Fla., was pulling in to St. Joseph union station Thursday, the engine jumped the track, and after plowing through the earth for 30 feet, toppled over on its side. Engineer John W. Fuller, of this city, who bravely remained at his post, was caught beneath the tender and killed. Fireman George Christman, who also lives here, was so badly scalded that he will die.

Soldier Killed by Lightning.

TAMPA, Fla., June 25.—While on a practice march Friday afternoon Private Fred Nicholas, Company C, 3d New York, was killed by lightning. Several other soldiers were shocked but none fatally.

"America" to Be Played Separately.

NEW YORK, June 25.—The secretary of war has issued orders to all army posts that "America" shall be played by army bands separately from other airs, and not incorporated in medleys or played with variations.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—SENATE—Discussion by the senate of the question of Hawaiian annexation was begun Monday in open session. At the very opening of the question the opponents of annexation quite unexpectedly scored a point by preventing a yea and nay vote on taking up the resolutions. The opponents of annexation were decidedly pleased at preventing a show of strength, but at 4:30 Monday afternoon Mr. White afforded the friends of annexation the opportunity they had been awaiting. He moved to adjourn and like a flash Mr. Davis demanded the yeas and nays. The motion, the vote upon which was a test of strength between the friends and opponents of annexation, was defeated decisively—41 to 15. Having gained his point in developing the numerical weakness of the opposition, Mr. Davis readily agreed to refer a motion for an executive session. The proceedings of the day indicate clearly that there is to be no debate upon the Hawaiian question in the ordinary acceptation of that term.

HOUSE—The house Monday passed the general deficiency bill, carrying $24,000,000. The bill occasioned little debate and it passed practically as reported to the house from the committee on appropriations. The remainder of the day was given to District of Columbia business. At 5:37 o'clock the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—SENATE—Interest in the discussion of Hawaiian annexation which is proceeding in the senate already has begun to flag. Early in the present session the senate abandoned the practice which obtained for six weeks. During that time a majority of the speakers were accorded close attention. It is evident from the proceedings Tuesday that the senate is not disposed to engage in [illegible]thusiastic over arguments which are not now new to them. Tuesday Mr. White, (dem., Cal.) the leader of the opponents of annexation, spoke for three hours and a half. His argument was skillful and was presented with oratorical ability, but it failed to command the attention from senators it really deserved. Among the bills passed was one providing severe penalties for the malicious injury or destruction of submarine mines, torpedoes, fortifications or other coast defenses.

HOUSE—After passing several bills of minor importance Tuesday the house in committee of the whole considered without disposing of a bill to refer to the court of claims certain claims of persons for property taken or destroyed by the confederate invasions into the southern counties of Pennsylvania. The bill brought on a long debate in which it was vigorously advocated and opposed.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—SENATE—Opponents of the annexation of Hawaii again occupied the attention of the senate Wednesday. Mr. White (dem., Cal.) resumed his speech begun Tuesday, but after speaking two hours yielded the floor to Mr. Pettigrew (S. D.), who discussed the resolutions for an hour and a half. Mr. White has not concluded his speech. Mr. Pettigrew taking up the argument against the resolutions merely to afford him an opportunity to rest. The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was presented to the senate and read, but no effort was made to dispose of it. It was sharply criticised, however and the indications are that its adoption will be contested because of the elimination of the senate free homestead amendment and the acknowledgment of the right in certain circumstances and conditions of Indians to lease mineral lands.

HOUSE—A bill incorporating the National Congress of Mothers was passed when the house met Wednesday. Mr. Simpson (pop., Kan.) created something of a diversion by rising to a question of personal privilege. He proceeded to read in reply to the representative Grosvenor's speech before the Ohio republican convention, in which the Ohio member was reported as saying, after referring to the opposition to the republicans in the house having voted in the interest of the "reconcentrados" for the $50,000,000 appropriation, that "nine out of ten of those gentlemen had voted 'no' on every subsequent appropriation bill for the 'suffering soldiers of the Union.'" Mr Dalzell (rep., Pa.) made the point that it was not a matter to warrant the Kansas member in rising to personal privilege, and the speaker upheld the point.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—SENATE—Discussion in the senate of the Hawaiian annexation question was interrupted Thursday by Mr. Rawlins (Utah) with a speech in which he criticised vigorously the provision embodied in the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill which acknowledges the right of Indians to lease mineral lands on their reservations. He declared that it was a far greater matter than the annexation of the Hawaiian islands, as it would involve the cession to the Indians of the mineral rights in territory equivalent to one-third of the land, including the territory of Alaska. He charges that speculators had obtained already leases to much of the lands, and if the provision proposed by the committee was adopted the government would lose tens of millions of dollars. The resolution offered Wednesday by Mr Jones (Ark.), directing the committee on public lands to investigate the official conduct of Special Agent C. A. M. Schlierhoiz, who is charged with unlawfully seizing timber, was again considered.

HOUSE—On Thursday's session of the house further agreements upon the sundry civil bill were reported from the committee on conference and adopted and further conference upon the remaining points in difference was requested. A large number of bills of minor importance were passed and 63 pension and relief measures were disposed of pursuant to the recommendations reached last Friday in committee of the whole. Under the leadership of Representatives Cannon and Baker, (Ill.), a bill to restore Maj. Wham to his former rank and status in the army with all back pay and allowances, passed the house unanimously. Maj. Wham, who was in the gallery, at the moment, received many congratulations from members on the floor of the house. Upon Mr. Dingley's motion made early in the day the house at 4:28 adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—SENATE—The conference report on the bankruptcy bill was disposed of by the senate Friday without debate. At the request of senators, Mr. Nelson (Minn.) the author of the senate bankruptcy measure, made a brief explanation of the bill as agreed upon by the conferees. The report was agreed to by a vote of 43 to 13. The Hawaiian annexation resolutions were under discussion throughout the session, except during a brief time when routine business was disposed of. The speakers Friday were McEnery (dem., La.) who concluded his address Thursday, and Mr. Turley (dem., Tenn.) who presented a continuation of the argument for the resolutions. Three measures designed to facilitate the work of the war department were passed without controversy.

Historic Pt. Pleasant church was, on June 14th, the scene of a large and enthusiastic audience, assembled for the purpose of hearing a discourse delivered by Geo. P. Taubman, of Maysleick, Ky., upon "Our Inheritance." The church was tastefully decorated with our national colors, while Old Glory loomed up in the back ground in bold relief. Rev. Taubman is an eloquent speaker, and it was with great interest that every one listened as he spoke of the unbounded liberty and freedom enjoyed by the citizens of "our country," in contrast to those of many other nations. On the following night a much larger audience assembled, and was fully repaid for their trouble. The topic discussed was, "The Present Peril." Rev. Taubman is undoubtedly a patriotic citizen, and certainly spoke as one who knew, and it would be well for every voter in Boone county to heed his warning.

Juett, entertained at her handsome residence, Locust Grove, Thursday evening, June 16th, in honor of her charming and popular guest, Miss Kathryn Juett, of Eminence, Ky. Her parlors were brilliantly illumined and decorated for the occasion, and her beautiful lawn was a veritable fairyland made so by the soft, subdued light of many Japanese lanterns, and by the lovely maidens and gallant youths, flitting in and out in the brilliant scene. Delightful music was rendered during the entire evening, several eminent artists being present. Instrumental and vocal solos, violin, mandolin and piccolo. About eleven o'clock the guests were refreshed by a dainty repast served in a truly royal style on the vine-wreathed porches. The evening was one long to be remembered by those present, Miss Gordon being a charming, talented hostess, understanding well the art of making her guests enjoy themselves to the fullest extent.

The town is warming up around the edges, owing to the approaching local option election. We are not in possession of information that warrants any prediction as to the result, whether it will be wet or dry. The "wets" are claiming that they will win by a majority of 32, and the "drys" are claiming it by 25. Everybody, of course, has his idea about the result, about which there will be no mistake after July 2.

Union.

June 27.—The wheat crop in this precinct will be harvested by the time your paper goes to press.

Mr. and Mrs. John Garrison are visiting in Gallatin county.

The potato crop will be a matter of speculation as to size, style and general average.

Rob Newman's hogs have quit dying and he wears a 40x65 smile in consequence.

The ground seems cracked open as bad as during last year's drouth, and looks like a million barrels of water to the acre would abont quench its dryness.

Messrs. Kennedy and Voshell have built a line of wire fence between their farms, Pink Lunsford was master builder with Messrs. "Boliver" and Wilmot as assistants.

That times are improving in Boone county is evident to the least observing. Business is on the upward beat, stores, blacksmithshops, carriage shops, paint shops, butcher shops, drygoods shops, grocery shops and shops of every kind are doing a much better business than they have for several years. If the large wheat crop in sight is sold at $1 00 per bushel old Boone will get a building hustle on itself like it had 20 years ago. We are glad to note these signs of prosperity for it means more happiness and more comforts for everybody—we, us and company included.

Charley Baker opened up the '98 harvest campaign in a way peculiar to himself. First, he brought out his seven year old binder and rushed it a few rounds to find it n g, then he struck for Florence to find Rob Rice and buy a new one, Rob was near Hebron, but Charley followed and bought a machine. Wednesday the machine was put up and ready for work; Thursday he run it all day cutting over a large territory and late in the evening stopped to rest leaving the horses standing, went a short distance for something, when they decided to see how much faith could be placed in the statement made by the Deering Machine Co., that their machines are built on "scientific principles, combining the greatest strength with light draft and durability," and struck out at full speed across the field. After running some distance and while going at full tilt they ran into a stake and ridered rail fence, knocking it down in several places, finally landing in the hollow with broken rails and broken machine piled one on top of the other with the fence damaged about 50 per cent. more than the binder, however. Charley says the three strong horses carried the binder with terrific force and if the machine had not been powerfully built it would have been torn to splinters. He bought another binder (a Deering of course) and is going along as though nothing had occurred, only he don't leave his team standing alone any more.

The following is to correct some of the statements contained in an item last week's RECORDER copied from the Enquirer:

June 24.—I read a little article in your paper, today, in regard to Mr. Wm. Moore, which I want you to correct, and want you in your next paper to publish. Mr. Moore has not been confined to the house, not as long as the paper stated, and never has his mind been affected in the least, throughout his entire life. I have heard both his father and mother say that he was a very bright boy, and after he got his back hurt, that his mind was always strong, and clear from his youth up. He kept his father's accounts and interested himself in all his business.

MARION FRANCIS.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sheriff William E. Teke died suddenly at one o'clock Monday morning. He was taken with a severe cough and chill shortly before 11 o'clock Sunday night and Dr. Gatch was called to his bedside. Every exertion was made by the family and physician to relieve his sufferings but to no avail. He remained conscious to the last moment, sitting up in bed as owing to the nature of his trouble he was not able to lie down without fear of suffocation. About one o'clock while his anxious wife and daughter were aiding him to sit erect he fell back and expired. Mr. Teke had been in very poor health for the last two years, as was well known to his many friends. Shortly after he became Sheriff in November, 1896, he began to have marked symptoms of heart disease and his early decease was feared at that time.—Lawrenceburg Register.

The following is a synopsis of the decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Duval vs. The Union Central Life Insurance Co.:

"Where, by the terms of a policy of life insurance, the failure to pay a premium note at maturity worked a forfeiture of the policy without action upon the part of the company, there was no necessity of notice of forfeiture upon such failure to pay, and, as has been repeatedly held, the forfeiture clause being for the benefit of the company, it may waive such forfeiture and insist upon the collection of the note, and if it does so then the policy has not been forfeited, but remains in full force for the period specified therein."

A peddler struck Rising Sun the latter part of last week. Two of the resident toughs got in with him and discovered that he had about $90 in his possession, and they began devising plans for its capture, resolving to use rough means if necessary. Last Saturday they induced the peddler to imbibe rather freely, and managed to get him into an abandoned warehouse, were, after nearly beating the life out of the man, they took his money and attempted to make their escape. The peddler was able to give the alarm, and one of the highwaymen was soon captured, the other making his escape to this side of the river, where he was seen on Sunday lurking in the willows along the river shore.

Aurora was greatly shocked last Sunday evening when the report suddenly spread all over town that Elias Harwood had shot and killed his son-in-law, Ab Clark. The tragedy took place at the Harwood home where the two lived together, and was committed between six and seven o'clock.

It seems from the evidence given before the Coroner that a little family dispute about material contributing to the family support led to a quarrel of words that did not appear to be very hot but evidently caused the trouble that resulted in the death of Clark within a very few minutes. After the wrangle and possibly to avoid further trouble old man Harwood, who is 67 years old, left the house and went up the steps into his paint shop adjacent. Clark, who is reported to have been intoxicated, followed him, and as he started up the steps, George Walston, a brother-in-law, who was present called to him not to go up there. Clark muttered something which was not understood. Harwood called to him from the shop not to come up and as he went on Harwood poked a small flobert rifle out of the door and shot. The ball struck Clark in the corner of the left eye near the nose and passed through the brain to the base of the skull. Throwing up both hands he fell backward from the steps and in a few minutes was dead without utteriug a word. The tragedy is a very sad one indeed. The Harwood man is an old and respected citizen in feeble health and the people hope that he will be able on trial to prove a case of self defense. In his preliminary trial before Squire Baker, Tuesday afternoon, he was bound over for his appearance in court.—Aurora Independent.

THE FOURTH

GETTIN' near the Fourth agin; Sakes alive! how time does spin! Don't seem like it's sixty year Since I first begun to hear All the loud, triumphant noise 'At we made when we was boys— When we ust to wish 'at powder Was lots cheaper and lots louder.

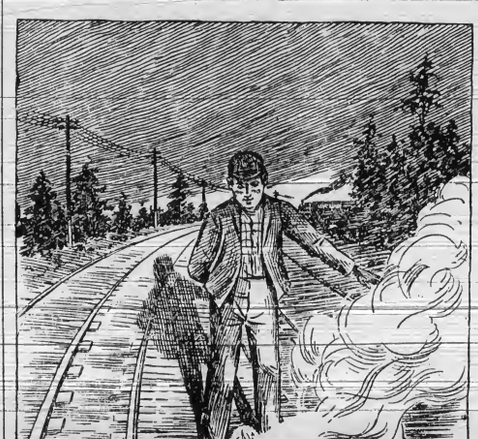
Recollect 'tth what delight Ust to stay up 'bout all night Helpin' 'em fire anvils, or Makin' other sounds o' war. Ust to wish the earth was drilled Out inside and powder-filled, And that I could somehow just Touch 'er off and hear 'er bust!

Was no cannon-crackers then; Kind o' wish they had a been. Then they would o' sounded sweet, Now they liff me off my feet. I've begun to think 'at noise Was created just for boys, And the Fourth don't seem to me Nice as what it ust to be.

Just as patriotic, still Somehow I don't catch the thrill O' the loud to-doin's like When I was a little tyke. Wasn't nothin' then but I Had a finger in the pie, But that finger, as you see, Got blowed off eventually. —Nixon Waterman, in L. A. W. Bulletin.

JOHNNIE DUCKWORTH'S RED LIGHT

JOHNNIE DUCKWORTH had the most exciting part of his Fourth of July celebration very early on the morning of the car-splitting day; even much earlier than that gray hour when you very smart birds were enjoying those worms of delicious joy—the first boom of the new cannon (which I hope will not explode in your faces before the day is over), and the rattle-te-bang of the first bunch of firecrackers, thrown maliciously under your poor uncle's window. Well, you see, your uncle is going to return good for evil (I hope you will think it is good!), and is going to tell you a story—tell you how it happened that Mr. Duckworth, Jr., was once on a time up and stirring in a lively manner about three o'clock a. m.



But first of all I must tell you who Johnnie was and where he lived. Johnnie's home was a wee little house, as neat as a pin and as yellow as a buttercup, that stood all alone on a small flat plain, a sort of clearing by the railroad, which was as hot as pepper in summer and as cold as Greenland in winter. From the windows on one side of this little house, built by our hero's father, could be seen the railroad tracks glistening at a short distance; and from the windows on the other side could be seen a narrow river that glistened far more charmingly. So Johnnie's mother had always thought, and invariably took her sewing to the window in the parlor, from which, when she raised her eyes from the enormous rents made by her son in his clothing, she could watch for a moment the peaceful, flowing water. Father Duckworth, however, always drew his chair to the opposite side of the room in his rare hours of leisure, and every now and then, dropping his paper into his lap, he would gaze out over his round glasses lovingly at the straight dashes of steel. His face would simply beam with delight when the house began to quiver gently, then to shake more and more violently and then to dance as a thundering train whizzed by. When a slow freight jangled over the tracks, he would lean out of the window and address funny remarks to the men on board, for Mr. Duckworth knew all the "hands." All his life he had worked repairing those rails, and he loved them—next to his wife and Johnnie. Mr. McKinley could not be prouder to be president than John Duckworth was to belong to the "section gang," a company of men employed to keep the tracks in order. He used to say to his son: "If your life is as straight and flawless and bright as them rails you'll reach the place I want you to get to all right. I'll be there to meet you and your good mother." Johnnie did not half understand this wise saying, yet he always looked politely solemn; but Mrs. Duckworth ever brought to earth this one flight of her husband's fancy by begging him not to make her so sad; and then she always added—partly, it would seem, as if to show her own ability for speaking fancifully—that she hoped Johnnie's life would be as deep and as clear as the river. So Johnnie grew up with a poetic awe for the river and the rails. He learned all about his father's business, and Mr. Duckworth took just pride in his son's knowledge. I doubt if many boys know as much about cars and engines and their "tricks and manners" as Johnnie knew.

After poor Mr. Duckworth had died of sunstroke while repairing some sleepers a few miles up the track at the little village station, Johnnie, although overwhelmed with grief, told his mother with pride that as soon as he was old enough he wanted her to make him some jumpers, and then he would take his father's place in the section gang and would support her. Mrs. Duckworth smiled through her tears, and was brave and patient for her boy's sake.

The months passed slowly by, and two years had gone since Mr. Duckworth's death, when my story begins. Through these years Johnnie had trudged regularly to the little schoolhouse, which was a long ways off, and was standing finely in his lessons; and his mother spent her time missing him and expecting him, and sewing to support him. Her neighbors used to ask why she didn't come off the plain and live among them, "more cozy like," where the trees grew, but both she and Johnnie felt it a duty to stay where they could watch the long sweep of railway track. Johnnie's interest in everything concerning the trains continued and grew, and the boys in the neighborhood used to laugh and call them his big pets.

Johnnie was a serious boy, and his father's death made him more so. He did not seem to care to play with other boys very much. His mother used to urge him to do so, saying that he was getting too old-fashioned, yet dreading all the time that he would follow her advice, for he was very companionable.

Johnnie was old-fashioned; but a boy would have been very old-fashioned indeed not to want to celebrate the Fourth of July royally. For this special Fourth that I am going to tell you about, Mrs. Duckworth had promised her son a dozen packages of little firecrackers and five packages of great big ones; but Johnnie, although he did not say anything, was not satisfied. What he wanted was a colored light, and he wanted it fervently and persistently. The year before one of the rich farmers celebrated the Fourth by a display of fireworks in the evening, the like of which Johnnie had never seen. The farmer had imported them from far New York. There were rockets and Roman candles and scintillating wheels, such as the little village way up in the north of the state had never had on the counter at one store. And, wonder of wonders! there were great lights, green and red, that lit up acres and acres of the farm, and even illuminated Johnnie's and his mother's faces as they sat on the little piazza of their home watching the distant show. The next day Johnnie asked in the village what the great lights were, and was told that they were called Grecian lights. Immediately the desire to possess so much glow seized Johnnie, and he resolved to have one himself the next year. His longing was so deep that somehow he could not tell anyone about it, not even his good mother. His secret had a charm for him. In the following spring he was still as enthusiastic, and he began to hoard the occasional pennies he made by one and another little service to the village folk. By the last week in June he had saved 18 cents, and was ready for his purchase. And now, how to secure the glorious brilliancy?

A BIG FLAME OF RED ROSE.

It had to be "imported." Johnnie asked a good and tried friend of his on the freight train bound for New York to get it for him. During the next week Johnnie's imagination worked so hard that he seemed to think his friend would return standing, like the Goddess of Liberty, on the freight car, holding aloft a whole sunset and sunrise of light. Silly Johnnie was so carried away by his fancy that he received a real shock when, on the day before the Fourth, Jim tossed him only a small package as the train slowly passed his house, calling out gayly: "Open your mouth and catch your light!"

Johnnie ran indoors in a state of great excitement and showed his treasure to his mother, who rejoiced with him in his happiness.

That night, just after he had blown out his candle, Johnnie was looking out of his window trying to decide whether the morrow would be fine or not. There was something in the air he did not like, and he saw that a storm was coming. The moon was shining, but there was a certain stiffness in the warm wind. The little river was running more swiftly than usual.

However, Johnnie could not feel that the Fourth would be unpleasant, and he began to think what he should do with his red light, and the splendid idea came to him to build a small raft and set the light on it, and then send it floating down the river. In fancy he could see it going its course, shining brightly and lighting up the trees on the opposite bank. And how surprised the little fish would be to find the river turning red! He wished he could see the fishes with their mouths wide open staring at his light—the little fish who didn't know anything about the Fourth. Johnnie did not need to be so patronizing in his feeling toward the fishes, for he himself did not know much more about the Fourth than that people always shot off firecrackers on that day. He was glad he had not gotten a green light, for it wouldn't make much contrast with the night, which is dark green. Then, as the water looks green anyway to the fishes (it must, for it looks so to people on land), why, they wouldn't be much surprised to see the river simply lightening—they would think it was morning. But think of the exquisite shock to each fishy heart to be awakened by a burst of rubiness overhead! Johnnie's head was sinking lower and lower on the window sill and his thoughts were getting very fantastic, as you see. Rousing himself, he slipped into his little bed and then put his hand up under the cool pillow to touch—the red light! Think of it—he had taken it to bed with him!

The wind, as Johnnie's senses were being stolen by the sandman, was increasing, and there was a distinct smell of rain in the air. The boy opened his eyes and looked out of the window. The wind seemed to be blowing the little fly-away sailboat of a moon over the green sky at a dashing rate. Johnnie thought the moon was a boat—I am not making him think so—and as he closed his eyes he wished he were in the boat and wondered if he should be able to hold the sheet of the golden sail in such a gale, and then he fell fast asleep.

It seemed to him that he had been sailing for some time when there was a stopping of all things, and he awoke with a start. It was at that solemn hour just before dawn. Johnnie crept to the window to see if there was now a promise of a fair day. The storm had ceased, but it must have been a furious one, for the firm little bridge that Mr. Duckworth had built over the river a few steps from the house was broken. Johnnie could plainly see the wreck in the clear night. Just then he heard a sound, a sound as big as a sigh, way off. It was the Canadian express whistling for a switch at the junction. The boy waited at the window to see it go by. Suddenly a thought flashed into his mind and his heart stopped beating. He slipped into his clothes in a twinkling and stole quickly downstairs and quietly out of the door, then scuttled over the plain to the place where the little river fell over the crest of a slight hill and then dashed under the railroad bridge. As Johnnie thought might be the case, the bridge was as much of a wreck as the little one was. The rails were twisted and lay like jackstraws among the jumbled wood. Johnnie heard the distant sigh again, and his heart beat wildly. What could he do? In a few minutes the express would come. Suddenly he thought of the red light under his pillow. Taking a full breath, he ran home. He heard the sigh again, but no nearer. "It hasn't started! It hasn't started!" he thought. "There's still time, still time!" In a minute he was again in his room, and had the light and some matches in his hand. It seemed ages to him. He heard the faint sound again, but nearer this time. "Oh, it's started! God help me!" he gasped, as he fled out into the thinning darkness again. He did not go to the bridge, as you may suppose, but ran at full speed up the track toward the sound, for well he knew that the express couldn't stop short of half a mile at the least. On, on he sped. At last the right distance was reached. And now the whistle sounded clear, some way down round the bend. Johnnie put the light in the middle of the track and struck a match on the rail, but the rail was wet from the rain and the match flickered and went out. Nearer and nearer came the thunder and shrill sounds. Johnnie gasped and struck another match on the case of the red light. This time he was successful. He touched the match to the powder. There was a sputter, then another sputter, and then a big flare of red arose and spread up and over the plain, just as the headlight of the locomotive rounded the curve.

Waving wildly, Johnnie sprang back from the track. To his joy he heard the air brakes scrape and the steam escaping. The great train passed on, but at a lessened rate of speed. After it our young hero ran pell-mell. He saw the sparks belching out of the engine's chimney, and saw that the train had stopped near his home. When he came up to it, he found the men walking about with lanterns, and asking what was the matter. Imagine their amazement when a small boy of ten explained all to them. Think of the cheers that rang out in the gray air! and of how the question, put by one conductor: "What's the matter with Johnnie Duckworth?" was answered with a roar: "HE's all right!" Mrs. Duckworth was awakened by the snorting locomotive, and heard the cheers, in which she seemed to distinguish her son's name. Johnnie saw first a light in his mother's room, and directly there was a light in the parlor and the front door opened. He called feebly, "Mother!" for the terrible nervous strain he had been under was beginning to tell upon him. Some of the men heard his little cry, and gently raised him on their shoulders and carried him to her, cheering and cheering again. Many of the men passengers went along with them. They mounted the steps, and then in a short word or two told what had happened, for their little rescuer needed care. "Mr. Duckworth over again" had fainted. Several of the men stayed with the anxious mother, and the others went away and stood at a distance waiting to hear news of the boy. Soon tidings were brought that he was all right, and then another long cheer rent the air. Johnnie heard it and smiled at his mother, who was hugging him and crying and laughing at the same instant.

The section gang was summoned and the bridge repaired in two or three hours.

Johnnie was well enough to be taken out on to the piazza to see the express steam away with everyone leaning out of the windows or standing on the platforms waving and shouting to him and his mother.

While the repairs were being made Mrs. Duckworth received gentlemen after gentleman. They made every kind of grateful offer to the proud mother, but she refused them all with quiet dignity, saying that her son had but done his duty, and he would be repaid for having done so, a very long time off, she hoped, when he should reach the terminus where his father was already. They appreciated her feeling, and honored her too much to insist. Nothing, however, prevented the president of the road, who was informed of Johnnie's bravery, from seeing that he had a splendid start in the railroad business he so much loved, and in which he has now a position such as Mr. Duckworth, Sr., had never in his most hopeful moments dreamed of for his son.

After breakfast on the Fourth Johnnie and his mother went to see what was left of the red light. A little charred board was all that remained. Johnnie took this home as a memento, and then went about setting off his firecrackers like any other small boy, almost forgetting the big thing he and his red light had done.—James Pennington, in N. Y. Examiner.

What He Would Like.

A man who looked the picture of melancholy and physical discomfort was sitting on the front step of a store which had been closed in honor of Independence day. Every time a patriotic explosion occurred he gave a nervous jump.

"What's the matter?" said his friend. "Aren't you going to join in the festivities?"

"No. I don't like gunpowder."

"But isn't there anything that you'd enjoy? This is a holiday, you know, and a little innocent diversion is only appropriate."

"Yes, there's one form of sport that would suit me first-class."

"What is that?"

"I'd like to go somewhere and throw snowballs."—Washington Star.

ON THE FOURTH.

As dawns the happy season
With its wealth of wasted thumbs,
The small boy counts it treason
If a quiet moment comes.

Our Flag.

Sing a song for the flag of the Stars and the Stripes!
The flag of the Red and the Blue!
The flag which will live while the ages shall last,
Because founded on bravery so true!
'Tis the flag of our country, the "Flag of the free!"
The flag of our "Union forever!"
The flag that is bound to Am-erica's heart
With a tie which no hardship can sever.
Fling it out to the breezes in village and town,
The sign of the mountain and plain!
It will tell its own story wherever 'tis seen,
And tell not the story in vain.
Give cheers for the flag! give cheers for the "Boys"
Who bore it through havoc and woe
For the sake of the freedom it won for us all
In the years that have passed long ago!

HOW MONOMETALLISM WORKS.

What Was Done by Demoting Silver from Its Debt-Paying Function Among Nations.

From the great gold discoveries in the middle of this century down to the end of the third quarter the world was content with its progress. Huge strides were made in invention, which revolutionized the conduct of human affairs, but with the beginning of the fourth quarter of the century there were strange complaints.

In 1876 there was a select committee appointed by parliament in England and a similar one in the United States to inquire into the depreciation of silver. In 1878 and again in 1881 the nations conferred together upon the advisability of restoring silver to its ancient place. In 1885 there was appointed in England a commission on the depression of trade. In 1886 there was a gold and silver commission appointed in Great Britain.

In 1892 another international conference was held. In 1895 England appointed a commission to inquire into the depression of agriculture. In 1896 an international congress of agriculture met at Buda-Pesth and declared that agricultural depression prevailed in the entire gold-using world.

What is this new symptom in the affairs of men? Why was there prosperity in the third quarter and depression in the last quarter of the same century?

In answer we must consider one vital change which distinguishes the two periods. In the latter period, by the voluntary act of the civilized nations, practically all the new supply of precious metals has been cut off. One metal has been deposed from its debt-paying function, while of the other metal, gold, hardly enough has been produced each year to supply the arts and make up the wear and tear of the existing coins.

Thus, by one stroke, the increase of metallic money of full debt-paying power was practically stopped, and the inevitable result began. Population was increasing, and production was swelling, while the existing monetary supply must suffice to do the added work. As such decreasing supply must measure also the increasing products it need not be said that these products measured in money became steadily cheaper.

A period of falling prices began, which has continued with comparative steadiness. It is not denied that the staple products of the world have fallen yearly in money value, until they are now about one-half as valuable as they were 24 years ago. This statement, to those who view it carelessly, may seem a harmless proposition, but it involves civilization itself.

Without endeavoring to enter into extended argument, it may not be without profit to ask every business man to put to himself some plain and simple questions concerning the force of falling prices, which will be found at the end, perhaps, of a still sadder experience to be mightier even than the cannon and the sword.

According to the chart of prices, which is universally accepted, the average of prices of the staple articles of commerce fell during the year 1894 ten per cent.

Let it be assumed that you, at the beginning of 1894, were a producer of cloth at 100 cents per yard in the market, which fell to 90 cents at the end of the year. At the beginning of the year you borrowed $10,000, which would purchase, at 100 cents, 10,000 yards of the product. At the end of the year you pay your debt and must sell 11,111 yards at 90 cents for the purpose.

Here, in some manner, there has been taken from you 1,111 yards of your goods, which at 90 cents a yard, represented $1,000 of money. Who has gained this? Surely no one else than the money lender. With the fall in goods your 10,000 yards will exchange for as many goods at the end of the year as at the beginning. In the exchange of goods, therefore, you suffer no loss, but when you pay your debt you find that money alone has not shared the fall.

When you buy money to pay your debt, you pay in goods 1,111 yards more than were due when you borrowed the money. Among your companions in industry you can exchange products on the same basis as before. Only one thing demands more at the end of the year, and that is money.

Has there been, indeed, a great conspiracy of all the great staple products to fall in price which money has not joined? It is, in fact, the banker from whom you borrow who alone requires more products in payment. By what right does he justify his gain? Has dead money any right which live labor must respect?

GEORGE FRED WILLIAMS.

——From a democratic standpoint nothing could be more desirable than the announced policy of Hon. Mark Hanna to glut his vengeance on the Ohio republican convention at Columbus. If his programme be carried out—if the Kurtz-McKisson delegates are uncated and Gov. Bushnell is insulted by being ignored in the platform—there will not be enough left of the republican ticket this fall to furnish material for a decent wake. Let Marcus prance gayly on. He cannot be ousted from his seat in the senate, but he can work his own ruin as boss of Ohio. And a national boss who doesn't control his own state doesn't last long. Mark's fondness for a club as a political argument will accomplish his undoing and that is the consummation to be wished.—Chicago Chronicle.

——Mark Hanna has advanced $40,000 with which to pay the Ohio troops. We have here more evidence that Mark is not only bigger than the governor at Columbus, but also that he is more plethoric than the government at Washington.—St. Lotis Republic.

DOLLARS THAT ARE DEAR.

The Gold Standard Is Constantly Stealing from the People Like a Thief in the Night.

They say you ought not to agitate. It is a poor cause that will shirk inquiry. The cause that dreads investigation needs it. Of course, the burglar with his pistol at your head, will advise you to be quiet until his contemplated operations are peacefully performed. He is against agitation.

The testimony of the Lexow committee showed that Mr. Havemeyer and Mr. Searles are against agitation. "Why," said they—you remember the testimony; I do not quote it literally, but what they said in effect was this: "If this kind of thing keeps on, if every legislature that meets is going to appoint a commission to investigate capital, capital will get timid, and capital will move out and leave you alone without any capital."

"To be sure, the testimony showed that we formed this combination for the purpose of forestalling the market, of ruining competition and of placing the great consuming masses of the people absolutely at our mercy. That is true; but when it appears to be true it discourages us, and therefore you have got to stop this investigation business or it will have a serious reflex action upon the prosperity of the country."

Now, the greatest trust of all is the money trust.

The people of the United States are aroused. Demos has been asleep for a generation. He has awakened, and the continent shakes under his tread. Let the oppressor beware, for the day of accounting is at hand. The common patriotism of the American people can be depended upon when the issue has been once made clear.

All great political questions finally come to wear a moral complexion, and then they are soon settled. And they are settled right, or you and I must believe in a malevolent instead of a merciful God. They must bring checks—say, whole three—to prove that slavery was an economic mistake; and the people went on with their business, and slavery grew.

But when some devout, earnest, sincere men drove home to the public conscience that slavery was morally wrong, from that moment the institution was doomed.

We may also make long speeches and write thick treatises to show how the parity of the metal may be maintained and give crowded statistics of the production of gold and silver and the history of prices.

But when the people of this great nation shall finally have made up their minds that the gold standard, as unperceived as a thief in the night, is constantly stealing from one man for the benefit of another, stealing from the man who is least able to lose anything and giving it to a man who least needs to have anything bestowed upon him; when they begin to see that the gold standard is an instrument of oppression and moral wrong and without defense, then the American people will rise and put down not only the leather trust, the sugar trust, the coffee trust and all the other trusts in trade, but also the greatest trust of all, that trust which controls the money, the ultimate money of the world.

FARM & GARDEN.

ROADS AND SIDEPATHS.

The Latter Are a Permanent Illustration of the Advantages Conferred by Easy Transportation.

It is now about 12 years since wheelmen began the agitation for better highways. The subject then was of no general interest, and had, up to that time, received no attention, except in a few favored localities where wealthy towns had begun to improve their streets. It is true that quite a reputation had been gained for these villages, but their example had not induced others to make similar improvements.

Of all travelers, the cyclist is best fitted to notice and appreciate the condition of the highways, and it may be truly said that though, in 1886, his seat on the high wheel elevated him above the lowly position of to-day, he was much more likely to come into intimate personal contact with road surfaces than he is at present. His observation and experience soon convinced him that highways were generally badly made and poorly kept, and that their improvement would be a distinct public gain.

AN IDEAL ROAD.

The public at first regarded the wheelman's advocacy of better roads as a purely selfish move, and this idea has not even yet been wholly dissipated; but so much investigation and discussion have followed in the wake of persistent agitation by cyclists and other good roads advocates, that it is now fairly evident to a considerable part of the community that the welfare of all classes would be promoted in many ways through the establishment and maintenance of firm, permanent roadways.

The wheelman, for his part, is better equipped to traverse poor roads now than he was prior to 1890, for low bicycles and pneumatic tires place him at a great advantage as compared with high machines and hard tires of the earlier date. If he possessed no public spirit, his interest in promoting further improvements might languish, but he is still found in the fore-front of the agitation, and is sure to remain there.

It is not to be denied, however, that the work he undertook, and is so active in promoting, has its discouragements, and that he is sometimes almost tempted to leave it entirely to others, who are, or should be, more deeply interested in it. Nevertheless, he remains loyal to it, and will continue to do so until full success is achieved.

But, having gone thus far, and accomplished so much, in a general way, it cannot be considered strange, or disloyal to the good roads cause, if wheelmen give more heed to their immediate interests, especially in places in which it is thus far impossible to secure action on the highways. There are still many localities in which roads and paths are unfit for bicycles to travel over through a good portion of the year, and are at no time good, and it is not only desirable, but eminently right and proper, that riders of cycles should endeavor to provide decent pathways for themselves under such circumstances.

There is no conflict in the two ideas. Hard highways are a natural necessity. They must eventually come. Many steps toward securing them have been taken, but many more remain, and in the undertaking there will be no harder or more faithful workers than the wheelmen of the country.

But smooth side-paths are the only source of enjoyable riding for thousands of wheelmen scattered throughout the land, and are of deep importance to them. Their construction not only confers upon such cyclists a prompt and considerable benefit, but gives to others a permanent illustration of the advantages conferred by means of rapid locomotion and transportation, thus influencing on observers one of the fundamental reasons for the existence of good roads.—L. A. W. Bulletin.

Aeration of Milk Pays.

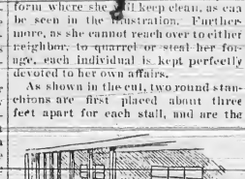
Our personal practice for some years in preparing milk for bottling shows conclusively that the passing of a current of cold, pure air, washed in the way suggested from every particle of dust or impurity, did have a good result, which was proved by the fact that; milk so air washed, as we might say, kept sweet in the equally well-prepared bottles for four days longer than the unaerated milk. This practical evidence of the advantage of proper aeration and cooling by pure cold air goes to show that if well done in a scientific manner the aeration of milk is useful for this purpose at least; and if so, it may well be believed that it will be found useful to the butter maker.—Journal of Agriculture.

SPLENDID FOR STOCK.

Sugar Beets is an Excellent Feed for Dairy Cows and for Ewes with Lambs.

If the beet sugar factories do not prove a good market for the sugar beets, we think those farmers who have dairy herds and no silo will find the beets actually worth more than the factories have offered to pay for feeding out to cows, young stock and stock hogs. Two acres of sugar beets with a good crop should be about right to use up for a herd of 10 or 12 cows. Perhaps the chemist may not find a nutritive value of $5 per ton, as compared with hay, when prices are low, but no small part of the actual value of the beet is its effect upon the digestion of other foods. The coarse forage seems to be more thoroughly digested, and more grain can be fed without danger of any overfeeding.

In some sections where the beet factories are at work the large stock feeders have made arrangements to put the refuse from the beets into silos, or to pit it in some way for their cattle feeding. As waste material it is sold very cheap, and one grower is reported as saying he expected to make more from what he had bought of this material than all the farmers would make upon their beet crops. Yet we believe it more valuable for milch cows than for fattening stock, or believe that the whole beets are so, and how the ewes with lambs would give milk upon such food!



Those who believe that roots are more valuable for feeding stock when they are cooked before being used, would find this beet pomace, or refuse, to their liking, but we do not think it any better, or quite as good as the raw roots, sliced to make them more easily eaten, and with a little meal scattered over them to make them more palatable. In fact, roots, like silage, contain so much moisture that some grain should always be fed with them, whether cooked or raw.—Journal of Agriculture.

CHAIN COW STANCHION.

Dairymen Who Have Tried It Have Nothing But Good Words to Say for It.

Having had various inquiries of late as to the value of chain stanchion for cattle and how it works, I beg to state that the method is very highly approved by the majority of dairymen. The chief objection to it is its rigidity and vise-like grip; but in some respects this is no worse than that of wooden stanchions, while, on the other hand, the cow has free motion of the head to either side, can lie down and get up easily, and having but very little motion forward or back, must remain on the place form where she will keep clean, as can be seen in the illustration. Furthermore, as she cannot reach over to either neighbor, to quarrel or steal her forage, each individual is kept perfectly devoted to her own affairs.

As shown in the cut, two round stanchions are first placed about three feet apart for each stall, and are the only indications of subdivisions or stalls in the stable. Then a chain about 18 inches long and having a snap at one end, is attached by a ring to each stanchion and the two made fast to the ring in the "necklace"—a sort of collar which goes around the animal's throat and fastens—having very little slack. The stanchion should be of hard wood, and round and smooth, so that the rings will easily slide up and down, but not down farther than within a foot of the floor. Thus, by having feed in the manger, the animals can be readily secured at their proper places on coming into the stable.—Ohio Farmer.

Cheese for Home Use.

It is surprising that farmers do not use more cheese. It is a healthy and nutritious article of food, and can be made far more cheaply than nitrogenous nutrition can be supplied in any other form. Another reason why farmers should use more cheese is that it will prevent the glut in prices of milk which every year causes so many farmers to sell milk at a loss. Such farmers do, we think, get in the habit of making more or less cheese, and their tables are well supplied. It is the farmers with only one or two cows who use less cheese. We used to make cheese on a farm when we had only two cows, putting night and morning's milk together in a single cheese.—American Cultivator.

Dainty Butter Packages.

Dairymen able to prepare their goods in an attractive manner will find customers in even small villages, where others cannot make sales. The appearance pleases, and when the quality is found as good as the looks, the market becomes permanent. A cake of good butter, wrapped in fresh parchment paper, with a bright trade-mark and the owner's name upon it, will bring more for the half pound or the pound than a chunk of the same make cut out of a tub. A red ribbon tied around the wrapper will help to sell every cake so wrapped before one of the same lot not so wrapped can be disposed of. To please the eye it is necessary to reach the palate sometimes.—Prairie Farmer.

The navy bean is a fairly remunerative crop, and will grow between the corn rows, after the corn has been laid by.

ENLISTING OF VOLUNTEERS.

Rules Issued by War Department for Recruiting of Regiments to Their Full Capacity.

The war department has issued instructions for the guidance of the officers of the volunteer army detailed to recruit for their own organizations or to fill them to the maximum number under the second call of the president for 75,000 men. Applicants for enlistment must be between 18 and 45 years old, of good character and habits, ablebodied, free from disease, and must be able to speak the English language. Married men will be enlisted only upon the approval of the regimental commander. Minors must not be enlisted without the written consent of a parent or guardian. The term of service is two years. For infantry and artillery the weight must be not less than 120 and not more than 190 pounds, and for cavalry the weight is not to exceed 165 pounds, though recruiting officers are authorized in their discretion to accept desirable applicants ten pounds or less over weight or under weight.

For a regiment the maximum of all grades; commissioned and enlisted, must not exceed 1,326 infantry or 1,335 in cavalry.

For a company the maximum of all grades is 106 in infantry, 100 in cavalry, 173 in field artillery and 200 in heavy artillery. Wherever practicable the choice by an accepted applicant of a particular company of the regiment or other organization should be respected.

IN GOOD CONDITION.

Mild Winter Favors the Animals of the Yellowstone National Park—A Report.

Secretary Bliss has received from Lieut. G. W. Cross, acting superintendent of Yellowstone national park, a report on the condition of the animals there. The report states that the winter was very mild, and as a consequence the wild animals are in better condition than usual. The buffalo number between 20 and 40, and, while doing better than heretofore, it cannot be said they find the location favorable. The weather is too cold in the park and their young are threatened by wild beasts. The other protected animals have increased, and but one case of poaching was discovered. This was in December last, when 13 elk were killed. At least one of the poachers, it is hoped, will be punished. Seven bears suffered an extraordinary fate in Death gulch, where they were found dead by a guide. He went down to where they lay to eat of their claws, but in three minutes was so overcome by gas arising from the ground as to become very faint. It was evident that the bears had been killed by this gas.

CALIFORNIA NOT KICKING.

Why She Is Willing to Send Her Coast Defense Vessels to Aid Admiral Dewey.

Senator Perkins telegraphed from Washington to President Craig, of the chamber of commerce, as follows:

"I think the people of California should protest against the sailing away from the Pacific coast of the Monterey, Monadnock and all other armored war vessels."

To this Mr. Craig sent the following reply:

"We protested on the 12th of April. In the meantime Dewey has acquired for California a new outlet for our energies, employment for our shipping, business for our merchants, and has opened a colonizing future far beyond our most ardent expectations. We of San Francisco will hold nothing back which may be of service to the administration, even to our jeopardy."

Hindoo Mail Carrying.

The postal service of India extends as far north as Kolghur, a village of the Himalayas. Beyond this point a letter is sent by a native runner, who carries the missive for days in the split end of a stick, and delivers it at the end of his journey as clean as when he received it.

DOWN ON THE FADS.

Mr. Stately Believed in Bringing Young People Down to a Business Basis.

"Mrs. Stately," began her husband, the other evening, "you're a good deal of what they term a faddist. It has been my rule to humor all your eccentricities, but from this time on, unless I find good and sufficient reason to change my mind, the education of our children is to be of the most practical nature possible."

"Just as you say."

"I understand that Loretta studied botany for three years, yet last season she went out to gather some greens and brought in the worst collection of weeds I ever saw outside of a bankrupt farm. They would have poisoned a mule. Yesterday this botanist sat in the parlor, bolstered with cushions, reading trash three inches thick and in fine print at that, while you were in the back yard setting out sweet peas. Isabel went through the cooking department from potato paring to fine pastries, and yet you can't keep her in the kitchen long enough to prepare a soft-boiled egg. Tom went in for higher mathematics, and yet he can't figure the simple interest on a promissory note for more or less than a single year, and when I blow around about the constellations and about the direct communication with Mars, but I'll bet a farm he couldn't keep his own personal accounts on a single entry system. He's never going to locate in Mars, and there's not a dollar in the constellations for him. We'll just bring these young people down to a business basis, and when they know enough to help themselves, as they'll have to when you and I wear out, they can do their fad chasing. And that's the word with the bark on, mother."—Detroit Free Press.

A NAVAL HERO'S STORY.

From the Times-Herald, Chicago, Ill.

Late in 1861, when President Lincoln issued a call for volunteers, L. J. Clark, of Warren, Trumbull Co., Ohio, was among the first to respond. He joined the mortar fleet of Admiral Porter just before the memorable operations on the Mississippi River began. It was at the terrific bombardment of the Vicksburg forts that the hero of this story fell with a shattered arm from a charge of schrapnel.

After painful months in the hospital he recovered sufficiently to be sent to his home at Warren, Ohio. Another call for troops fired his patriotic zeal and Clark soon enlisted in Company H of the 7th Ohio Volunteers. In the army of the Potomac he was in many engagements. Being wounded in a skirmish near Richmond, he was sent to the hospital and thence home.

A Wounded Hero

Soon after he began the study and then the practice of veterinary surgery. Seeking a wider field than the town afforded, he went to Chicago, where he now has a wide practice, is a member of Hatch Post, G. A. R., and lives at 4033 Ashland Ave.

Several years ago Dr. Clark's old wounds began to trouble him. He grew weak and emaciated, and his friends despaired of his life. He finally recovered sufficiently to be out, but was a mere shadow, weighing only 96 pounds. The best medical attendance failed to restore his lost strength and vigor.

"A friend gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," said Dr. Clark, "and they helped me so much that I bought a half dozen boxes and took them. I soon regained my strength, now weigh 150 pounds and, except for injuries that can never be remedied, am as well as ever.

"I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People the best remedy to build up a run down system, and heartily recommend them to everyone in need of such aid."

Why She Didn't Marry.

It was all the photographer's fault that Miss Vanderbeckon didn't marry. She looked beautiful in the portrait she sent out to India, and all the men in her brother-in-law's regiment were wooing about her. Till somebody spied out at the back of the photo what that silly camera fellow had written. "The original is carefully preserved."—Household Words.

MRS. LUCY GOODWIN

Suffered four years with female troubles. She now writes to Mrs. Pinkham of her complete recovery. Read her letter:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I wish you to publish what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Sanative Wash and Liver Pills have done for me.

I suffered for four years with womb trouble. My doctor said I had falling of the womb. I also suffered with nervous prostration, faint, all-gone feelings, palpitation of the heart, bearing-down sensation and painful menstruation. I could not stand but a few minutes at a time.

When I commenced taking your medicine I could not sit up half a day, but before I had used half a bottle I was up and helped about my work.

I have taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used one package of Sanative Wash, and am cured of all my troubles. I feel like a new woman. I can do all kinds of housework and feel stronger than I ever did in my life. I now weigh 131½ pounds. Before using your medicine I weighed only 108 pounds.

Surely it is the grandest medicine for weak woman that ever was, and my advice to all who are suffering from any female trouble is to try it at once and be well. Your medicine has proven a blessing to me, and I cannot praise it enough.—Mrs. LUCY GOODWIN, Holly, W. Va.

COULD SCARCELY RAISE HIS HAND.

Yet took care of seventy head of stock.

The farmer who found a Friend.

Serious results often follow a strain, especially when it affects the back, and few people are so liable to strain as those who are lifting heavy loads of various kinds, from day to day. The teamster rarely ever overtaxes his strength. Familiarity with the class of wares he handles, enables him to entirely gage the load he lifts so as not to put an excessive burden on himself. But with the farmer it is different. He is lifting loads of such varying weights and under such varying conditions that he is very liable to lift a little too much some day, with injurious results. Many serious affections of the great organs of the body originate in a strain. It was so in the case of H. R. W. Bedley, of Towner, North Dakota. A strain resulted in serious trouble with the liver. How he recovered and was enabled to feed seventy head of stock during the winter, let him tell in his own words:

"About a year ago, I sustained an injury in my back and shoulders by lifting a heavy weight. After a time, a liver trouble came on, which so weakened me that I could scarcely lift my hand to my head. While in this condition, I began the use of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued until I was cured of my complaint, so that I was able to take care of seventy head of stock all through the winter, which shows that the cure was not temporary but permanent."—H. R. W. BEDLEY, Towner, N. D.

The action of Dr. Ayer's Pills on the liver makes them invaluable for those living in malarial climates. C. F. Alston, Quitman, Texas, writes:

"I have found in Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills an invaluable remedy for constipation, biliousness, and kindred disorders, peculiar to miasmatic localities. Taken in small and frequent doses, these pills act well on the liver, aiding it in throwing off malarial poisons, and restoring its natural powers. I could not dispense with the use of Dr. Ayer's Pills."—C. F. ALSTON, Quitman, Tex.

Dr. Ayer's Pills are a specific for all diseases of the liver, stomach, and bowels, they promote digestion, cure constipation and its consequences, and promote the general health of the entire system. They should always be used with Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla when a cathartic is required. More about the pills in Dr. Ayer's Curebook, sent free. Address the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

SIEGE OF MANILA IN 1762.

It Surrendered to English Troops After Twelve Days.

Commodore Dewey's recent victory over the Spanish fleet in Manila harbor will give interest to the following account of its siege and capture by the English army and fleet in 1762, taken in the main from Mayo's "Compendious View of Universal History," from 1753 to 1802, published in 1804.

The Earl [illegible] ambassador to Spain left Madrid in December, 1761, and active hostilities commenced early in 1762. Col. Draper, who had served with distinguished honor in the war in the Carnatic, had passed some time in Canton in China, for the recovery of his health. He had there made himself acquainted with the state of the Philippines, then ill-provided for defense. By his advice an expedition was planned against Luzon, the most important island; and an armament, consisting of a squadron commanded by Admiral Cornish and about 2,500 land forces under Col. Draper, was fitted out from Madras for that purpose. The landing being effected, the commanders advanced toward Manila, and the marquis of Villa Medina, the governor, was summoned to surrender. Confident in the strength of the place, which was regularly fortified and garrisoned with 800 Europeans, the marquis resolutely refused.

The garrison having been repulsed in a sally, batteries were erected and the siege was commenced. The difficulties were increased by the violent rain which fell while they were preparing for the attack; but, in spite of this, their operations were carried on with great success. When the governor saw that his works were no longer tenable with so small a force against the resolute attacks of his enemy, he determined on another sally, as his last effort. This was made with great vigor and address; the besiegers being attacked in the night by surprise, by almost the whole garrison, supported by a body of Malaccese, who charged with all the savage ferocity which marks their character. Repulsed in their first attack, they renewed it with redoubled fury, but were driven back to their works with considerable loss on both sides.

The fire from the batteries was then recommenced with great effect, and the Spanish cannon were soon silenced.

Finding that the governor was determined to hold out, even after a breach was made, the British commanders ordered a general assault, which proved effectual. The governor retiring to the citadel, the citizens were exposed for some hours to the ravages of the besiegers; but having testified his loyalty by his ill-judged perseverance, he was at last obliged, October 6, 1762, after a siege of 12 days, to surrender his garrison as prisoners of war and to agree to the payment of $4,000,000 as a ransom for the city. The payment of this sum, however, is said never to have been completely made.

These successes were rendered more effectual by the subsequent occurrences at sea. In expectation of meeting a rich Acapulco ship, two men-of-war were sent out by the admiral, which, in their cruise for her, captured the Santa Trinidada, bound for Mexico, and the Hermione, from Lima, with bullion and merchandise to a vast amount on board.

Manila was held by Great Britain for 15 months and restored to Spain by the treaty of Paris, in 1763.—N. Y. Times.

SIZE OF THE SEA.

Interesting Figures Pertaining to the Waters of the Ocean.

Here are a few facts about the sea for your scrapbook:

The Pacific covers 68,000,000, the Atlantic 30,000,000 and the Indian ocean, Arctic and Antarctic 42,000,000.

To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to make a tank one mile long, one mile wide and one mile deep every day for 440 years. Put in figures, the Pacific holds in weight 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons. It would take about 1,000,000 years for all its water to pass over the falls of Niagara.

The average depth of the Atlantic is not quite three miles. Its waters weigh 325,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its six sides 430 miles long. The figures of the other oceans are in the same startling proportions. It would take all the sea water in the world about 2,000,000 years to flow over Niagara. A tank to hold it all would have to measure nearly 1,000 miles along each of its sides.—N. Y. World.

Wealth of the Pope.

The pope is one of the wealthiest men in the world. In his home, the vatican, a palace which contains 7,000 rooms, the worth of gold objects stored is estimated at £4,000,000 by weight alone, and each piece has been increased in value a quarter or a third by the skillful artisans through whose hands it has passed. These treasures are practically the personal estate of the pope.

SPANISH AIR CASTLES.

Two Noblemen That Figured on Their Division of the Spoils of War.

Counts de Dos Toros and Hijo Grande sat together in the latter gentleman's ancient hall sipping Spanish claret and building castles in America,

Said De Dos Toros: "I have already petitioned his majesty to grant me an estate in America. I will fight for his majesty and help him whip that pig country."

He blew a thin thread of smoke from his lips and watched it curl upward toward the armorial bearings over the fireplace. Count Hijo Grande sighed, holding his claret glass to the light.

"I, too, have asked a like favor of his majesty," he murmured.

For awhile they sat silent, heavy with meditation. Then spoke De Dos Toros: "These, our estates near Valencia border on one another—let it be so in America. I will ask his majesty to give up to me Chicago. Count de Dos Toros de Chicago. How is that?"

The other aristocratic face brightened with the glow of a beautiful idea.

"Then I will have New York. I will be Count Hijo Grande de New York, and we will continue to be neighbors."

They lifted their glasses and gulped the claret, smiling in spite of it.

"There is a divine beverage to that pig country," said De Dos Toros. "It is called club cocktails; we will presently be drinking that."

Hijo Grande relit his cigar, though it was burned to the butt.

"Good," said he; "and we will sail about the Mississippi in a yacht now owned by that pig Vanderbilt. I think the Mississippi is in your land."

"Verily," replied his friend, "and those dogs of Cubans must return to their business of growing tobacco for us."

The serene faces of 27 ancestors gazed down at De Dos Toros with a smile of approbation on their haughty lips.

"The king," said Hijo Grande, "will make the capitol his summer resort. I myself would fain put up for awhile at the treasury."

He spread his slim hands on the table beside the decanter of sour claret.

"My brother, pray advance me 30 peseta pieces," he murmured.

Count de Dos Toror de Chicago smote his pocket.

"I cannot," he cried in consternation, "I have but seven."—Criterion.

A PICTURESQUE COSTUME.

Dresses Worn by New Haven Fishwives That Are Very Becoming.

The ordinary dress of the fishwife consists of from three to nine woolen petticoats, reaching about half-way from the knee to the ankle and measuring at least three yards in width. All the under ones have a tuck an inch and a half deep run all the way round the top about an eighth of a yard below the waistband. This is done for the purpose of making a more solid support for the basket upon which the creel rests.

Each fishwife, rich or poor, is the possessor of three gay petticoats, which are worn over the dark flannel ones; the foundation is white and all are marked with broad vertical stripes of a solid, vivid coloring, red, yellow, or blue. Each one has a wide tuck about six inches from the bottom. The bodices are loose jackets, "shugnuns," or short gowns, made of bright-figured cambric or calico, and confined at the waist by the apron strings; the sleeves are made of a square of the cambric reaching nearly to the wrists, but they are nearly always rolled over two or three times until they come only to the elbow. A bright ribbon confines the garment at the neck and finishes it with a bow and ends. The apron is long and full; the lower edge and the outer skirt are pinned together at the bottom and caught up to the hips on either side, which adds to the width, making the woman look broader than ever. A separate pocket fastened with a draw-string is worn underneath the apron; this is the fishwife's bank, where she carries the money of the family, which is always given into her keeping. Thick worsted stockings and heavy, high boots complete, with the exception of the headgear, a picturesque and very becoming costume.—Laura B. Starr, in Chautauquan.

Highest Bridge in Europe.

The bridge over the Wupperthal at Mungsten, Germany, which was opened to railway traffic on July 1, 1897, is 360 feet high, 1,630 feet long, and has a central span of 530 feet, it being the highest European bridge, with the exception of the Garabit viaduct in southern France, which is 405 feet in height.

What She Calls Him.

"My wife calls me down, generally," replied Mr. Beechwood.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

SCHLEY AND THE GAS MAN.

Story Showing That the Commodore Was Ready with His Fists.

Commodore Schley is a man of the highest moral courage. He is strong and vigorous in thought and action. He is a man of great physical as well as moral courage. He is an excellent example of physical bravery. This was well illustrated on one occasion, in the course of my service with him, relates Edson Brace, in the St. Louis Republic. With his wife and daughter, the commodore occupied a handsome house on Sixteenth street, in Washington. The instance that I allude to was in the summer of 1889. The commodore had sent his wife and daughter for the customary summer outing to Newport, the great navy seaside resort, and the house had been closed for a month.

A big, double-fisted fellow, whose name I forget, was the collector for the Washington Gaslight company, of which Tom Lansden, who is well known in St. Louis as a gas engineer, was manager. The man was zealous in protecting the interests of his company. He came to the Schley house on his usual monthly visit and found that the meter registered zero—in other words, it showed that no gas had been burned in the month; but the collector assumed that the meter was out of order, not knowing that the house had been vacant. He, therefore, rendered a bill for the month's service approximately the same as it had been the month previous, and came to the house to collect it. This was in the afternoon, just after the commodore had passed through a day of arduous duty, and had gone to his house for his accustomed rest. The collector was waiting at the door and presented his bill. I live but a couple of blocks from the commodore's residence and chanced to pass by at this interesting moment—for it proved to be a moment of very decided interest. The commodore and the collector was engaged in a colloquy in which, on the commodore's side, there was some startling profanity. It should be understood en passant that the good old commodore is a past master in the use of violent expletive. The collector was also pretty handy at this same kind of business and it was a talking match worth a day's journey to hear. The commodore's indignation was terrific. The gas company was a thief concern; it was conceived in thievery and nurtured upon robbery and pulled up to the present moment in a state of square stealing. Everybody connected with the company was a thief and a robber with many blanks to qualify it.

There need be no guessing as to the character of the conversation. As I approached the collector was backing away from the steps, across the little lawn, and the commodore was following closely, with startling vociferations and threatening mien, and before the collector had reached the sidewalk the commodore had planted under his left cheek bone a thrust of the fist, which sent the unfortunate man reeling and careening half way into the street before he got himself straightened up. Upon recovering himself, the collector took down the middle of the street and said never a word. The commodore stood on the curbstone, put his hands in his pockets and gazed with contempt upon the departing gas man.

The affair became noised abroad in both services, and there was strong talk of the burly commodore being court-martialed for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. The collector was very much out up over the harsh treatment that he had received at the hands of the commodore, and was disposed to follow the thing up closely. Had he done so, it would have been in his power to make serious trouble for Schley. It was here that I was enabled to do my chief a service, Maj. Lansden and I lived at the same boarding-house.

I related the circumstance to him at dinner, and he was greatly concerned. He is a man of high sense of honor, and the intimation of wrong doing on the part of one of his subordinates was extremely repugnant to him. He said:

"Well, I will have to follow this thing up."

I told him that I would be sorry to see the commodore compromised by any court-martial proceedings, however strongly justice might set in his favor, and that I had no doubt he would be glad to protect his company from the discredit that would be involved in the publication of the collector's bad break. He agreed with me, and said that as far as the gas company was concerned the thing would be called off. Thus the commodore's lively scrap became merely the subject of humorous comment throughout the service. He had to stand a tremendous amount of chaffing on account of it, and no man can tell how many bottles of high wine he had to pay for in consequence.

FROM CARROLL COUNTY.

[News]

James Sullinger died at his home near Eagle Station, this county, on Tuesday morning, with hydrophobia, aged about 60 years. Mr. Sullinger was bitten in the hand by a dog supposed to have been suffering with rabbies about 60 days ago. The wound healed up nicely and it apparently gave him no further trouble until last Sunday, when he began to show symptoms of that terrible malady, hydrophobia, and was taken to his bed. At times his sufferings were terrible to behold, but he passed away peacefully at 7:45 a. m. Tuesday, conscious to the last.

Dr. Albert Webster reports that his sister, Mrs. Emma Ford, had a chicken with three legs. It lived for about two weeks. The third leg was located under the tail and was as long as the other two.

George M. Doan says the wheat crop is disappointing this year. Instead of being four grains to the mesh there are only two.

FROM OWEN COUNTY.

[News]

Wheat harvest is on this week. The crop promises to be the largest in the history of the county.

The Arnold boys of Frankfort, who joined the insurgents in Cuba two or three years ago, and who were published in the newspapers so long as lost, have all three returned home, two of them were wounded.

The rain of last Thursday night came as a God send to the farmers in this immediate vicinity. It made a fine tobacco season and a large number of farmers set their entire crop. It was the first rain for a month.

Jeff O. Jones was in town Monday making complaint against several parties for Klu Kluxing. He says on Saturday night a bunch of switches was left at his door step with a written notice attached, threatening him with a switching if he did not leave before the following Monday. He implicates his brother, Horace Jones, Dan and "Ez" Duvall, and Obe Edwards as being the guilty parties.

The tobacco crop of Owen county is virtually planted. The good seasons during the past week have enabled the farmers to about finish up except a strip of country extending from about three miles North of this place to New Liberty, and as far West as the Kentucky river. In that strip of country there seems to have been no rain to speak of, and the planters have not set more than 25 per cent of a crop. Taking the county over, however, competent judges think that 87 or 88 per cent of the intended crop has been set.

FROM GRANT COUNTY.

[Courier.]

Tobacco set during the recent rain is starting off nicely and looks very promising at this time.

Wheat harvest begins in Grant county this week and will be the largest and best ever cut in the county.

A writ was sworn out in Quarterly court Monday for Purlee Metzleer, treasurer of the Cigar Makers Union at Williamstown, charging him with having run off and embezzled the funds of the said Union to the amount of $52 40.

Fred Hutcheson of Dry Ridge met with quite a serious accident Wednesday. In moving his pistol from one shelf to another it went off, the bullet passing through his hand making a very painful wound.

Hon. Tim Needham, who for many years has been the presiding genius of the Bank of Williamstown, will temporarily, at least, sever his active connections with the bank on and after July 1. His interest in the gold mines of the Black Hills is such as to demand his time and personal attention.

C. C. Vanlandingham, has been appointed by Collector Comingore to the position of Division Deputy Collector in this Revenue district, and will go to work just as soon as his commission comes, and his bond is accepted. The position pays $1,200 per year and expenses.

L. M. Gross swore out a warrant Tuesday morning in quarterly court against George Solar, charging him with false swearing in that when he qualified on the $1,500 bond of Jack Fortner who was in the county jail charged the crime of seduction. The said Solar swore that he was the owner of a tract of 150 acres of land in Pendleton county, worth $4,000 above all of his debts, when he was neither the owner of said land or any other land, and had no property of any kind. Fortner was released from jail on the said bond, but after it was discovered that the bond was bad, he was recaptured and again lodged in jail and as soon as Solar is caught he will go in with him.

The Well known Combined Harness and Saddle Stallion,

Jim Crow,

Will make the season of 1898, at my place, 1¼ miles east of Burlington, Ky., on the Florence & Burlington pike, at $8 to insure a living colt.

JIM CROW is from the noted Morgan family of horses, tracing back to Justin Morgan of 1792. REMEMBER THE MAINE.

The following dispatch from Commodore Watson, dated, Plava del Este, July 3, tells of the fate of Admiral Cavera and his fleet:

"At 9:30 a. m. to-day the Spanish squadron, seven in all, including one gunboat, came out of of Santiago in column, and was totaly destroyed within an hour, except the Cristobal Colon, which was chased 55 miles to westward by toe Commander in Chief, Brooklyn, Oregan and Texas, surrendering to the Brooklyn, but was beached to prevent sinking.

"None of our officers and men were injured, except on Brooklyn. Chief Yeoman Ellis was killed and one man wounded. Admiral Cervera, all commanding officers, excepting Oquenco, about 70 other officers and 1,600 men are prisoners. About 350 killed or drowned and 160 wounded. Latter taken care of on Solace and Olivette. Have just arrived off Santiago in Marblehead to take charge while Commander in Chief is looking out for Cristobal Colon. WATSON."

THE war, just now, is progsessing nicely—push it along.

THERE are a great many fellows today who would vote for a law requiring the fourth of July to come on Saturday every year.

THERE are a great many things being done to Uncle Sam's boys in and about Cuba that are never heard of in this part of the country.

SHAFTER claims that he can take Santiago at any time, and gave the Spaniards until noon, yesterday, to surrender or submit to his shell game.

THE Spaniards have proved themselves pretty good barbed wire fence builders. They have done considerable fencing against the Cubans with barbed wire.

ONLY one American soldier killed in the battle that annihilated Cervera's fleet. It begins to look very much like Providence is partial to Uncle Sam's navy.

THE Kentucky Editorial Association is taking its annual outing at Mackinac Island this week. No better place could be found to spend the heated term. All the surroundings there are condusive of pleasure and comfort, and the Kentuckians know how to take advantage of these things when away from home for fun and frolic.

No eflort has been made in the Ashland district to break over Mr. Settle's Congressional trocha. He has given his constituents such entire satisfaction that they have refused to encourage any of the several herctofore Congressional aspirants in that neck of woods, and Mr. Settle is to have no trouble from his party in the matter of a renomination.

THE farmers of this county have harvested a bountiful crop of excellent wheat, and if they could get $1 per bushel for it,a very large amount of money would be brought into the county this year by that crop; but this amount, whatever it may be, will be augmented by a good price realized for lambs and other livestock they have sold. Taken altogether the people of Boone county are in no immediate danger of want.

If America is sincere in its declared intentions, of perpetuating bravery as exhibited by Americans, whether hailing from North or South, then I consider it my right, as a Southern citizen of this country, to assert that the most daring and successful feat ever accomplished by Americans or any other people, was performed by the crew of the Confederate ram Arkansas. The annals of naval warfare can not point to anything that can be compared to her combat with the Federal fleet on the Mississippi river, a few miles above Vicksburg. The archives of the world, since its creation, must be searched in vain for a like achievement, the particulars of which should be printed in letters of gold for the emulation of posterity.

Thirty old years have intervened since her wonderful accomplishment, and later performances, such as Dewey's at Manila, although deserving of praise, pale into insignificance in daring and other element of wonderment. When history is impartially and truthfully told, the performances of the Arkansas, it will be discovered, has never been equa'el, nor can it ever be surpassed. Dewey, with his splendid vessels, possessed with all that art and money could render to make them invincible annihilated the Spanish tubs stationed at Manila for the purpose of awing the natives. He performed a wonderful act of strategy in entering the harbor as he did, but his squadron was compo-ed of a superb aggregation of floating terrors, capable of holding its own, when rightly handled, against anything near its own strength. This tells all.

Now as to the Arkansas. "What about it?" will ask the rising generation, many of whom never heard of it, simply because the history they read is chary as to giving Caesar his dues.

We are Americans citizens of the United States, and jealous of the little history we made, and insist upon a record of the same. The Arkansas was 120 feet long by 30 feet beam, with burden of between 800 to 1000 tons. Railroad iron formed her armor. This iron was about 3 inches thick, heavily backed with timber and cotton bales.

Her beak for ramming was below the water. Her hull was that of an old cotton barge. She was built in six weeks. She had ten guns, distributed as follows: In the bow were two 8-inch Columbians. In the stern two 6-inch rifles. In broadsides two 6-inch rifles, two 32-pounder smooth bores and two 9-inch Dahlgren shel lguns. Commander Brown was every inch a man and had he possessed a fleet like Dewey's, oh, my countrymen, what a tale would have been written! There were forty or more vessels of the enemy awaiting her appearance each and every one of them intent upon tackling the Arkansas. She steamed slowly down the Yazoo, when three ships hove in sight, the Carondelet (thirteen guns), the Queen of the West and the gunboat Tyler. The Arkansas at once made for the Carondelet and rammed her to death in short order. The Queen of the West and Tyler turned tail and sped with their utmost capacity for the fleet, seven or eight miles below. Right here I again assert the audacity of the Arkansas has no parallel on earth, for with her utmost speed she drove through a fleet of forty or more vessels, scattering death and destruction in every direction.

They were like a drove of sheep, when attacked by a wolf, knowing not where to hide. She passed through this hitherto invincible fleet apparently unscratched and unconcernedly sailed up to the Vicksburg landing under protection of our batteries. I can never forget the scene, as I was hoarse many days afterwards from the effects of my checring.

Now, throw your cap high in the air at recent exploits, but do not forget that the Confederate ram Arkansas performed the greatest feat ever chronicled in naval warfare.

Philip H. Fall.

There was not a very large crowd in town Monday, and during the earlier hours of the day it was very much depressed on account of the bad news that had come from Shafter in Cuba, the day befor; but when the news came, contradictory of that of Sunbay, the people were most wonderfully relieved.

SPAIN would better throw up the sponge.

Both the big naval victories have been won on Sunday.

THE Spaniards stand to their guns until their ships sink or blow up.

CROP AND STOCK.

The Burgin Messenger reports the sale of 72 mountain steers with 55 lambs thrown in, at $[illegible]6 per head.

Mrs. Henry Schubert, of Anderson county, made 229 pounds of butter from seven cows during the month of May.

A Hancock county farmer uses decayed eggs as a ferterlizer for watermelon vines with remarkable success.

Morris Threlkeld, of Mercer county, has a field of wheat which good judges say will make fifty bushels to the acre.

At Mt. Sterling ten or twelve horses sold at $50 to $100, and 20 heifers, weight about 700 pounds, at $24 36 each.

In Estill county five yearling steers, weight 750 lbs., sold at 5 cent per pound, and two light at 3¼ cents per pound.

A Jessamine county farmer says: Let your seed wheat get thoroughly ripe before harvesting, and sow no other kind, and you will never have smut wheat.

While the wheat crop can be said to be generally good it is by no means equal in vield per acre to that of last year. The black rust injured it in some localities in low lands.—Lexington Gazette.

W. B. Kibb, of Winchester, the big cattle buyer, was here court-day but made no purchases, as he said the farmers would not take the price he was offering, 4½ cents, for the best cattle.—Mt. Sterling Democrat.

J. B. Nooe sold his crop of lambs to Sam McDowell, in April for 1st of June delivery at 5¼ cents. He has delivered the lambs and got the money. Mr. Nooe considers Mr. McCowell one of the whitest, fairest stack traders in the business.—Harrodsburg Sayings.

Under the head of "Money In Sheep" the Anderson News says: Few of our farmers understand more thoroughly the care of a flock of sheep than Mr. D. W. Roach. He always has the best, and the end of the season never fails to show up a good balance on the right side of the ledger. This year his flock numbers just even fifty ewes. They clipped 250 pounds of wool which he sold at 20 cents, bringing $1 to the sheep. They raised 70 lambs, which will bring about $4 per head, or $280. The entire income from the flock will be $330, or a little more than $6 50 per ewe.

At Mt. Sterling court day there were about 350 cattle on the market, mostly cows and heifers; no good steers for sale. 5,000 sheep started for this market, and from 3,000 to 3,500 were here. Prices ranged from $2 15 per hundred for bucks to $3 25 for some extra ewes. Most of the sheep changed hands at 3 cents. Good mules brought good prices. Ten or twelve good mules sold at $80 to $100. Another lot sold at from $65 to $100. Among the sale were a lot of 250-lb. steer calves at 4 cents; a lot of nice 600-lb. heifers at $20 each; 23 light yearlings at $15 each, some 900-lb. cows at $3 40 to $3 90; some rough heavy oxen, 3 cents; a yoke of 1,100-lb. oxen, $110; 500 wethers, weight 90 lbs., 3 cents; 70 ewes, lambs and wethers, 3½ cents.—Advocate.

IN DOUBT.

On Edith's smile there's hope and cheer
That quite dispel the somber gray,
And all the ills of yester-year
Are exiled from my dreams away.
When she is glad the world is bright,
Her merry laugh dutt care begutiles,
Each burdened heart grows strangely light;
There's hope and cheer in Edith's smiles.

In Nellie's tears there's blest relief
From ills to large proportions grown;
In lessening another's grief
We quite forget the ills our own.
And be they tears of penitence,
Or tears of joy, each one endears,
The cause is of no consequence—
There's bleat relief in Nellie's tears.

My heart is by a doubt oppressed,
My heart is but a vane that veers;
It knows not which it loves the best—
Sweet Edith's smiles or Nellie's tears.
—Roy Farrell Greene, in Midland Monthly.

A COMMONPLACE MAN

By G. H. DIERHOLD.

THERE was nothing brilliant about Dan Russell, any more than there was about No. 16, his heavy, solidly-built engine, or about the big, sleek, grass-fed steers that generally formed the greater part of the load on the trains that he pulled. He was considered one of the most faithful men on the Denver road, but somehow his very faithfulness was of a kind which is generally associated with dullness. In many respects his charuneter was strikingly like that of the road on which he ran. The Denver is a long, monotonous road that stretches up into the Panhandle of Texas over almost endless reaches of seemingly dead level prairie; but all the time is gradually rising toward the lava beds of the foothills of New Mexico, and eventually finds its way across the mountains and into the city of Denver. In much the same way there was a kind of monotony about Dan Russell, but it was n monotony of tastiness. It rose by imperceptible gradations to the heights of heroism, and it is barely possible that in the end it also may have found its way into some "continuing city."

Dan never achieved even the distinction of being given a passenger run. In spite of his faithfulness, men of a different turn of mind always seemed to get the promotions. Ben Stikes, his fireman, was a much younger man, and much less experienced in railroad matters, but it was frequently remarked among their friends that Ben was already better liked in official circles than Dan, and that the firemnn was likely to get a passenger run first.

There was a certain town on Dan's run known as the "Chicken and Bread" town. It was so called because of the swarm of semicivilized and totally depraved small boys who always met trains there and tried to beguile passengers into buying alleged samples of those two articles of diet. The town is still known by this name from one end of the "Denver" to the other. It is hardly worth while to mention its other name, as this one really lends all the dignity to the town which the facts in the case will justify. The town consists principally of sand hills and saloons, but as it is at the junctiou of two railroads it has been made the eating station for the crews of several trains. It has several inhabltants, but the one most nearly connected with this story, and decidedly the most important one in Dan Russell's eyes, was Grace Atkins.

Grace was the daughter of a saloon keeper, whose plnce was near the Denver depot. More than that, she was Dan's sweetheart. This is the one thing I know to say about her. The womau whom Dan Russell loved cannot have been all bad. How Dan managed to become engaged to her, or even to make love to her, I cannot pretend to say. How he managed it, even his most intimate friends never could imngine. It is a matter of record, though, that a brakeman once punched him in the ribs and asked him what the date was, and that Dan blushed violently and stammered something about "promotion." Everything went well with the affair until the unfortunate day when Ben Stikes was transferred to a seat in the cab of No. 16, and to the position of fireman to Dan Russell. Before this happened Grace made it a point to meet Dan's train nearly every time it passed through the "Chicken nnd Bread" town; but afterward she always met it.

"Somethin' new under the sun," remarked one of the habitual loungers around the depot one day, just after No. 16 had pulled out.

"What is it?" inquired another.

"Grace Stikes."

"Yes? Well, she is tol'ble new. She ain't met No. 16 but about 40 times this last month."

"She ain't never met it on the right side of the cnb before. Did you notice it? She allers stood on the left side till to-day."

At this there were several significant grins in the crowd, and several shoulders were shrugged. After several moments of silence spent in looking after the disappearing train, one of the loafers remarked, sententiously:

"D-n good-looking man, any way."

Even Dan Russell's most ardent friend could never have claimed that this imprecation was intended for him.

After this the loafers noticed that Grace stood on one side of the cab just about as often as she did on the other. It is barely possible that Dan may have noticed it also, but there was never anything about his swarthy, firm-set face to show it. As the months went on his fireman continued to be as "good looking" as ever, and showed no sign of any injury from the "damning" he had received. Finally a time came when Grace failed to stand on either side of No. 16, or to meet it at all for over a week. Neither man in the cab showed the slightest sign of missing her.

"Something's up," the loungers whispered one to another; but no one had an opinion to venture as to what that "somethin'" might be.

II.

One evening as Dan's trnin was standing on a side track, waiting for the south-bound passenger to pass, Jim Atkins, a long, lazy boy of about 18, a brother of Grare's shambled up to the cab and said, in a voice too low for the loungers to overhear:

"Say, Dan, Grace sez she wants to see you jest a minute."

"All right!" said Dan, with something in his voice as near like eagerness as he was ever known to come. "Whereabouts is she?"

"In the little room jest back of the s'loon." Dan's countenance felt at the last word.

"You know what the rules of the Denver is 'bout their men goin' into s'loons while on duty," faltered Dan.

"Shucks!" ejaculated Jim, contemptuously. "A man that ain't got sand enough to take a little risk to get to see his gal ain't much good. Grace said tell you she ain't well, nohow."

"Not well?" interrupted Ben Stikes, briskly. "Dan, you just stay here an' I'll go an' see if—"

"Naw, you won't!" exclaimed Dan, hurriedly, as he jumped down from the cab; "I'm goin' myself."

This was the nearest that Dan was ever known to come toward displaying any resentment toward Ben. As he strode awny one of his brakemen came hurrying after him.

"Say, Dan," he queried, anxiously, "you ain't goin' over to Atkins' are you?"

Dan redded.

"Well, I wouldn't. The Ol' Man's in town—so they tell me; kem in at 3:10, an' goin' out on the south-bound. God only knows what he's stoppin' here for, but if he was to ketch you in that saloon, he'd fire you, shore."

Dan muttered some confused reply, but still kept on toward the saloon. It was nearly dark now, and when he opened the door the big coal oil lamp hanging behind the bar had been lighted. Passing through without stopping, he hurried into the room behind. There he remained for about five minntes in conversntion with Grace. Just what passed between them nobody knows, but when Dan reappeared in the saloon it was noticed that a broad smile was on his face.

"Made up, did you, Dan? Glad to hear it," said big Bill Atkins, the proprietor of the saloon, as he whacked Dan in the ribs good-naturedly with his ponderous fist.

Dan said nothing, but nodded myslerioously.

Then he hurried to the front door in so much confusion that he collided at full tilt with a man who had just entered.

"Why don't you run over a fellow?" exclaimed the newcomer, rather roughly. Then, stepping back he took n good look at the offender.

"Great Scott! If it ain't Dan Russell! You are the last man on the Denver I'd ever have expected to see in here. And in such a fix, too."

It was the "Old Man." There is no need to give his name or his official station. He was Dan's superior officer in railrond circles, and that settled the matter. Dan hung his head and hurried out into the gathering darkness to make what he knew would be his last run on No. 16.

"What in the devil brought you in here just at this time?" growled Bill Atkins as he scowled at the newcomer.

The "Old Man," who was not so very old after all, bowed rather deprecatingly.

"A young lady sent me a note, requesting me to call. I suppose it was on business of some kind. It was Miss Atkins, your daughter, I presume."

That night Grace had n stormy interview with her father. The more he stormed, the more she wept. It had all been intended for a joke. She had sent for the "Old Man" just to tease Dan and to make him a little jealous. She had never once thought any harm could come of it. So she protested between her sobs. But her father only reiterated with a lion-like roar that although he knew she was one of the blankedest fools in Texas, he knew very well she had never been such a fool as that.

Of course Dan was not discharged; that distinction is reserved for higher officers in railroad circles. Engineers merely get fired; and that was what happened to Dan. If he had been a man of another kind, he might have worked the proper wires and got off with only a short lay-off. Even if he himself had begged hard enough matters might have been compromised. As it was, he merely gave up his place without saying a word. Nobody was surprised to learn that Ben Stikes had been promoted to Dan's place at the throttle of No. 16. In a few days Dan began quietly to look about for another job. He soon obtained a place under the section foreman of a section only a few miles from the Chicken and Bread town. As the foreman was a married man, he and his family lived in town, Dan bunked alone in the section house. It was an humble job for the former engineer, but it was better than nothing.

III.

One night in January Dan was roused from his sleep by some one pounding on the section house door.

"Who's that?" he growled, sleepily.

"It's me!"

Dan recognized the voice, and it must have thrilled him through and through.

"In a minute," he shouted.

Hurriedly dressing, he opened the door and stepped out into the night. It was cloudless, but the force of a Texas "dry norther" was raging.

"Good Zord, Grace!" he shouted. "You oughtn't to be here. This wind's enough to give you your death. Whew, but it is biting! And, besides, you oughtn't to have come here to my house by yourself, 'way in the dead of the night."

"I came because I wnnted to see you. I'm in trouble, an' I've needed you awful. Why haven't you come to see me lately?"

"I—I never knew you was needin' me," faltered Dan.

"Folks have been saying such awful things about me," sobbed Grace. "They pretended like I asked you to come to the saloon just on purpose, to get you fired, so that maybe Ben could get your job. Even pa talks that way. You don't believe I done it on purpose, do you, Dan?"

Dan merely shuffled his feet uneasily.

"I'd do a heap fur you, Grace, but I ain't tellin' no lies fer nobody. What do you want with me?"

This reply was spoken, not sternly, but in so manly, straight forward a tone that all Grace's hypocrisy failed her. Instead of sobbing convulsively, as she had at first thought doing, she merely said:

"Dan, you are the best man ever was fitted for each other, mos' show that."

"I've known it for a long time we was diff'rent-ords."

"Well, I know I'm not good enough for you to wipe your feet on," cried the girl, giving way to a tempest of genuine tears, very different from those she had been planning only a few moments before. "I want to marry Ben, because he ain't no better than I am, and because because I love him. Pa swears he'll kill us both if I ever have anything more to do with him. He swears I have treated you like a dog—an' I have. Pa and I had such a racket to-night that I wouldn't go home again under no circumstances. I'd die first! Ben's pullin' an extra to-night. I would have arranged to meet him at the depot and run off with him, but I know pa'll be there with his Winchester, so that's no go. His train'll be along in a few moments now, an' I want you to signal him down so as I can get on and go off with him. That's what I've walked these miles over this lonesome prairie to ask you to do."

"He wouldn't stop if I was to signal him," said Dan. "He'd think I was wanting to do him up. I know him well enough to know that."

There was the merest trace of emotion in Dan's tone as he spoke.

"Dan, for God's sake stop him in some way. I beg you by—by the love you have for me."

Just then a light gleamed out on the darkness away to the southwest. It was the headlight of No. 16, just leaving town. Dan gazed in silence for a moment. Suddenly he exclaimed:

"Grace, I'll try it. If the extry's a heavy one I'll make it all right; but for your sake I'd try it if it was the cannon ball express. Stay right where you are. If she stops here, hop on quick; if she don't stop here you may know it ain't my fault, God bless you!"

He started down the track in a clumsy run towards the approaching train. He knew the track well, and he paused when and reached the head of a long grade up which No. 16 was now making its way. It was by no means a steep grade, but it was about as steep as any on this part of the Denver. Then he stepped to one side of the track.

"I guess she'll be goin' about as slow here as anywheres," he muttered. Then he steadied himself for the spring.

Grace was standing by the deserted section house watching the approaching train with a heart that almost stood still as she watched. The train was only a short one, and No. 16 thundered by it at the top of its speed. Ben Stikes was in the cab, but he little thought that the girl he loved was standing there in the darkness and the wind as he passed. Perhaps he thought of Dan, but if so it only caused him to increase his speed. After the train passed, Grace waited awhile for Dan; but as Dan came.

"Dan!" she screamed.

No answer.

"Dan!"

Perhaps he heard her voice as it was borne on the wings of the howling norther; perhaps, on the other hand, he was then listening to such sounds as would render his ears forever insensible to the howling of the night winds, the cries of distressed women and all earthly sounds whatever.

All that night Grace faced the northwind as she walked down the long stretch of track, leading away from her home. Perhaps the whistling of the wind and the yelping of an occasional coyote filled her with dread; perhaps her own thoughts so occupied her that she had neither eyes nor ears for anything outside. I only know that early the next morning she reached the little station next above the Chicken and Bread town. She was half frozen to death; but the next day she took the train to Fort Worth. There she met Ben, and the two were married. Ben gave up his run, and the two are said to have gone north to escape the fury of Bill Stikes. Where they are now no one in the Chicken and Bread town seems to know—or care.

Dan's mangled body was found by the section crew of which he had been a member. The boss expressed himself as wondering why in thunder an old railroader like Dan had not sense enough to keep out of the way of trains. One of the crew thought it might be a case of suicide, but the rest agreed that Dan had too much sense for that, although he was a darned fool about some things. Dan was never very popular, but, for that matter, neither was a certain other man of whom I heard, whom Dan resembled, at least to the extent that both of them gave their lives for the unworthy.—N. ALL IN PLAY.

But It Was So Like the Real Thing That Trouble Ensued in the Twigg Family.

When Mrs. Ferdinand Twiggs left her home the other afternoon for an hour or two downtown, her son Templeton, aged nine, was playing horse with Lucy Kittlesmith, aged seven, on the sidewalk in front of the house.

"I've left the side door open, Templeton," she said to her hopeful, "so if you want to get into the house you will have to go by the front door."

"All right, ma," yelled Templeton.

Mrs. Twiggs boarded a down-town car.

It was after four o'clock when she returned. The children were not on the walk in front, but the little express wagon they had played with stood in the side yard.

"They must be inside," she said. And she fitted her key to the lock of the front door.

She had no more than stepped into the hall when she was greeted by a cry that almost made her blood run back ward.

She hesitated a moment, then ran into the dining-room straight ahead.

At the door she stopped suddenly, appalled by the sight that met her gaze. She threw up both hands and gasped.

Apparently Templeton and Lucy had been sitting at the table eating jam and cake, but they were not just then.

Lucy was crouching by the sofa and Templeton was standing over her beating her shoulders and back with a wooden spoon. Another cry such as had so startled Mrs. Twiggs at the first instance rang through the room. It came from Lucy.

The mother was on the scene of the dining table in less time than it takes to tell.

She arrested Templeton's upraised hand, wrenched the spoon from his grasp and grabbed him by the ear.

"Templeton Ferdinand Twiggs, what on earth is the matter with little Lucy Kittlesmith, that?" she demanded, without waiting for an answer. Mrs. Twiggs jerked her son across the floor by his ear and marched him into the front room.

Unseen, Lucy Kittlesmith quietly darted out of the side door and ran home, across the street, crying as though her heart were broken.

Mrs. Twiggs jammed Templeton down in a chair. "Now tell me, and do it quick," she ordered, "what you mean by treating Lucy that way?"

Templeton gurgled back the rising tears.

"We wuz jes' playin' marrud," he sniffled. "We foun' th' cake an' jam an' ten played settin' down t' dinner. I tol' Lucy th' cake wuz heavy ez lead an' I wish she end make cake like my mamma. Nen she said I got t' eat it an' keep my mouf shut. Nen I got up 'n grabbed her by th' hair 'n' yanked her over t' th' sofy 'n' wuz jes' gi'n her a couple o' cracks on th' head as ez spoon wen you kum in an' that's all."

Mrs. Twiggs' eyes flashed like incandescent lights. She shot one look at Templeton, then darted back into the dining-room to find Lucy. But Lucy wasn't there. Templeton was spanked as he had never been spanked before. It was a beautiful piece of work.

When she had tied her son in a dark closet Mrs. Twiggs sank down on the bed and cried.

Of course she doesn't know positively, but she is firm in her belief that Lucy went home and told her mother all about it, for in less than a week it was all over the neighborhood that Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Twiggs "fight like cats and dogs" in their own home, even though they are as nice as you please out in society.

At any rate Mrs. Kittlesmith has not called on Mrs. Twiggs since.—Detroit Free Press.

DISGUSTED FISHERMEN.

It Made Them All Sick to See an Old-Time Angler Catch Trout Without Playing Them.

One day lately a Boston party on a fishing trip to Moosehead came across one of the old school fishermen. He was up off the mouth of Tomhegan stream and was fishing out of a lumberman's batteau. It developed later that he was the cook for a crew of river drivers. On the bank near at hand stood the cookee, or his helper. The cook had thrown about a peck of table refuse into the lake in order to "tole" the fish, and over that lure he was having great luck. His pole was of the jib-boom variety, and when n fish bit he would derrick it over his head into the bushes where the cookee was stationed. The Boston men from their canoes watched operations with all the disgust of the true sportsmen.

"Got enough for supper yet?" shouted the fisherman, over his shoulder, as he sent another great trout flamping into the bushes.

"No; better catch six or eight more," shrilled back the cookee.

"Say, how many fish do you two fellows usually eat for supper?" shouted a Boston man, who didn't understand the situation.

"When you're cooked for 22 river drivers as long as I have," yelled the cook, derricking another fish, "you'll know more about empty rail kegs."

Hardly was this enigmatic utterance out when there came a tug at his line that was nothing short of tremendous. He twitched. The fish didn't come. He hrneed; he set his jaws and pried. His line only sewed the hissing water.

"Play him! Play him!" screamed the excited sportsmen from the city.

"Play your grandmother!" bellowed back the cook. "I ain't here to play. I'm here to fish." And as he spoke he joosied over his head a 15-pound lake. Any man in the Boston crowd would have given ten dollars to have played him an hour or two at the end of an eight-ounce rod. 'Twas too much for their nerves. They came away.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

CHINESE TIN SMELTING.

It Is Different in a Great Many Ways from Smelting Down in Boston Harbor.

At Talping the tin mines cover an area of several square miles, and are worked almost entirely by Cantonese. They resemble nothing so much as the gold washings of California and New Zealand; that is, a tin washing is a series of delphs or hollows, like an ordinary English quarry, except that there is no stone.

The sand or rubble is excavated and conveyed to the troughs, which are placed at a sufficient height to allow of the water running freely down au incline; one man rakes up to the topmost end the flakes of tin, which resemble bits of black pencil lead, nud which, when disengaged from all mud or other light clinging matter, slnk at once to the bottom of the inclined trough.

Other laborers pick out the larger stones from the rubble; while n man, stationed at the bottom of the trough, pushes up the accumulated mud from which the lead is not yet quite separated, so that it may pass through a second or third course of wa-hing. The leaden ore is then carried in buckets to special cleansing houses and there thoroughly washed once more.

The furnace looks like a good-sized wine cask set on end, but at a slight angle, and each one is provided with an iron pan for a base.

This iron pan, together with a number of copper's hoops twined round the baked mud, serves as a stiffening, and helps to keep the furnace from collapsing. The lead ore is thrown, together with the charcoal which melts it, in one mass into this barrel-like furnace, where the molten metal soon passes through the charcoal and escapes (through a vent in the side of the lower portion of the barrel furnace) into a small pit dug into the ground below.

The fire is kept active by a primitive but very effective bellows, consisting of a hollowed tree fitted with a wooden piston, and connected with the furnace by a short bamboo tube inserted into its side. The whole apparatus costs only (at present rates of exchange) about $12.50.

A workman rakes the slag out of the pit, and if the market price of tin is sufficiently high to make it pay to do so, this slag is passed a second time through the furnace. The pure molten tin, freed from the slng as it simmers in the pit, looks like so much quicksilver. The "pigs" are like so many large bricks, with one side rounded and the other flat, the flat side having a broad rim or border.

The explanation of this is that blocks of wood of precisely this shape are pressed into the sand or mud which forms the natural floor of the smelting houses; when these wooden molds are removed, of course corresponding holes remain, and into these holes the molten lead is ladled from the pit. It takes a whole day to cool sufficiently to get firm; when it has well set it is lifted or dragged out of the holes with long rakes and dashed with water. After a little more cooling it is ready for shipment.

At Perak, in 1888, and at Maliwun, in 1893, I found that four or five Chinamen could turn out seven hundredweight of tin pigs a day, worth (in 1893) about $140 in all.—E. H. Parker, in Chambers' Journal.

CHINESE CHILDREN.

An American Traveler in the Orient Waxes Enthusiastic in Describing Them.

A traveler recently returned from China is most enthusiastic over Chinese children. He states that they are as pretty and bright as buttons, and run scurrying away from whichever you may chance to walk in the quarter. The parents are very fond of their children, especially the men. The women do not seem to care much for their offspring, but the men fondle the little ones all day, and love to carry them about in their arms. It delights a Chinese father to have his children admired. The babies are undeniably interesting. The little boys assume the dignity of cue strings when they are about five years of age. Red is the prevailing color for the cues of both the boys and girls. It means simply youth, and has no sinister significance, as so many Americans think. The Chinese children wear any number of bangles, beads and bracelets by way of decoration. It is not unusual to see bangles on their bare ankles as they run through the streets. Their clothes are very brilliant, although there seems to be a growing and unfortunate tendency to dress them in the American fashion. Many of the children go to American mission schools, and parents of heathen faith allow their children to go to the "white devils'" missionnry schools because of the advantage they have in learning English. After school hours the little ones play on the sidewalks. Their games are queer, and the most common materials, such as sticks and stones, are play things for the Chinese child. One of their favorite games is a worm and a bowl, and the screams that greet the worm's attempt to escape are fraught with merriment and terror. The little girls are less happy than the boys, and they are usually staggering under the weight of an inordinately fat baby brother, but they do not seem to mind. They are extremely obedient children, and appear brighter than little Americans of the same age.—Philadelphia Times.

AN INTERESTING CHOIR.

One at Lead Hall Chapel, Near York, England, Sings Only Once a Year.

About a mile from the village of Towton, near York, there is an exceedingly interesting and curious old church, known as the Lead Hall chapel. It is remarkable for several reasons, chiefly because of its age; its small size, probably it would not seat 20 people altogether; its main fittings, and lastly, because of its curious choir.

To understand about this choir it is necessary to review a little of the history of this famous old place of worship. There are two theories as to its origin. It is most commonly believed that this chapel is the one known to have been built by Richard III. in 1461. It is claimed that the yearly services now taking place in it are a survival of these that were formerly ordered for the purpose of praying for the souls of the good Christians who fell in the great battle. Another supposition declares this chapel to be attached to the old manor house of the Tyas family at Lead Hall, and that the memorial chapel of Richard III. has long since disappeared.

It is obvions, however, that, if this were the case, a service every six months would not greatly edify the people in their spiritual life!

Having thus explained the chapel's history, we may go to the choir. There are two services yearly held at the Lead Hall church—one in April and another in October. There is, therefore, no regular body of choristers, but on such occasions a choir is made up from the chief singers in the neighboring towns, who are under the control, for this purpose, of a well-known musical professor in Yorkshire. The majority of the men and boys who make up the choir are drawn from York and Leeds. They receive a stated fee for their day's services and are provided with refreshments.

The regular service of the Church of England is used. The congregation at these services often does not exceed half a dozen people, or half the size of the choir! The vicar of a neighboring parish conducts the services.

Those who maintain the theory of the chapel's origin in the time of Richard III. declare that the king made a grant of money for the holding of memorial services, and that it is for this reason that two services a year are regularly held.—Sunday Reader.

An Up-to-Date Princess.

Princess Laetitia, dowager duchess of Aosta, is one of the most cheerful and up-to-date of European princesses, but she has had the misfortune all her life to be kept much in order. She was brought up with extreme strictness by Princess Clotilde, though occasionally she broke out and openly rebelled. Princess Clotilde insisted on her wearing her hair parted in the middle and brushed smoothly behind the ears, a fashion she objected to much. One day it was untidy and she was sent to her room to do it over again. When, however, she came down to dinner it was found that she had cropped it as short as a boy's. Although she is now over 30 and a widow, she still drives her ladies in waiting to despair by her waywardness, and particularly by her passion for bicycling. Instead of being content to cycle in the privacy of her park, the duchess insists on riding about the public roads of Italy and the Riviera. The house of Savoy is noted for its strict etiquette, and Italian court duennas look on Princess Laetitia with grave disapproval as the latest incarnation of the royal new woman.—Chicago Tribune.

The River of Death.

The word Chickamauga, like a great many other proper nnmes of places in this country, is of Indian origin. It is said to be a Cherokee name, signifying "the river of death," and, according to a legend which has floated down among the Indians, the stream received its name from the accidental drowning of the people of a village by a sudden rise attributed to a cloudburst. Chickahominy is another name of similar character, the Indian word signifying "turkey lick," or a place where turkeys are wont to assemble. Chicopee, the name of a town in Massachusetts, signifies "the place of birch bark."—St. Louis Republic.

FARM & GARDEN

PROPER CARE OF HAY.

How to Build a Movable Roof for the Haystack Which Assures Absolute Protection.

Few understand the art of stacking so that rain will not get into the center. One great enemy to keeping hay is the wind, especially in Kansas. Many times the farmer gets his hay and grain stacked up in good condition, and along comes a gust of wind and all of his labor is swept away, as far as the keeping qualities of his stack are concerned. Enough hay goes to waste every year on many farms to pay for lumber to cover it. In Illinois, years ago, stacks of hay were roofed with three-eighths or five-eighths inch ceiling. They were hip-roofed, making them as solid as light material could make them; then to hold them in place, four four by four inch posts were set in the ground 14 feet high, with four plates at the top to hold the posts in position and keep them plumb. The roof was placed in position before the posts were set up, having the corners at the eave ends of the roof set so as to permit the roof to slide up or down on or between the posts. Holes were bored in the posts to put in pins to hold the roof up. When it is time to begin stacking, fasten the roof at the top of the posts and begin the stack between the posts. Build to a finish, or in case there is not enough hay cut, put in what there is, stopping work on the stack for any length of time, take out the pins and lower the roof down upon the hay, leaving the hay level, or nearly so. As the stack settles, the roof will follow the hay down and protect it from rain and wind.—W. H. Doane, in Farm and Home.

FACTS ABOUT FLOURINE.

It Contains Very Little Protein and Is Deficient in Bone-Forming Constituents.

Prof. Snyder, of the Minnesota experiment station, has recently made a chemical analysis of flourine, the by-product of the glucose mills that is now being used as an adulterant of wheat flour. His report, which appears in the Northwestern Miller, is not in accord with the claims which have been made for this product, especially in the important feature of nutritive value. Analysis shows the flourine contains so little protein that a man would have to eat 150 pounds of it in order to get enough protein to enable him to do a day's work. It is deficient in bone-forming constituents and fat as well, and in fact contains little of food value except starch. But still worse, it contains sulphate of soda and sulphuric acid enough to make it injurious to health. Is it any wonder that European consumers of American flour are regarding it with suspicion when there is possibility of it containing such a worthless—and worse than worthless—substance? Is it strange that European governments, which represent people who dare not waste a penny even for bread, are on the alert to protect their people against such an imposition as flour adulterated with flourine? Some means should be found of preventing the exportation of adulterated flour to foreign markets, and also of preventing its sale to our own people as pure wheat flour.—National Stockman.

Cultivate, cultivate, and then cultivate, if you would discount drought.

Don't let your stock get into the public road. It is not neighborly.

It is claimed that one good crop of hemp will destroy Canadian thistles.

Whatever the farmer has to sell now, he can get a good price for. The trouble is that his wheat, etc., is out of his hands, as a rule.

Buy a good harness, if you buy, but that does not mean that you should pay an exorbitant price for it. First class harness can be bought cheap.

Every farm should have its workshop and the means to half-sole boots, and do about everything that is needed in repairing things. It will save lots of money.

If you try to force a calf to learn to drink, you will have a circus. Gently get the calf to the pail, gently induce it to touch the milk, put two fingers in its mouth, and after a few times it will drink.—Western Plowman.

Keeping Sheep in Orchards.

The apple orchard after it gets old enough to bear is the best sheep pasture. One of the greatest advantages of pasturing sheep in the orchard is to destroy the fallen fruit. This they will do even better than hogs, which are usually recommended for this purpose. Pigs will only eat apples after they are nearly or quite ripe, unless they are starved to it. The small, green apples are sometimes almost bitter. Sheep like this bitter taste, and will run to eat the fallen apples, most of which contain codling moths which would escape into the ground if left in the apple long after it falls.

SECRET OF SUCCESS.

It Consists of Having Good Breeding Go Hand in Hand with Equally Good Feeding.

There could not be greater error than to suppose that all that is necessary for the young breeder to be successful is to buy the blood and the instance would take care of itself. We might just as well expect a good crop of corn if we plant an excellent variety in a well-prepared, rich soil and then not give it any further attention, as to suppose that our pigs will develop into fine hogs, no matter how well bred, without the proper food and attention. In fact, the work of making the fine hog is only begun at weaning time, so says James Riley in American Swineherd. It is very important to have the pig well bred, as that is the foundation, and, like building a house, it is important to have a good foundation. Then by using good material and skill in architecture we build a good, substantial house; so with the pig. We want it well bred as a foundation, then by the proper method of feeding we develop it into a fine hog. No young breeder will ever succeed in the business unless he makes a study of the proper method of feeding pigs, as feed is the principal factor in the improvement of swine. It is well known that by grading seed wheat and seed corn and planting the largest and best developed grains the grain will be improved from year to year; so with the pig. By feeding the pig a well-balanced ration, a ration that will build up all the different parts of the hog, especially the valuable parts—the loin and ham, the muscular or lean. The pigs thus fed till they arrive at the proper age to breed will transmit their good qualities to their offspring, and, like the large grains of corn or wheat, the improvement will go on from generation to generation. Pigs should be fed a variety of feeds. The best feed for young pigs is shorts mixed with skimmed milk, fed sweet, or ground wheat, or ground oats with the hulls sieved out. Oat hulls are not good for pigs, but there is nothing better than ground oats with the hulls extracted, mixed with sweet milk. This with a little corn will make a good balanced ration; feed them regular and enough to keep them rapidly growing. The pig should never stop growing. Our best improved pigs should gain at least one pound per day, or it would not pay me them to make them gain 1½ pounds per day if fed a muscle and bone-producing food.

HINTS FOR BEGINNERS.

How to Make the Dairy Business Something of a Success Right from the Start.

To those who are about starting a dairy I should advise buying the best natives and grades obtainable and buy them by test and open up an account with each cow as soon as purchased. You can afford to pay more for a cow that will make 300 pounds of butter than you can for one making 200 pounds; in fact, under ordinary conditions the former will make enough butter to give a profit on her keep and the latter will require more expended on her than she gives in return. To all who are interested in the dairy at all, whether it be few or many cows, the only way to improve your herd and be reasonably sure that you will get what you are after is to select carefully, weed out, and breed and raise a herd. This can be done by using a good male, from well-known milk and butter strains, upon your best cows, and raising females. This is the place to invest your money in high-bred pedigreed stock. Never on any account breed from a cross-bred or scrub bull. Dairymen cannot expect to find what they want on the market or get the best cows by purchasing them, for it is exceptional for a man to sell a good cow, and the more advanced a community becomes in dairying, keeping records and making tests of their cows, the harder it will be to secure a good cow by purchase.—Rural World.

HANDY PIG TROUGH.

A New Arrangement Which Will Be Found of Much Value and a Great Convenience.

To get swill into a pig trough is no easy matter if the hogs cannot be kept out until it is filled. The arrangement shown in the accompanying illustration will be found of much value and a great convenience. Before pouring in the swill, the front end of the pen, in the form of a swinging door suspended from the top, is placed in the position shown at h. The trough is filled and the door is allowed to assume the position shown at a.—E. J. Rusch, in Orange Judd Farmer.

Keep Up the Beef Quality.

Our Canadian correspondent places a good deal of emphasis upon the damaging results to the dominion stock industry, coming from the crossing of dairy and beef breeds. This has been a very costly experiment to many of our home breeders also. Our field correspondents, in Indiana and Ohio especially, report whole herds which were formerly of a good beef type, as now possessing very few animals that would pass as good grades. One cross of a dairy bull upon shorthorns or cows of other beef breeds, will produce a cross that is "between and between" and really is not a profitable animal from any standpoint. The lesson has been a costly one, but perhaps it will be heeded. — Prairie Farmer.

OF A SCIENTIFIC NATURE.

Scarlet flowers are said to stand drought better than any others.

It may not be generally known that Darwin long ago proved that plants and flowers have brains, and that if they do not exactly argue matters out among themselves, the instinct of self-preservation is strong upon them.

Sunstroke generally occurs to persons laboring in the open air and sunshine; but it would be better named heat-stroke, for it can occur even in winter in a close, darkened room where the temperature is for a long time above the normal.

A thought-weighing machine has been invented by Prof. Mosso, the Italian physiologist, the rush of blood to the head turning the scale. The machine is said to be so delicate that it can measure the difference in the exertion needed to read Greek from that required for Latin.

An Italian artist in London is said to have just perfected a new range-finder which, it is claimed, will be of immense service both in peace and war. It is said to be a great improvement on all range-finders now in use. DIDN'T KNOW LIGHT GREEN.

A Bumptious Dominie Who Was a Trifle Off in Distinguishing Colors.

Out of every 50 young men who want to volunteer at the different recruiting stations in the downtown district it is estimated that at least 15 stipulate that commissions shall be the price of their sacrifice. Some of these would-be officers are eventually convinced that as much glory can be gained in the file as in the rank of the army, but the majority go away insisting that they were constituted for command and could not brook the orders of inferior beings.

Col. Koch was visited by a former school principal, who appeared to have the make-up of a desirable recruit. He was tall and broad, and walked with a firm military step. The stranger proved to be a native of the United States and well posted on the constitution of the nation. In accordance with his custom, Col. Koch explained some of the manifold duties of the soldier. The applicant was told that he might be called on any time to tear up a fence, build a fire, clean a horse or carry water. These menial chores did not accord with the professor's preconception of the man of war.

"I am accustomed to command," said the principal. "Why not make me a captain?"

Capt. Koch did not stop to reason with the caller. He signaled to Capt. Jones, who understood the situation, and who presented himself as the medical examiner.

"What's the color of grass?" he asked in the end of the room?" the captain commanded.

"That's pale blue," stated the stranger.

"No, it isn't. It's light green. I'm afraid you're color blind. He ain't in town many qualifications to command, needed not depend upon you to distinguish a pink, ish mortar battery from a sesquipedalian. We're sorry, but can't use you under all circumstances."—Chicago Chronicle.

A Case of Memory.

The serenader stopped beneath the window. He unsung his guitar and touched its strings softly and lovingly. Then he looked about the dark shadows of the garden and along the line of fence that marked the street end of the handsome premises.

Nothing was in sight.

Looking again at the window, the youth ran his fingers swiftly across the strings, and then, lifting up his head and opening his mouth until the moonlight glittered on his teeth, he began in a shrill tenor:

"Oh, don't you remember—"

But he got no further.

The window above suddenly opened and a large, heavily-framed engraving of the battleship Maine was dropped from within and fell squarely on the singer's head.

"Oh, we remember all right," shouted a hoarse voice from within.

And the startled singer gathered himself together and sadly and painfully went his way.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A GUARDSMAN'S TROUBLE.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Journal.

The promptness with which the National Guard of the different states responded to President McKinley's call for troops at the beginning of the war with Spain made the whole country proud of its citizen soldiers. In Detroit there are few guardsmen more popular and efficient than Max R. Davies, first sergeant of Co. B. He has been a resident of Detroit for the past six years, and his home is at 416 Third Avenue. For four years he was connected with the well known wholesale drug house of Farrand, Williams & Clark, in the capacity of bookkeeper.

The First Sergeant.

"I have charged up many thousand orders for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," said Mr. Davies, "but never knew their worth until I used them for the cure of chronic dyspepsia. For two years I suffered and doctored for that aggravating trouble but could only be helped temporarily.

"I think dyspepsia is one of the most stubborn of ailments, and there is scarcely a clerk or office man but what is more or less a victim. Some days I could eat anything, while at other times I would be starving. Those distressed pains would force me to quit work.

"I tried the hot water treatment thoroughly, but it did not affect my case. I have tried many advertised remedies, but they would help only for a time. A friend of mine recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, but I did not think much of them.

"I finally was induced to try the pills and commenced using them. After taking a few doses I found much relief. I do not remember how many boxes of the pills I used, but I used them until the old trouble stopped. I know they will cure dyspepsia of the worst form and I am pleased to recommend them."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

There were fought 2,261 engagements during the war of the rebellion.

SINGULAR STATEMENT.

From Mrs. Rank to Mrs. Pinkham.

The following letter to Mrs. Pinkham from Mrs. M. Rank, No. 2,354 East Susquehanna Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., is a remarkable statement of relief from utter discouragement. She says:

"I never can find words with which to thank you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me.

"Some years ago I had womb trouble and doctored for a long time, not seeing any improvement. At times I would feel well enough, and other times was miserable. So it went on until last October, I felt something terrible creeping over me. I knew not what, but kept getting worse. I can hardly explain my feelings at that time. I was so depressed in spirits that I did not wish to live, although I had everything to live for. Had hysteria, was very nervous; could not sleep and was not safe to be left alone.

"Indeed, I thought I would lose my mind. No one knows what I endured.

"I continued this way until the last of February, when I saw in a paper a testimonial of a lady whose case was similar to mine, and who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I determined to try it, and felt better after the first dose. I continued taking it, and to-day am a well woman, and can say from my heart, 'Thank God for such a medicine.'"

Mrs. Pinkham invites all suffering women to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice. All such letters are seen and answered by women only.

Proposed Alliance with England.

If the United States and England should form an alliance, the combined strength would be so great that there would be little chance for enemies to overcome us. In a like manner, when men and women keep up their bodily strength with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, there is little chance of attacks from disease. The old time remedy enriches the blood, builds up the muscles, steadies the nerves and increases the appetite. Try it.

Hair Hints

Is your hair dry, harsh, and brittle? Is it fading or turning gray? Is it falling out? Does dandruff trouble you? For any or all of these conditions there is an infallible remedy in Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor.

"For years, I was troubled with dandruff, large flakes scaling and falling off, causing great annoyance. Sometimes the itching of the scalp was almost unendurable. Prescriptions from eminent physicians, put up in my own drugstore were tried, but failed to afford relief. At length I used Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in one week I found it helped me. At the end of only two weeks, my head was entirely free from dandruff, and as clean as a child's. I heartily recommend Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor to all who are suffering from diseases of the scalp."—Edwin Nordstrom, Drugs, etc., Sacred Heart, Minn.

[Rising Sun Recorder.]

A man probably 50 to 60 years of age claiming to be from near Logan, Ohio, came here last week from Boone county, Ky., where he had been working a little. On Saturday last he was drinking, with others, and in the afternoon he was found in the basement of the Pate & Keeney warehouse very badly bruised and beaten, in a dazed and semi-unconscious condition, and claimed to have been beaten and robbed of about $45,00. The old man was taken in charge and his wounds dressed. Ed Jones and John Jones were seen in his company, and were seen to enter this warehouse with him and return from it afterwards, and were therefore presumed to be guilty of committing the great wrong on the drunken man. Ed Jones was arrested, and was unable to give $400 bond for his appearance at a preliminary examination. The examination was held Wednesday, at the court house, before Mayor Spencer. The old man, who had recovered from his injuries to some extent, clearly identified Ed Jones as the man who struck him a severe blow in the warehouse, after which he knew nothing. He described the other one who was at the warehouse with him and Ed Jones well enough to implicate John Jones in the affair. The trial took a good part of the day. R. L. Davis represented the State, and J. B. Coles and S. S. Mullen appeared for the defendant. The evidence was sufficient, in the mind of the Mayor, to hold him over to court, and he affixed the bond at $700, and the accused was remauded to jail.

John Jones fled to Kentucky and has not been arrested at this date.

The affair created a good deal of interest and some excitement in town, as several cases of a similar character have occurred here of late years, where drunken men were assaulted and robbed, and a determination is now manifested to enforce the laws against the guilty ones, if they can be arrested and the crime proven on them. This is now considered a necessity for the reputation of the town and the security of persons who may come here to trade, seek work, or for any other reputable purpose.

One of Jailer Adams' little indiscretions, a few days since, knocked the RECORDER out of what bid fair to develope into a first-class sensational item, while he destroyed good prospects for one or more boarders at the jail for an indefinite period. It came about in this way. Two colored girls' admiration for a certain colored gallant had become so unbearable, one to the other, that they had concluded to resort to the code for a settlement of their claims to the heart in dispute. The time and place had been selected, and the duel was just about to be pulled off, when Jailer Adams happened to appear on the scene, and as an officer compelled a postponement of the tragedy then and there threatened.

Constable James W. Aylor, of Big Bone, shot and killed Bert Roberts, son of ex-Justice of the Peace, R. L. Roberts and a nephew of Deputy Sheriff Allphin, at the picnic at Big Bone Springs, Monday. It's said that Roberts was making considerable noise in the crowd, and when Aylor went to him a second time to quiet him, he made a dive for Aylor with his knife, when the officer drew his pistol and shot him dead in his tracks. Another report has it Roberts and Aylor were in a quarrel, and that Roberts was backing away from Aylor when he shot.

The arrangements for the next fair at Florence are progressing nicely Several new buildings will be arranged for the accommodation of the patrons. Every effort will be made to give the fair-going public the best exhibition in the history of this part of the State. The attractions will be such that you and your entire family will want to attend every day, and you may as well expect to make your arrangements to that end. The report that has become current that a fee will be charged for exhibiting articles, is false—the exhibition is free to the world.

The prison Mirror, published in the Minnesota penitentiary, says: "Why is it, that from the first inception of our paper until the present time we have never had an editor sojourn in our midst? Other professions have been well represented; of preachers we have had enough for the subsistance of an African chief for a year; doctors in sufficient number to depopulate a State, and enough lawyers to establish a fair sized colony in hades, but editors—not one."

Three or four old soldiers were discussing the war with Spain, last Saturday, when it was remarked that the volunteers are very anxious to get to the front and into the fight. One of the veterans remarked, "Yes, the inexperienced soldier is always anxious to get into a fight, but after they take part in one hard battle they are not so anxious to be called on to take part in another. They generally learn in the first battle."

The average 100 bushels of corn loses 115 pounds when it has become thoroughly dry. If the 1,000 bushels is worth 80 cents when gathered, it must bring 75 cents when dry. Add to this the cost of interest and insurance and it is evident that the rise must be considerable in order to pay for the holding for a higher market.—Farmer's Home Journal.

The weather is very pleasant again.

W. L. B. Rouse, of the Limabug neighborhood, had a narrow escape from a serious accident one day last week. He was thrown from a rear cut mower in front of the cutter bar, but fortunately escaped with no serious injury.

Those interested in an iron bridge across Middle creek, near McVille, are requested to attend the meeting to be held in Bellevue at 2 o'clock p. m., on the fourth Saturday in this month. A good bridge is badly needed at the place it is proposed to erect one, and those interested are amply able to have a good one.

This country is badly in need of good rain.

In Paris accident insurance policies are issued guaranteeing the holder against the consequences of the damage he may inflict on others. They are taken out chiefly by cab drivers.

The American soldier is as cool and nervy as the American sailor. At Juragua sharpshooters captured a locomotive and rode into the town, drove the Spanish soldiers out of their camp and then calmly sat down and ate the freshly cooked breakfast prepared for their enemy.

James Marcellus Hobson, a brother of the Merrimac hero, has by competitive examination won an appointment at West Point. For four years past he has been trying to secure appointment at the Annapolis Naval academy, but could not overcome the opposition of an unfriendly congressman.

Negus Menelik of Abyssinia, the lion of Judah, is preparing to visit Jerusalem in 1900. He wishes to visit the scenes where the mother of his race, the queen of Sheba, was entertained by King Solomon. According to his own genealogical tree Menelik is the ninety-seventh successor of the queen.

The advancement of the sons of influential politicians over the heads of young men educated for warfare has caused much dissatisfaction. A satirist thus expresses his views on the subject: "Sons of great men all remind us we may make our lives sublime, and with papa's push behind us we can get there every time."

The late Justice Daniels, of New York, was one of the many persons afflicted with the dread of being buried alive. "I request," he writes in his will, "that interment shall be delayed until after my decease shall have obviously and certainly taken place, and excluding reliance as to that fact on the opinion of any physician, as such opinions have so often proved to be mistakes."

A resident of Springfield, Mass., appeared at a police station in that city and announced that he wished to contribute a dollar toward the cost of the war because Spain tortured some of his ancestors in the inquisition. The sergeant in charge declined to accept the contribution on the ground that if the ancestors were tortured only a dollar's worth the case was not one to bother with.

Russia, having extended her territory in Alaska, has been aroused to the necessity of taking active measures to combat infectious diseases in the far east. The government at St. Petersburg is about to send one of the most distinguished medical men of the empire to England to consult with the British authorities as to the means adopted in their far off possession for checking disease.

Hottentot women, who have long been supposed to be about the lowest type of human beings, have an expensive literature of folk stories, folk songs and baby songs, with which they amuse their children. Many of their stories and songs are of considerable beauty, and seem to show that in some forgotten period the tribe or race was much higher in the scale of civilization than it is at the present time.

It is curious how, in France, the old-fashioned lavender has come back into favor. The plant itself used to be considered the emblem of affection, and it is certainly associated in our minds with sweetness and freshness. Many of the best Parisian flowers are scented with it, as well as sachets, while any number of bottles of the perfume are sold in Paris every day. It is better, perhaps, than some of the highly scented perfumes.

Commodore George C. Remey, the naval officer in charge of the base of supplies for the United States navy at Key West is an Iowa man. He was appointed to the academy at Annapolis from that state in 1855, and was graduated in 1859. At the beginning of the civil war he was commissioned a lieutenant of the gunboat Marblehead. After the war he was made a lieutenant-commander and later served in numerous posts of the navy on land and sea.

There are many articles requiring revenue stamps before they can be handled, such as a long list of proprietary medicines, but the especial provision that is of widest application is the provision requiring a two-cent stamp to be placed on every inland bill of exchange, every bank check, draft or certificate of deposit not drawing interest, or orders for the payment of any sum of money drawn upon or issued by any bank, trust company or any persons, companies or corporations at sight or demand. Promissory notes of a face value up to $100 require a two-cent stamp.

THE DOOMED CITY.

Maj. Gen. Shafter Takes Personal Command of the Troops at Santiago.

Cervera Prepared to Make a Dash From the Harbor—Red Cross Flags Flying Over Buildings in Santiago—Decisive Battle Soon.

Gen. Lawton's Headquarters, five miles east of Santiago de Cuba, June 29 (via Kingston, Jamaica, July 1).—The Spaniards have practically evacuated Caney, close to Santiago de Cuba, where they were believed to have had 3,000 troops.

The American troops spent Tuesday in feeling for the enemy, otherwise engaging in reconnoisances. Gen. Shafter in person, with a small escort, went almost to Caney, a small town five miles northeast of Santiago de Cuba, with which city it is connected by railroad. Lieut. Standing and a detail of Cubans and American sharpshooters occupied a small hill northwest of the American lines and looked directly down on both Caney and Santiago. Caney now seems to hold only about 500 Spanish troops, the number reported by the Cuban scouts, in spite of the belief of the Americans first here that the 8,000 Spaniards driven forward by our advance on Baiquiri and Juragua had all retreated on Caney and not to Santiago. The small number of troops now at Caney indicates that the Spaniards have practically evacuated the place, and this is believed to be the case. Lieut. Standing was not molested during his observation, though he passed through a camp which 24 hours previously had been occupied by a strong Spanish outpost. Corporal Hucht, of Company B, 5th United States infantry, who, with seven men, was sent on outpost duty two miles from Santiago de Cuba Wednesday morning, and who was forgotten until the afternoon, was found by Gen. Shafter and sent into camp. The men considered the whole affair a good joke. They had repeatedly seen the Spaniards, who did not offer to molest them, and the Americans spent the day as if enjoying a picnic in the woods.

Camp Juragua, June 29, via Kingston, Jamaica, July 1. — Gen. Shafter has decided to establish his headquarters in the field and will occupy a tent camp to-night. The siege guns have started for the front. There is every indication that Juragua will cease to be the headquarters for the army, other than for the medical and commissary department, in two or three days. A sufficient force to guard the place will be left here, probably from the volunteer forces of 6,000 men now coming from Tampa, and practically the entire fighting force will swing into Caney or Aguadores, making the base of operations before Santiago de Cuba at this place. The railroad from here to Santiago is being rapidly pushed by the engineers and a large force of troops. Its completion will greatly simplify the movement of supplies and the pack train will have no more arduous work than transporting the food and ammunition from point to point at the front.

Gen. Garcia was hotly impatient to march at once at the head of his men to cut off the advance of Gen. Pando and his 8,000 troops, who are marching from Manzanillo to join the Spanish forces at Santiago. Gen. Garcia was very insistent upon this idea, but Gen. Shafter put an end to the matter by saying: "Not let them get into Santiago, and then we will know where we have got them."

The Spaniards are falling back upon Santiago, and it is believed that they will make a determined stand and a hot fight in defense of their position in the city. The opinion is generally shared by American officers that if the Spaniards shall be forced to evacuate Santiago they will march northward to Nuevitas to join the Spanish column, which just landed there, and later try to effect a junction with the troops under Gen. Blanco at Havana. This seems to be the most natural move for them to make, and indeed their only resort in the event of defeat or the probability of their being routed.

Spanish deserters who have come into the American camp from Santiago report that Adm. Cervera has everything in readiness to make a dash out of the harbor with his fleet, his object being to try to sink at least one of the ships of the American squadron, and, if need be, go down with his flags flying and bands playing.

Red Cross flags are flying in all parts of the town, which either means the recognition of the Red Cross in the protection of the women and children, or are intended to show that there is a great deal of sickness in the city. The latter, however, is untrue, as all of the deserters from Santiago report that the health of the troops and inhabitants of the city is excellent.

Military Balloon Successful.

Washington, July 2.—Reports received at the navy and war departments announce the successful operation of military balloons. Adm. Simpson reports that the first balloon used by the navy was sent up from the New York on Thursday and worked successfully. Col. Allen reports to Gen. Greeley that he has successfully used the Signal corps war balloon. Observers, he says, could plainly see the ships in the harbor, the city of Santiago and the movement of the Spanish troops about the streets.

Three Gunboats Will Sail for Key West.

New York, July 2.—The cruiser Topeka will sail from the Brooklyn navy yard Saturday. Her coal bunkers are filled. The gunboats Huntress, Syren and Sylvia leave for Key West early next week.

GEN. AGUINALDO.

Noted Insurgent Leader Declares the Philippine Island a Republic—Will Not Enter Manila at Present.

London, July 2.—A representative of Gen. Aguinaldo, the leader of the Philippine insurgents, who served with him during the last insurrection and who is now in London, is quoted in an interview as saying that before Aguinaldo left Hong Kong he promised Rr. Adm. Dewey (then commodore), not to enter Manila until the arrival of the American troops.

Aguinnldo's representative adds that he has just received a dispatch from Cavite saying a republic has been proclaimed there by Aguinaldo, under the protection of the United States and approved by Great Britain and Japan.

Continuing, the representative of the Philippine leader asserts that he has been to Berlin, where he saw the under secretary for the foreign office, who declared that all Germany wanted was that the existing import tariff would not be altered by a republic being established in the Philippine islands, or, at least, that preference should not be given to any other nation.

Hong Kong, July 2.—According to private letters from Cavite, dated June 27, the insurgents occupy the whole of Bulucan province. Occasional skirmishes occur. The insurgents captured the Spanish ship Bchal in Kayaboa bny while she was landing 500 troops. A stubborn fight occurred, in which the Spanish commander, a lieutanant colonel, was killed. The insurgents have captured the governor of Bulucan, together with his wife and children.

Gen. Aguinaldo placed under arrest the rebel leaders Artachio and Sandico for having revealed the fact that the steamer Pasig, recently seized by the Hong Kong authorities, was laden with arms for the insurgents. Sandico applied to Consul Williams and was liberated. He is now on board the Nanshan. It is feared that the incident will cause a split in the insurgent party, Sandico being influential and the only insurgent leader capable of administration.

The insurgents fear that Gen. Aguinaldo will shoot Artachio unless Adm. Dewey interferes, as he is suspicious that Sandico and he intended to form an opposition party.

STEREOTYPERS' STRIKE.

They Demand an Increase of Wages From $3.25 to $4.00 Per Day and a Reduction of Working Hours.

Chicago, July 2.—The following bulletin was posted at every Chicago newspaper office Friday evening at 10 o'clock:

At 8 o'clock this (Friday) evening the Stereotypers' union notified the newspaper publishers of Chicago that unless their demands for an increase of wages from $3.25 to $4 per day, a reduction of the working day from 8 to 7 hours, with payment at the rate of 75 cents per hour for all overtime, and other concessions, were at once acceded to, they would refuse to return to work. In consequence of this action the ——, common with all other Chicago papers, will not appear Saturday.

This action of the newspapers was in pursuance of an understanding recently entered into, including among other provisions the following agreement:

"In the event of a strike in any of the departments of one or more of the Chicago daily newspaper offices the mechanical resources of all our offices shall be pooled to the extent and with the purpose that no newspaper shall be published unless and until all the newspapers can be promptly published on the same day."

The stereotypers have been averaging from $19.50 to $22 per week on six day evening papers and from $24 to $27 on seven day morning papers. It is anticipated that the influx of stereotypers from all parts of the country will be so immediate and so great that the interruption of publication will continue for but a few days.

The Chicago publishers Friday night issued the following card to newspaper proprietors in neighboring cities:

"The publishers of Chicago would appreciate it if the newspapers in contiguous territory would not try to supply Chicago with their papers. No effort will be made here for two days and in the meantime it is the opinion that the cause of all newspapers would be best served by this plan. Other cities may have a similar experience very shortly and Chicago papers would undoubtedly reciprocate."

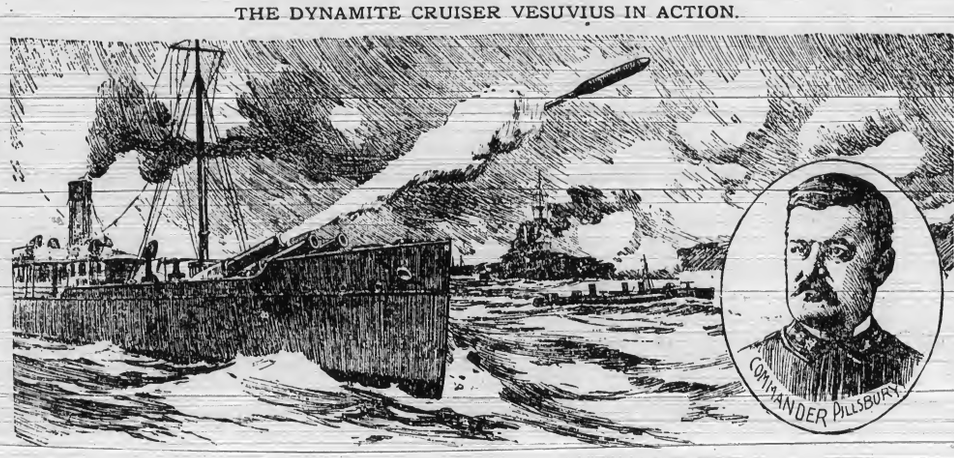
Camara's Fleet.

Madrid, July 2.—Accordiug to a dispatch received Friday at the Spanish ministry of marine, Adm. Camara, in command of the Spanish fleet recently at Port Said, Egypt, has passed through the Suez canal, apparently on his way to the Philippine islands.

London, July 2.—The officials of the United States embassy discredit the Madrid dispatch saying Adm. Camara has passed through the Suez canal. They say he had not entered the canal Friday morning.

Dewey Still Waiting.

Hong Kong, July 2.—The Japanese cruiser Matsushima arrived here Friday from Manila, where she left on the afternoon of Monday, June 27. She reports that the American transports had not then arrived. The situation was unchanged, the Spaniards continuing to erect defenses and the insurgents occupying positions within about 2,000 yards of the city. Food was growing scarcer. The Matsushima reports also that when she left Manila harbor there were five German and four British war ships there.



Peace Rumors Absurd.

Madrid, July 2.—Premier Sagasta, in an interview Friday, in regard to peace rumors said: "They are absurd. I am astonished that any attention is paid to them. There will not be, and can not be, any discussion in regard to this matter. I affirm this absolutely. The government can not treat for peace now. That action depends on developments and the government will not act until the proper time."

Will Return to Spain.

London, July 2.—The Madrid correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "It is officially announced that the Spaniards have destroyed a small railway running from the mining regions which it is supposed the Americans intended to utilize for an attack on Morro castle. I believe Adm. Camara's squadron will certainly return to Spain owing to the difficulties interested parties have successfully thrown in its way."

Firing Dynamite Projectiles at the Fortifications of Santiago de Cuba Harbor.

The Proposal Was Rejected.

Berlin, July 2.—The following dispatch has been received from Hong Kong: "According to trustworthy intelligence from Manila, the Spanish governor general had a few days ago, at his own request, a meeting with Adm. Diedrichs (the commander of the German naval forces in the far east), in order to propose, in behalf of the Spanish government, that Manila should be handed into the provisional charge of a neutral commander. The proposal was rejected by Adm. Diedrichs in view of the American blockade."

Lynchers' Preliminary Examination.

Charleston, S. C., July 2.—The preliminary examination of the lynchers of the postmaster of Lake City last March, when the postmaster was burned, Baker killed and his family wounded, began Friday. Four privates of the South Carolina volunteers, arrested in Columbia charged with complicity, were arraigned with others arrested last Tuesday. The examination will continue Saturday.

Manzanillo Bombarded.

New York, July 2.—A correspondent in Santiago de Cuba telegraphs to the war Journal that four United States ships bombarded Manzanillo, on the gulf of Guacanayabo, on Thursday, inflicting much damage to the defenses of the place. Spanish gunboats, according to this dispatch, opened fire upon the American ships, which then moved out of range.

Degree Conferred on Adm. Dewey.

Northfield, Vt., July 1.—At the commencement exercises of Norwich university Thursday, the degree of master of military science was conferred upon Rr. Adm. George Dewey, a graduate of the university. Gov. Samuel E. Pingree received a degree of doctor of laws.

Wages Advanced.

Birmingham, Ala., July 1.—The Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. and the Sloss Iron & Steel Co. have granted an advance of 2½ cents per ton, equal to 7 per cent in wages, to their 8,000 coal mines, effective July 1, and a strike, which was threatened, will be averted.

Operator Commits Suicide.

New York, July 2.—Wm. Lyndy, 49 years old, a well known telegraph operator, shot himself in the head Friday night in the basement of the Western Union building, and died in a few minutes. He was despondent and out of work.

MANILA EXPEDITIONS.

The Total Number of Officers and Men There and on the Way is 470 Officers and 10,464 Men.

Washington, July 1.—The secretary of war has received a telegram from Maj. Gen. Otis at San Francisco, saying that the three military expeditions which already have started for Manila, were made up as follows:

First—May 25, 115 officers and 2,380 men, Gen. Anderson commanding.

Second—June 15, 158 officers and 3,428 men under command of Gen. Greene.

Third—June 27, 197 officers and 4,650 men in command of Gen. McArthur, making a total of 470 officers and 10,464 men.

She Declines the Nomination.

Grand Rapids, Mich., July 2.—Mrs. Flora B. Renkes, democratic nominee for state superintendent of public instruction, has received an opinion from the attorney general that she is constitutionally eligible to the office, but for personal reasons she will decline the nomination.

No Third Call at Present.

Washington, July 2.—It can be stated positively that the president does not contemplate issuing a third call for volunteers within the next two weeks at least, as present plans in all probability will preclude its issuance within a fortnight, if then.

Lunatic at Large.

Columbus, O., July 2.—Richard Atwater, a Pickaway county patient in the State Hospital for Insane, is missing from the institution. He has a habit of running away.

In Health Worth Ten Cents!

Man suffers many mysterious ailments from unknown causes, and nine-tenths of them have their origin in the digestive canal somewhere. It does any person good to clean out this canal occasionally in a rational way, provided it is not done in a violent manner. American Loss Placed at 100 Killed and 600 Wounded—Spaniards Lost 1,000 Killed and Wounded—Shafter Wants Hospital Ships.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Owing to the many conflicting reports of the losses of the American troops in Friday's engagement, it has been thought best by the war department officials to make public the text of Gen. Shafter's last dispatch, received saturday morning at 4 o'clock. It is as follows:

SIBONEY, via Playa del Este, July 1. —Adjutant General, Washington: —I fear I have under estimated Saturday's casualties. A large and thoroughly equipped hospital ship should be sent here at once to care for the wounded. The chief surgeon says he has use for 40 more medical officers. The ship must bring a launch and boats for conveying the wounded.

(Signed.) SHAFTER.

Major General Commanding.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A dispatch to the Herald from the headquarters of the American army before Santiago, July 1, via Playa del Este, says:

Maj. Gen. Shafter Friday morning began with great vigor the attack on the outer defenses of Santiago.

From three directions the American forces advanced toward the doomed city.

While Gen. Lawton and Gen. Wheeler were attacking Caney, northwest of Santiago, Gen. Kent was advancing toward Aguadores, Gen. Garcia with his Cuban troops, at the same time approached Caney from the southeast and the other divisions of the American army pressed toward Santiago from the east, our forces thus presenting a solid front from the coast to Gen. Linares' northern defenses.

Four members of the 21st regiment of regulars were killed in the fighting between Sevilla and Aguadores, while 16 other Americans, all members of the 21st, were wounded.

Both the American and Spanish fleets eagerly joined in the battle. While Adm. Sampson's men were reducing the recently emplaced batteries at Aguadores, Adm. Cervera's fleet was hurling shells in the direction of the American and Cuban lines.

Two batteries of light artillery, acting under orders from Maj. Gen. Shafter, who went to the front at the head of the troops began the battle of Santiago by attacking Caney.

From this village a direct road leads into Santiago and the advance of our forces will be irresistible when they gain possession of this road.

Gen. Joe Wheeler, with a detachment of his cavalry command, and Gen. Garcia, with his Cuban troops, quickly joined Gen. Lawton's men in the advance upon Caney.

The Spaniards for a time fought desperately to prevent Caney from falling into the hands of our forces. It was a vain effort. Before the fighting had been long under way the Americans and Cubans gained ground. Foot by foot the enemy was driven back into the village.

It was evident after the first hour's fighting that Gen. Shafter had accurately gauged the strength of the enemy and that he would be able to drive the Spaniards into Santiago at his pleasure.

It was with difficulty that the commanding officers restrained the ardor of our troops until the hour for beginning the attack. The enthusiasm of the American forces was intense and their spirit quickly spread to the Cuban troops. All have shared the belief of Gen. Shafter that Santiago could be taken by a sharp, persistent attack and they have been impatient to advance.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A special dispatch to the Evening World, dated El Paso, Cuba, near Santiago, noon, by way of Playa del Este, July 1, says:

The first artillery fight of the campaign has just been ended by the silencing of a Spanish battery.

The wounded are still being picked up as this dispatch is hurried away.

Gen. Lawton's division bivouacked near El Caney Thursday night without fires.

At 7 o'clock there was a sullen "boom." It was the first shot from Capron's battery, fired to avenge the killing of his son. Promptly the Spanish began to answer the challenge from their forts and trenches. At 7:15 Grimes battery opened on the Spanish troops to the right of the San Juan blockhouse.

The common powder used by our troops smoked and was a fine target for the Spanish field battery, which probably served by Adm. Cervera's marines, judging by the accuracy of the aim. While our smoke gave the enemy our range, Grimes could not locate the enemy's guns, which used smokeless powder, except approximately, but, satisfied as to the Spanish position, our men worked like mad.

The Spanish fire gradually slackened and in less than an hour it ceased altogether.

Battery A, of the 2d artillery, deserves great credit for the victory for it was a case of blindness against sight. The battery loss, the officers state, was as follows: Killed—Privates Underwood and Helm. Wounded—First Sergt. George C. Henry; Sergts. Veite and Cornford; Corp. Keen.

The battery was supported by the rough riders, about 100 Cubans with a Hotchkiss gun, a detachment of the 10th cavalry and a squadron from Company C, of the 2nd cavalry. Most of the Spanish shells flew low over the crest of the battery's position and exploded. Through them the rough riders had about ten wounded, among them R. Champlain, whose left elbow was smashed.

The Cuban leader Gonzales reports that the Cubans lost 20 killed and wounded.

The details of Gen. Lawton's losses have not arrived.

Heavy volley firing has been heard for three hours. It seems to indicate a strong American advance.

There is no artillery firing from El Caney, and only scattering shots come from San Juan, which has a slope of 15 feet in the hundred.

Both divisions really are in battle. The day is clear and a moderate breeze is blowing, but there is a strong heat. The troops are in good condition.

Capt. Grimes and Corp. McLean were overcome by the heat, but are recovering. The battery shot 100 rounds, two-thirds shell and the balance shrapnel.

The military balloons used by the signal corps for the purpose of obtaining accurate information of the location of the enemy and the character of their defenses, proved of inestimable service in the engagement. The balloon floated just over the tree tops and was easily guided along three miles of the road toward the lines of the enemy.

Whenever it halted for the purpose of taking a photograph of the fortifications below, the Spaniards seized the occasion for taking hot shots at the mid-air monster. At one time the big balloon hung over San Juan, not over 500 yards from the enemy, and for five minutes the Spaniards below tried in vain to puncture it.

In the fighting at San Juan a Spanish shell two and a half inches in diameter burst in the midst of Capt. Puritiers' battery in the 1st artillery, wounding several. Among those injured was Private Samuel Barr.

Roosevelt's rough riders were also in this fight, and bore themselves with as much credit as in the last Friday's battle in the bush. Several of the rough riders were wounded, among them the following: Devore, S. G., sergeant, Troop K; Armstrong, W. A., corporal, Troop J; McSparron, corporal, Troop G; Ash, Alvin C., private, Troop G; Freeman, W., private, Troop F; Long, Benjamin, A., private, Troop K; Mitchell, Mason, private, Troop K; Horton, V. D., corporal, Troop I, 3rd United States cavalry, was also wounded.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A copyrighted dispatch to the Evening World dated "In the field, two miles from Santiago, July 1," and cabled from Playa del Este says:

San Juan Heights have fallen and the way is now opened for an advance on Morrow castle. It was a glorious victory but very dearly purchased.

The place was the strongest Spanish outpost, well fortified and valiantly defended. The position was an excellent one. San Juan hill is steep, and an artillery battery was located on it. It was also occupied by barracks and other buildings. But the American troops stormed the heights, and Spanish valor had to yield to the bulldog tenacity and courage of the Anglo-Saxon.

As I write our troops are swarming up the hill and covering it like ants. The Spaniards are demoralized. The fighting has been of the hardest kind and our troops have suffered severely, but the enemy's works are in their hands and they do not count the cost.

El Caney is also ours. The general advance, which began at 3 p. m., has been successful along the line.

After driving the enemy out of El Caney the troops took possession of the village and destroyed the Spanish fort by which it had been defended. The Spaniards fled into the city of Santiago, where they are now.

The losses on both sides were heavy. A bursting Spanish shell almost annihilated an entire company of our troops.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A Playa del Este cable says that the Spanish losses Friday were more than 1,000 in killed and wounded.

THE BEAUTIFUL QUEEN.

Vashti the Veiled, Vashti the Sacrificed, Vashti the Silent.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage Commends Modesty in Women and Draws a Useful Lesson From the Story of Drunken Ahasuerus and His Lovely Queen.

Dr. Talmage's text for last Sunday's sermon was Esther 1, 11, 12: "Bring Vashti, the queen, before the king with the crown royal to show the people and the princes her beauty, for she was fair to look upon; but the Queen Vashti refused to come."

We stand amid the palaces of Shushan. The pinnacles are aflame with the morning light. The columns rise festooned and breathed, the wealth of empires flashing from the grooves, the ceilings adorned with images of bird and beast and scenes of prowess and conquest. The walls are hung with shields and emblazoned until it seems the whole round of splendors is exhausted. Each arch is a mighty leaf of architectural achievement. Golden stars shining on glowing arabesque. Hangings of undulating work in which mingle the whiteness of the sky, the greenness of the grass and the whiteness of the sea foam. The tapestries hung on silver rings, wedding together the pillars of marble. Pavilions reaching out in every direction. These for repose, filled with luxuriant couches, in which weary limbs sink until all fatigue is submerged. Those for carousal where kings drink down a kingdom at one swallow. Amazing spectacle! Light of silver dripping down over stairs of ivory on shields of gold. Floors of stained marble, sunset red and night black and inlaid with gleaming pearl. In connection with this palace there is a garden where the mighty men of foreign lands are seated at a banquet. Under the spread of oak and linden and acacia the tables are arranged. The breath of honeysuckle and frankincense fills the air. Fountains leap up into the light, the spray struck through with rainbows falling with pitiless baptism upon flowering shrubs, then rolling down through channels of marble and widening out here and there into pools swirling with finny tribes of foreign aquariums, bordered with scarlet anemones, hypericums and many colored ranunculi.

Meats of rarest bird and beast smoking up amid wreaths of aromatics. The vases filled with apricots and almonds. The baskets piled up with apricots and pomegranates and pomegranates. Melons tastefully twined with leaves of acacia. The bright waters of Eulaeus filling the urns and dropping outside the rim in flashing beads amid the traceries. Wine from the royal vats of Ispahan and Shiraz, in bottles of tinged shell, and lily shaped cups of silver and flagons and tankards of solid gold. The music rises higher and the revelry breaks out into wilder transport, and the wine has flushed the cheek and touched the brain, and louder than all other voices are the hiccough of the inebriates, the gabble of fools and the song of the drunkards.

In another part of the palace Queen Vashti is entertaining the princess of Persia at a banquet. Drunken Ahasuerus says to his servants, "You go and fetch Vashti from that banquet with the women and bring her to this banquet with the men and let me display her beauty." The servants immediately obey, for they are the king's command, but there was a rule in Oriental society that no woman might appear in public without having her face veiled. Yet here is a mandate that no one dare dispute, demanding that Vashti come in unveiled before the multitude. However, there was in Vashti's soul a principle more regal than Ahasuerus, more brilliant than the gold of Shushan, of more wealth than the realm of Persia, which commanded her to disobey this order of the king; and so all the righteousness and holiness and modesty of her nature rise up into one sublime refusal. She says: "I will not go into the banquet unveiled." Ahasuerus was infuriate, and Vashti, robbed of her position and her estate, is driven forth in poverty and ruin to suffer the scorn of a nation, and yet to receive the applause of after generations, who shall rise up to admire this martyr to kingly insolence. Well, the last vestige of that feast is gone, the last grandeur has faded, the last arch has fallen, the last tankard has been destroyed, and Shushan is a ruin, but as long as the world stands there will be multitudes of men and women familiar with the Bible who will come into this picture gallery of God and admire the divine portrait of Vashti the queen, Vashti the veiled, Vashti the sacrifice, Vashti the silent.

In the first place I want you to look upon Vashti the queen. A diet ribbon, rayed with white, drawn around her forehead, indicated her queenly position. It was no small honor to be queen in such a realm as that. Hark to the rustle of her robes! See the blaze of her jewels, and yet it is not necessary to have place and regal robe in order to be queenly. When I see a woman with stout faith in God putting her foot upon all meanness and selfishness and godless display, going right forward to serve Christ and the race by a grand and glorious service, I say, "that woman is a queen," and the ranks of heaven look over the battlements upon the coronation, and whether she comes up from the shanty on the commons or the mansion of the fashionable square I greet her with the shout, "all hail, Queen Vashti!"

What glory was there on the brow of Mary of Scotland, or Elizabeth of England, or Marguerite of France, or Catharine of Russia compared with the worth of some of our Christian mothers, many of them gone into glory; or of that woman mentioned in the Scriptures who put her all into the Lord's treasury; or of Jephthah's daughter, who made a demostration of unselfish patriotism; or of Abigail, who rescued the herds and flocks of her husband; or of Ruth who toiled under a tropical sun for poor, old, helpless Naomi; or of Florence Nightingale, who went at midnight to stanch the battle wounds of the Crimea; or of Mrs. Adoniram Judson, who kindled the lights of salvation amid the darkness of Burma; or of Mrs. Hemans, who poured out her holy soul in words which will forever be associated with hunter's horn, and captive's chain, and bridal hour, and lute's throb, and curfew's knell at the dying day, and scores and hundreds of women unknown on earth who have given water to the thirsty, and bread to the hungry, and medicine to the sick, and smiles to the discouraged, their footsteps heard along dark lane and in government hospital and in almshouse corridor and by prison gate? There may be no regal robe. There may be no palatial surroundings. She does not need them, for all charitable men will unite with the crackling lips of fever struck hospital and plague blotched lazaretto in greeting her as she passes: "Hail! Hail! Queen Vashti!"

Again, I want you to consider Vashti the veiled. Had she appeared before Ahasuerus and his court on that day with her face uncovered she would have shocked all the conflicting oriental society, and the very men who in their intoxication demanded that she come in their sober moments would have despised her. As some flowers seem to thrive best in the dark lane and in the shadow and where the sun does not seem to reach them, so God appoints to most womanly natures a retiring and unobtrusive spirit. God once in a while does call an Isabella to a throne, or a Miriam to strike the timbrel at the front of a host, or a Marie Antoinette to quell a French mob, or a Deborah to stand at the front of an armed battalion, crying out: "Up! Up! This is the day in which the Lord will deliver Sisera into thy hands." And when the women are called to such outdoor work and to such heroic positions God prepares them for it, and they have iron in their soul, and lightnings in their eye, and whirlwinds in their breath, and the borrowed strength of the Lord omnipotent in their right arm. They walk through furnaces as though they were hedges of wildflowers and cross seas as though they were shimmering sapphire, and all the harpies of hell down to their dungeon at the stamp of womanly indignation.

But these are exceptions. Generally Doreas would rather make a garment for the poor boy, Rebecca would rather fill the trough of the camels, Hannah would rather make a coat for Samuel, the Hebrew maid would rather give a prescription for Naaman's leprosy, the woman of Sarepta would rather gather a few sticks to cook a meal for famished Elijah, Phebe would rather carry a letter for the inspired apostle, Mother Lois would rather educate Timothy in the Scriptures. When I see a woman going about her daily duty, with cheerful dignity at the table, with kind and gentle, but firm discipline presiding in the nursery, going out into the world without any blast of trumpets, following the footsteps of Him who went about doing good, I say, "This is Vashti with a veil on."

But when I see a woman of unblushing boldness, loud voiced, with a tongue of infinite clitter clatter, with arrogant look, passing through the streets with the step of a walking beam, gayly arrayed in a very hurricane of millinery, I cry out: "Vashti has lost her veil." When I see a woman struggling for political preferment, trying to force her way up to conspicuity amid the masculine demagogues, who stand with swollen fists and bloodshot eyes and pestiferous breath to guard the polls, wanting to go through the loafferism and defilement of popular sovereigns, who crawl up from the saloons greasy and foul and vermin covered to decide questions of justice and order and civilization—when I see a woman, I say, who wants to press through all that horrible scum to get to public place and power, I say: "Ah, what a pity! Vashti has lost her veil!"

When I see a woman of comely features and of adroitness of intellect and endowed with all that the schools can do for her and of high social position, yet moving in society with supereliousness and hauteur, as though she would have people know their place and with an undefined combination of giggle and strut and rhodomontade, endowed with allopaths quantities of talk, but only homeopathic infinitesimals of sense, the terror of dry goods clerks and railroad conductors, discoverers of significant meanings in plain conversation, prodigies of balinage and innuendo, I say, "Vashti has lost her veil."

Again, I want you this morning to consider Vashti the sacrifice. Who is this that I see coming out of that palace gate of Shushan? It seems to me that I have seen her before. She comes homeless, houseless, friendless, trudging along with a broken heart. Who is she? It is Vashti the sacrifice. Oh, what a change it was from regal position to a wayfarer's crust! A little while ago approved and sought for. Now, none so poor as to acknowledge her acquaintanceship. Vashti the sacrifice.

Ah, you and I have seen it many a time! Here is a home empaneled with beauty. All that refinement and books and wealth can do for that home has been done; but Ahasuerus the husband and father, is taking hold on paths of sin. He is gradually going down. After awhile he will flounder and struggle like a wild beast in a hunter's net—farther away from God, farther away from the right. Soon the bright apparel of the children will turn to rags; soon the household song will become the sobbing of a broken heart. The old story over again. Brutal centaurs breaking up the marriage feast of Lapithæ. The house full of outrage and cruelty and abomination, while trudging forth from the palace gate are Vashti and her children. There are homes in all parts of this land that are in danger of such breaking up. Oh, Ahasuerus, that you should stand in a home by a dissipated life destroying the peace and comfort of that home! God forbid that your children should ever have to wring their hands and have people point their finger at them as they pass down the street and say, "there goes a drunkard's child!" God forbid that the little feet should ever have to trudge the path of poverty and wretchedness! God forbid that any evil spirits born of the wine cup or the brandy glass should come forth and uproot that garden, and with a lasting, blistering, all consuming curse shut forever the palace gate against Vashti and the children.

One night during our civil war I went to Hagerstown to look at the army and I stood on a hilltop and looked down upon them. I saw the campfires all through the valleys and over the hills. It was a weird spectacle, those campfires, and I stood and watched them, and the soldiers who were gathered around them were no doubt talking of their homes and of the long march they had taken and of the battles they were to fight, but after awhile I saw these campfires begin to lower, and they continued to lower until they were all gone out, and the army slept. It was imposing when I saw the campfires. It was imposing in the darkness when I thought of that great host asleep. Well, God looks down from Heaven and He sees the firesides of Christendom and the loved ones gathered around these firesides. These are the camp fires where we warm ourselves at the close of day and talk over the battles of life we have fought and the battles that are yet to come. God grant that when at last these fires begin to go out and continue to lower until finally they are extinguished and the ashes of consumed hopes strew the hearth of the old homestead it may be because we have—

Gone to sleep that sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.

Now we are an army on the march of life. Then we shall be an army bivouacked in the tent of the grave.

Once more, I want you to look at Vashti, the silent. You do not hear an utterance from this woman as she goes forth from the palace gate. From the very dignity of her nature you know there will be no vociferation. Sometimes in life it is necessary to make a resist, but there are crisis when the most triumphant thing to do is to keep silence. The philosopher, confident in his newly discovered principle, waiting for the coming of more intelligent generations, willing that men should laugh at the lightning rod and cotton gin and steamboat and telegraph, waiting for long years through the scoffing of philosophical schools in grand and magnificent silence.

Galileo, condemned by mathematicians and monks and cardinals, caricatured everywhere, yet waiting and watching with his telescope to see the coming up of stellar re-enforcements, when the stars in their courses would fight for the Copernican system, then sitting down in complete blindness and deafness to wait for the coming on of the generations who would build his monument and bow at his grave. The reformer, execrated by his contemporaries, fastened in a pillory, the slow fires of public contempt burning under him, ground under the cylinders of the printing press, yet calmly waiting for the day when purity of soul and heroism of character will get the sanction of earth and the plaudits of Heaven. Affliction enduring without any complaint the wild dog pang, and the violence of the storm, and the lock of the chain, and the darkness of the night, waiting until a divine hand shall be put forth to soothe the pang, and hush the storm, and release the captive. A wife abused, persecuted and a perpetual exile from every earthly comfort, waiting, waiting until the Lord shall gather up his dear children in a Heavenly home, and no poor Vashti will be thrust out from the palace gate. Jesus in silence and answering not a word, drinking the gall, bearing the cross, in prospect of the rapturous consummation when—

Angels thronged his chariot wheel
And bore him to his throne.
Then swept their golden harps and sung,
"The glorious work is done!"

Oh, woman, does not this story of Vashti the queen, Vashti the veiled, Vashti the sacrifice, Vashti the silent, move your soul? My sermon converges into the one absorbing hope that none of you may be shut out of the palace gate of Heaven. You can endure the hardships, and the privations, and the cruelties, and the misfortunes of this life if you can only gain admission there. Through the blood of the everlasting covenant you go through those gates or never go through at all. God forbid that you should at last be banished from the society of angels, and banished from the companionship of your glorified kindred, and banished forever. Through the rich grace of our Lord Jesus Christ may you be enabled to imitate the example of Rachel and Hannah and Abigail and Deborah and Mary and Esther and Vashti.

COURTHOUSES were built with little regard for the needs of the counties. Out in Western Kansas is a courthouse costing $20,000. With scarcely a load of wood in the county there is a handsome fireplace in every office. The total population of the county is but 1,500, and the bonds of the county have not yet been reduced. Several courthouses, through the process of merchants' liens and other legal processes, have come to be owned by individuals, who have been puzzled to know what to do with them.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—SENATE—The opening of the second week of debate on the Hawaiian annexation resolutions was unattended by any incident that gave the day any relief from continuous monotony. Three speeches were made against the resolutions by Messrs. Clay, Roach and Caffery. At 11 o'clock today morning the senate convened. A few minutes afterward adopted the report of Mr. Davis, chairman of the foreign relations committee, providing that hereafter, until further action shall be taken, the senate shall convene daily at 11 a. m.

HOUSE—The house devoted Monday's session to the consideration of legislation affecting the District of Columbia. The messages of the president relative to Naval Constructor Hobson, the Hudson officers and crew at Cardenas, and Capt. Hodgson, of the Hugh McCulloch, at Manila, were not read until late.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—SENATE—Almost the entire session of the senate Tuesday was occupied by Mr. Caffery (dem. La.) in a continuation of his speech against the annexation of Hawaii. At 4 o'clock he had not concluded, but yielded the floor in order that the general deficiency bill might be considered. The bill was read and the committee amendments so far as they have been offered were agreed to. Consideration of the bill will be resumed Wednesday morning.

HOUSE—Representative Hilborn (Cal.), a member of the house naval affairs committee, Tuesday introduced a joint resolution authorizing the thanks of congress to Assistant Naval Constructor Richmond Pearson Hobson, and to the volunteer crew of the Merrimac when authorizing Hobson's transfer from the construction corps to the line of the navy. It is in response to the recommendations made by President McKinley in his message to congress Monday. Simultaneously with this resolution Mr. Hilborn also introduced the senate joint resolution recognizing the gallantry of Frank H. Newcomb and Capt. Daniel B. Hodgdon.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—SENATE—A precedent that will be historic was established by the senate at its session Wednesday. For probably the first time in the history of the senate a resolution was adopted tendering the thanks of congress to common seamen specifically naming them in the resolution. The resolutions recommended by the president were adopted, tendering the thanks of congress to Naval Constructor Hobson and the other heroes of the Merrimac and to Lieut. Frank H. Newcomb, commander of the revenue cutter Hudson, for his rescue of the Winslow and her crew off Cardenas, and retiring on full pay Capt. Hogsdon, of the McCulloch, for distinguished services at Manila. The general deficiency bill was passed.

HOUSE—The house Wednesday disposed of a number of measures and incidentally enjoyed a speech from Mr. Allen (Miss.), which precipitated a political episode in which Mr. Grosvenor (rep., O.) and Mr. Bailey (dem., Tex.) figured as the principals. Notable among the measures passed were those providing for the enlistment of cooks in the army; providing for the appointment of military storekeepers for the army; providing for the projection of harbor defences and fortifications against wanton and malicious injury, and giving the secretary of war discretion to permit any church or religious sect to erect its house of worship upon the West Point military reservation. The last named bill precipitated considerable discussion, it being framed at the instance of Catholic effort, but giving equal privileges to all churches.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—SENATE—Late Thursday afternoon the senate cleared the legislative decks for what may be the final action upon the Hawaiian annexation resolutions. Through its action Thursday the last of the appropriation bills that has been pending in conference was disposed of and was a law before midnight. After a debate lasting three hours the senate finally receded from its amendments to the sundry civil and adopted the conference report on Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Allison (ia.) in charge of the bills, explained that it was necessary that the reports should be agreed to Thursday, as that was the last day of the fiscal year. He pointed out that if the bills were not laws by midnight, they would have to be passed again by the two branches of congress.

HOUSE—An attempt to secure the passage of the bill to incorporate the International American bank met with determined opposition Thursday in the house. Filibustering was indulged in, but it was not effective in preventing consideration of the bill. Adjournment, however, was forced before a vote upon the measure could be reached. It will be urged Friday. The house Thursday agreed to the Bailey (dem., Tex.) amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, insisted unanimously upon its disagreements to the senate amendments to the sundry civil bill and sent the general deficiency bill to conference.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—SENATE—For nearly six hours Friday the senate had under discussion the Hawaiian annexation resolutions. The first formal speech in favor of the resolution was delivered by Mr. Pettus (dem., Ala.). His address was strong and patriotic. (As a democrat he maintained that the question was in no sense a party issue, but the proposition was one which ought to command. In the circumstances, the support of men of all parties. He had a heated colloquy with Mr. Caffery (dem., La.), in the course of which the latter intimated that the Alabama senator was afflicted with senility. Mr. Pettus' reply was vigorous and resentful of what he termed an insult. Mr. Caffery subsequently disclaimed any intention of insulting Mr. Pettus.

HOUSE—Friday's session of the house was of little legislative interest. A few private bills were passed and some conference reports of minor importance were adopted. Adjournment, which involved the abandonment of the evening pension session, was taken until Tuesday. Mr. McCleary (rep., Minn.), of the committee on banking and currency, who presented the report upon the banking and currency bill, arose in the house to a question of personal privilege, reading from a Washington paper in which the committee was charged with plagiarism in taking much of its report from the June number of the Journal of Banking. He denied the charge.

Plenty of Cash Going to Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1. — The steamer Newport, which has sailed with Gen. Merritt for the Phillipines, will bring joy to the hearts of our troops in Manila, as it carries a large sum of money for the payment of the soldiers and the purchase of needed supplies. It is said that the steamer carries from one to three million dollars in gold.

Rescued in Time.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 1.—A woman and four small children, entirely destitute of food, were rescued from a house near Highland park, Thursday morning by humane society officers. The woman says she is the wife of David Anderson, who escaped from the Elizabethtown jail last week. The youngest child is five months old and was nearly dead when found.

A CHINESE RAILWAY.

Numerous Difficulties That Confronted Its Constructors.

The train service on China's one and only railway comprises, according to Black and White, four trains daily in each direction, the average speed being 15 miles an hour. The traffic is worked by natives who receive [illegible] shillings a week for their services. The rails and the machinery come from England. The first railway constructed in China was completed in 1876. It was built by British engineers in the face of many difficulties, all of them arising from the prejudice of the Chinese. John Chinaman worships his ancestors, and while a daily course of lying forms part of his education, and an occasional murder is regarded as an incident, the neglect of or even a casual trespass on the grave of an ancestor is held to be a crime for which no punishment known to the ingenuity of man is sufficient. And to make matters more complicated, the Celestials have a knack of burying their dead in all sorts of places, according to how they are indicated by the soothsayers invariably employed for the purpose. To construct a railway through a country so pledged to ancestor worship is rather a big order, and the plans had to be modified any number of times; indeed, seldom a day came without some objection being taken to a particular piece of road. Thus in one case, an embankment would have had to be constructed over the grave of a deceased warrior. In another the shadow of a signal post was found to fall, during at least one hour a day, across the grave of one who had been murdered; and again the sinking of a well within a hundred yards of a cemetery nearly caused a riot. Eventually, however, the road was built, and the trains began to run, but not for long. The astrologers found that the doom of the empire was sealed. The dynasty was threatened, and the mandarins were in arms, for the line was worked by Europeans, and the officials were denied their inalienable right of levying blackmail on the traffic. It was officially announced that the spirits of the air and water were against the existence of the railway. The engineers had to make themselves scarce, and the rails were torn up by officials specially requisitioned for that purpose. The second introduction of railways into China was in 1879, and the present 177 miles of railroad are to be shortly supplemented by an additional 70 miles at a cost of £4,000 per mile.

DEADLY ORCHIDS.

Beautiful Flowers of Brazil That Exhale Perfumed Chloroform.

M. Serge Belaguine, a Russian explorer of Brazil, states in an interview recently published in the Gaulois that a few degrees below the equator he discovered a forest of flowers that prevented him from approaching them. With every deference to M. Belaguine, that forest seems to have been discovered before. Two years ago there appeared in a San Francisco paper an account provided by a bulb hunter returning from the same region, who declared that after noticing in a forest an odor, vague and sweet at first, but which increased as he advanced, ultimately he reached a clearing, and there, straight ahead, was a wilderness of orchids. Trees were loaded with them, they trailed on the ground, mounted in beckoning contortions, dangled from branches, fell in sheets, and elongated and expanded as far as the eye could reach. A breeze passed, and they swayed with it, moving with a life of their own, dancing in the glare of the equatorial sun, and as they danced, exhaled an odor that protected them more sheerly than a wall. In vain did that hunter endeavor to approach. There was a veil of perfumed chloroform through which he could see, but through which, try as he might, he could not pass. It held him back more effectually than bayonets, and it was torture to him to see those flowers and to feel that before he could reach them he must die, suffocated by the very splendors of which he was in search, poisoned by floral jewels such as no one perhaps had seen before. At the time the place was known as the village of demon flowers.—Collier's Weekly.

An African Snake Story.

An exciting incident marked the trial trip on the new Congo railway from Matadi to Stanley Pool, says the Westminster Gazette. When nearing the latter place a huge python was observed on the line. The reptile appeared fully alive to the discomfort of being cut to pieces, and "made tracks" with all possible speed; but, as the train entered a narrow cutting, he found himself at close quarters and turned on the engine driver, who pulled up in dismay. One of the officials hereupon alighted and by a well-timed blow put the intruder hors de combat.

Bryan On the Monroe Doctrine.

"War is harsh; it is attended by hardships and suffering; it means a vast expenditure of money and men. We may all pray for the coming of the time promised in the Holy Writ when the spears shall be beaten into pruning hooks, and the sword into plow shares but universal peace cannot come until justice is enthroned throughout the world. Jehovah deals with nations as he deals with men, and for both decrees that the wages of sin is death. Until the right is triumphed in every land and love reigns in every heart, governments must, as a last resort, appeal to force. As long as the oppressor is deaf to the voice of reason, so long must the citizens accustom the shoulder to the musket and his hand to the saber.

"Our nation exhausted diplomacy in its efforts to secure a peaceable solution of the Cuban question and only took up arms when it was compelled to choose between war and servile submission to cruelty, which would have been a disgraceful submission to barbarism.

"History will vindicate the position taken by the United States in the war with Spain. In saying that I assume that the principles which were invoked in the inauguration of the war will be observed in its prosecution and conclusion. If a contest undertaken for the sake of humanity degenerates into war of conquest, we shall find it difficult to meet the charge of having added hypocrisy to greed. Is our national character so weak that we cannot withstand the temptation to appropriate the first piece of land that comes within our reach?

"To inflict upon the enemy all possible harm is warefare, but shall we contemplate a scheme for colonization of the orient merely because our fleet won a victory in the harbor of Manila?

"Our guns destroyed a Spanish fleet, but can they destroy that sole evident truth, that governments derive their just powers not from superior forces, but from the consent of the governed?

"Shall we abandon a just resistance to European encroachment upon the western hemisphere in order to mingle in the controversies of Europe and Asia?

"Nebraska, standing midway between the oceans, will contribute her full share toward the protection of our seacoast; her sons will support the flag at home and abroad, wherever the honor and the interest of the nation may require. Nebraska will hold up the hands of the government while the battle rages, and when the war clouds roll away, her voice will be heard pleading for the maintainance of those ideas which inspired the founders of our government and gave the nation its pre-eminence among the nations of the earth.

"If others turn to the thoughts of aggrandizement and yield allegiance to those who clothe land covetness in the attractive garb of national destiny, the people of Nebraska will, if I mistake not the sentiments, plant themselves upon the disclaimer entered by Congress, and expect that good faith shall characterize the making of peace, as it did at the beginning of the war. Goldsmith calls upon the states men:

"To judge how wide the limits stand betwixt splendid and happy land.'

"If some dream of the splendors of a heterogeneous empire encircling the globe, we shall be content to aid in bringing enduring happiness to a homogeneous people, consecrated to the purpose of maintaining a government of the people, by the people and for the people."

Hall's body, weighted down with rocks and with a bullet hole in the back, was found in Pond river. At Mayfield Charlie Fincher, aged 13, shot and instantly killed Otto Covey aged 11. The boys were alone at home, and secured a thirty-two-caliber bull dog pistol, with which they were playing burglars. FROM GRANT COUNTY.

[Courier.]

For some inexplicable reason there are a great many pistols fired in the limits of Williamstown every night in the week. Any hour after ten o'clock p. m., one can hear the sharp report of a "gun" in some direction.

Delightful rains have fallen in Grant county during the past week and all kinds of vegetation is growing with marvelous rapidity. Tobacco is all set, wheat harvest is going on right merrily and the farmer has nothing to find fault with.

Last Tuesday two homes in Williamstown were made happy by the arrival of a pair of ten-pound boys, one at the home of Owen Hulett and the other at the home of Simon Billiter, and these two gentlemen are the proudest papas in the universe.

Norton Turley Webb, the twenty months-old son of Sherift G. S. Webb, who was so badly kicked by a horse, an account of which occurred in the last issue of the Courier, died from the effects of the injury at 2 o'clock Monday morning.

A box of eatables was made up by the good people of Williamstown on last Saturday and expressed to Clarence Hensley and other Williamstown soldier boys now in camp at Camp Thomas Chickamauga. Another "gang" of good fellows made up enough to buy a jug of Bart Simmons' best and expressed it in care of W. A. Crouch to the hospital department of the Second Kentucky regiment, of which all of the Grant county boys are members. The boys have been complaining that they were getting hungry and a little dry.

Mrs. Sallie K. Yancey happened to a very serious accident on Tuesday afternoon. A window sash fell and struck her on the back of the head, the blow rendering her unconscious for a time. Several physicians were called in and Mrs. Yancey restored to consciousness, and she is now getting along nicely.

[News.]

Harvest is about over.

Martha H. Morgan, daughter of Wm. Ligon, a Revolutionary soldier, died at her home near Cleveland, Tuesday June 28th.

Wm. Jacobs, an aged and highly respected citizen living near Jonesville, died very suddenly Sunday morning after an illness of about 24 hours.

Wm. O. Claxen has purchased about 4,000 lambs this year. It looked at one time like he was going to get in the hole, but the upward flight of lambs last week made him a handsome profit.

One of the most brilliant events in Owenton history was the marriage of Miss Margaret Settle, the second daughter of Hon. E. E. Settle, to Mr. Jas. W. Cunningham, at the Baptist church Wednesday evening of last week.

The magnificent rains of Saturday night and Sunday has given great encouragement to the farmers. Every part of the county received a liberal portion, and the tobacco crop is entirely set and every body feels good. The corn crop has been thoroughly worked and was just in the proper condition to receive a copious rain. The wheat crop is about harvested and is said to be the finest ever harvested. Now is the time to subscribe for the News and pay up your subscription and make us feel good also.

[Herald.]

R. H. Yancey has sold a number of walnut logs to Joe Bush for shipment to Germany.

Last Monday was hardly worthy of the name of court day, so small a crowd being in town. The farmers were busy with their tobacco, hence could not be here.

The report sent out from Owenton last week by some one to the daily papers to the effect that the county had just been visited by a tobacco season and the entire crop had been set, was a mistake. There is not more than half a crop set. During the past week we have had some glorious rains, but to many farmers they came too late to be of much avail for this particular crop. A considerable acreage had already been plowed up, the plants having died. We think we can say that Owen county can not be counted on for more than fifty per cent of a crop of tobacco for this year. Corn is backward and will not do near so well as was hoped for it a month ago. The wheat yield is not good; neither is that of rye and oats.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXIII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1898. NO. 38.

No two of the newspaper correspondents at the front agree as to the conditions and capabilities of the army.

DON'T put a revenue stamp on letters. All the revenue stamps issued would not carry a letter out of the postoffice.

FITZHUGH LEE appears to be bottled up at Jacksonville. According to expectations he has been due in Havana for several weeks.

THE public is giving Schley credit for the destruction of Cervara's fleet. Sampson is not considered it it, although nobody doubts his good intentions in that direction.

THE Commonwealth, speaking of one Col. D. Linn Gooch, of Covington, says, "Gooch is well known in the outlying country districts." The RECORDER does not like to confess its ignorance, but it would like to know who the d—l is Col. D. Linn Gooch.

CONGRESSMAN BERRY struck the popular chord when he introduced in Congress a rasolution thanking Schley for the naval victory at Santiago,and congratulatory letters and telegrams commenced pouring in upon him by the basket full from all sections of the country.

IN the little flurry created by Sampson failing to recognize Schley as entitled to the credit as commander at the destruction of Cervera's fleet, the brave gunners and others whose position were equally as perilous, should not be forgotten when placing the credit for the great victory.

THE expeditious manner in which the American navy does its work when it meets an adversary, has astonished the world, and the United States is now considered a much stronger naval power than it was one year ago. The accuracy of the American gunners and the strength of the warships Uncle Sam sends out, have made the navy invincible so far.

WHEN Admiral Sampson failed to mention Schley's name in connection with the great naval victory that he (Schley) won at Santiago, last week, he manifested a phase of character that a great man can not afford to be encumbered with. The omission of Schley's name from Sampson's dispatch does not prevent the American people according him the honor of the victory.

CONGRESS adjourned last Friday at noon. The last few hours were a hilarious occasion, such as is seldom witnessed in the Capitol. President McKinley, Speaker Reed. Admirrl Dewey, and nearly everybody else was cheered, and the Star Spangle Banner and Dixie were sung with enthusiasm. It was an outburst on the part of a united country.

A report from Washington says: "Mr. McKinley is constantly called upon to decide disputes between the two fighting branches of the government. General Shafter telegraphed to Washington that Admiral Sampson had positively refused his suggestion, that his fleet should be taken into Santiago harbor so as to cooperate with the army in bombarding and attacking the city. Mr. McKinley wired Sampson to act in concert with Shafter when ever and wherever possible to do so. There was another squabble as to which branch of the service should take charge of the 1600 Spanish prisoners taken with Admiral Cervera, when his fleet was destroyed. Arrangements had been made by the War Department to take care of the Spanish captured by the army in Cuba, and it put in a claim for these naval prisoners, but it was resisted by the Navy Department, and Mr. McKinley stood by the latter, which will keep the prisoners, now on their way to the Portsmouth, N. H. navy yard."

The following is the report of the architect who examined cupola, &c.:

"On Wednesday, June 29th, we made an examination of your Court House roof and cupola, at the request of the County Attorney. We found the roof and ceiling over the Court room, carried on wooden trusses, which also carried the cupola. These trusses are loaded to the extreme limit that their size and construction allows. Being made of wood, considerable shrinkage has taken place, allowing the trusses to sag, breaking the plastering of the court room and no doubt it has in the past, started leaks in the deck of the main roof.

"The cupola is built very lightly and being high and resting on the trusses for a foundation, and having no diagonal bracing, every passing wind causes it to vibrate. The cupola is covered with galvanized iron and the swaying in times of high wind has no doubt caused many of the seams to part, thus causing leaks.

"The deck of the main roof is so constructed that it allows water to accumulate and this fact increases the effects of the leaks in the roof. Broadly speaking, the light construction of the cupola, allowing excessive vibration, has caused the seams of the metal covering to break, forming leaks that have badly damaged the court room, increasing the damage to broken plaster surfaces already cracked by the shrinkage of the trusses.

"There are several ways of remedying these defects:—First The trusses must have all rods and bolts screwed up tight and all loose counter-braces must be wedged solid and firm. It is absolutely necessary that this be done, whether you proceed any farther with the work or not.

"Second—The slope of the deck around cupola should be changed so that the water could not accumulate on it. This should be done by building a new deck right on top of the one now there, giving it a steep pitch away from the cupola on all sides.

"Third—If the cupola is to remain then it should be well braced with diagonal braces not less than 4x8, and a deck should be built inside of the cupola, so arranged that any driving rain that would find its way through the slats and the open joints in the galvanized iron work could be intercepted and thrown outwardly upon the main deck.

"We make this only as a suggestion, for we would not guarantee that this would remedy the trouble entirely. It would, however, better the situation for a time, but we would consider it a temporary expedient. If every joint in the roof and cupola were made absolutely tight today, it might remain so for two or three years, but the swing and vibration would inevitably in the end cause a recurrence of the present trouble, but in a lesser degree.

"In our judgment, the best thing to do would be to remove the present cupola entirely and make a new roof over the present deck. If desired, a small cupola to contain the bell, might be built on top of this. Of course the tightening and wedging of the trusses must be done in any case. By doing this the roof would be made permanently tight and would cease to be a cause of damage, annoyance and constant expense, as it now is.

"We have no drawing before us upon which to make an exact estimate of the cost of the work. Approximately the cost of the temporary repairs as out lined herein, would be two hundred and fifty dollars. and to tear down the cupola and replace it with a small one for the bell, would be $375.

"If you can forward the drawings to us, we will make an exact figure for the work, but the estimate hereinwith submitted is probably near enough for your present purposes and will permit you to outline the course to be pursued."

GOV. BRADLEY and Adjutant General Castleman had a spirited engagement through the public press last week. Castleman opened his guns on the Governor, who replied without any delay. The friends of each claim the victory. The battle was at long range, Castleman's position being at Chickamauga, while the Governor's flagship remained in Frankfort.

WHEN Congressman Berry's successor is nominated by the Democrats, he will beselected from among the ranks of the rural members of the party. He may not be trotted out this fall, but he will be by and by.

POLITICAL.

[Commonwealth.]

While it is some time until the Congressional gong sounds the prospective candidates from are claiming everything in sight, but it is not unlikely that a dark horse or two may enter, which will considerably change the aspect of things. As the matter now stands, Col. Al Berry, the present incumbent, is the only announced candidate. Many entertain the belief that Mayor Rhinock wouldn't mind representing the Sixth District in the Nation's Capitol, but the Mayor says nothing in regard to the matter.

Hon. Ben Graziani will not be a candidate, but Judge George G. Perkins possibly has the bee in his bonnet.

John S. Gaunt, ot Carroll, and Harry Baker, of Boone, will make their usual biennial bow in the Congressional derby, after which they will retire until 1900.

A formidable candidate has lately loomed upon the horizon in the person of Col. D. Linn Gooch, the President of the Jefferson Club. Col. Gooch has not as yet announced himself as a candidate, but many who are close to Gooch state that he will run.

Col. Gooch is well known in the outlying counties of the district, and with the solid support of the Jeffs, which he would get to a moral certainty, makes his candidacy anything but a source of consolation to other candidates.

However, it is too far distant to pick the winners, but of the array above mentioned, any would well represent the old Sixth in Washington.

Senator Goebel was present at the Lebanon Judicial Convention last week, and was called on for a speech. Among otherthings he said:

"This convention, was one of the most important ever held in Kentucky, for upon the wisdom of the assembled delegates depended the good government of the Commonwealth. He indorsed the entire Chicago platform, and said that in the coming election the Democrats in every precinct inKentucky would have two election officers, or hall the total number, to see there was fair play.

The election this fall would indicate the political complexion of the next Legislature. which, by the grace of God, would elect Joe Blackburn to the United States Senate. When the nomination was made he would lend whatever help was in his power to bring about the nominee's election to the Appellate bench.

COUNCIL OF WAR.

Decided to Send a Number of War Vessels to the Spanish Coast.

Ships Are to Set Sail as Soon as They Can Coal and Supply—They Will Leave Separately and Rendezvous on Spanish Coast.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The president called a council of war Thursday to meet at the white house, the purpose being to review the situation and learn exactly what present conditions are, what changes, if any, should be made in the plans for the future conduct of the war. According to one of the members present it was decided to abide by the plans already laid, at least as to the general conduct of the campaign. Confirmation seemed to have been given to this statement later in the day, when after a conference with the members of the war board, Secretary Long announced to the waiting newspaper men that he had ordered Adm. Sampson to detach from his own command immediately the vessels to be embraced in Commodore Watson's Eastern squadron and to direct the commodore to proceed on his mission. The vessels of the squadron will not be the same as those originally selected, for the reason, probably, that the recent engagement with Cervera's squadron necessitated some changes. The new eastern squadron will consist of the battle ships Iowa and Oregon, the protected cruiser Newark and the auxiliary cruisers (carrying side armor) Dixie, Yankee and Yosemite, the coliers Averenda, Cassius, Cæsar, Leonidas and Justin and the supply boat Delmonico. The Iowa, Oregon and Newark are all in the south with Sampson. So is the Yosemite. The Dixie is at New York and the Yankee at Tompkinsville. The colliers are at Hampton Roads with the supply boat Delmonico. The ships are to set sail as soon as they can coal and supply. They will not be required as in case of the southern vessels to come north, which would mean the loss of several days, but will start directly from the points where they are now located. The order provides that each ship shall make her way across the Atlantic to a marine rendezvous, which will be designated in sealed orders to prevent its exposure to the slightest possible danger from the enemy, and the most that is known is that it will be at some point off the Spanish coast. It probably will not be long after that before the American squadron will be in full pursuit of Camara with his remnant of the Spanish navy. Meanwhile the gathering of the American fleet off the Spanish ports is expected to have a sobering effect upon the inflamed people.

A telegram received at the state department Thursday afternoon announced that Camara was still lying with his squadron at Suez, the southern and eastern entrance to the canal. The torpedo boats Osada, Proserpina and Audaz which were Wednesday reported at Pharo, Portugal, arrived Thursday at Cadiz, their home port. Adm. Dewey has been notified of all these movements.

Spain Wants a List of the Prisoners.

MADRID, July 8.—The loss of the fleet has caused the greatest feeling in the principal Spanish ports where the families of the ill-fated men reside. Their relatives are besieging the government for news, and as a result the government has asked France and Austria to apply to Washington for a list of the prisoners.

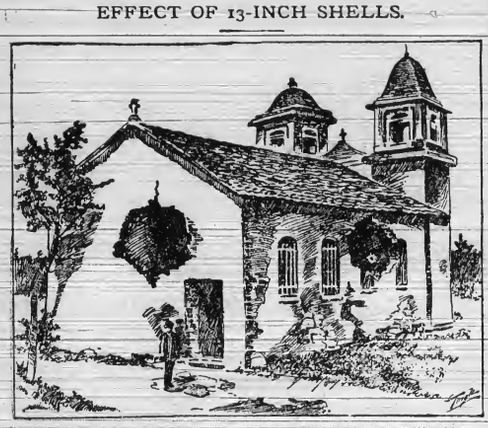
More Artillery for Shafter.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—With a view of giving Gen. Shafter the benefit of more heavy artillery orders were issued Thursday for the immediate departure of four heavy batteries to Tampa for transportation to Santiago at once. These batteries are K, of the 7th artillery at Willet's Point; D, of the 4th artillery at Fort McHenry, Md.; and H and K, of the 2d artillery at Fort Adams, and elsewhere in Rhode Island. Rush orders were given to each of these batteries.

THE CAPTURED ADMIRAL.

He Wires to Capt. Gen. Blanco the Result of His Leaving Santiago With His Squadron.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—This copy of a dispatch was received at the war department Thursday afternoon through the cable office at Playa del Este:



To the General in Chief, Havana: In compliance with your orders, I went out yesterday from Santiago de Cuba with all the squadron, and, after an unequal combat against forces more than triple mine, had all my squadron destroyed by fire. The Teresa, Oquendo and Vizcaya beached and the Colon fleeing. I accordingly informed the Americans, and went ashore and gave myself up. The torpedo-chasers foundered. I do not know how many people are lost, but it will surely reach 600 dead and many wounded. Although not in such great numbers, the living are prisoners of the Americans. The conduct of the crews rose to a height that won the most enthusiastic plaudits of the enemy. The commander of the Vizcaya surrendered his vessel. His crew is very grateful for the noble generosity with which they are treated. Among the dead is Villamil, and I believe Lazaga, and among the wounded Cancas and Eulate. I have lost all and am necessarily depressed. CERVERA.

BOURGOGNE DISASTER.

All the Survivors Leave Halifax For New York—The Ship Cromartyshire is at Anchor in the Stream.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 8.—All the survivors of the Bourgogne disaster have departed for New York. The entire company with the exception of Mr. and Mrs. Lacasse left by steamer to Boston. The two mentioned left by train Thursday. The big ship Cromartyshire, which is at anchor in the stream is the center of interest. Hundreds of boats loaded with people surround the ship. Many of them are content with viewing the damaged ship from the outside, but many of the curious ones go on board and inspect the inside. No claim for salvage has yet been made on behalf of the Allan liner Grecian, as there is no possibility of the damaged vessel leaving the port for some days yet.

EFFECT OF 13-INCH SHELLS.

GRIDLEY'S ASHES.

The Steamer Rio de Janeiro Arrives at San Francisco From Hong Kong With the Capt. Gridley Urn.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8.—The steamer Rio de Janeiro arrived here Thursday from Hong Kong and Yokohama, via Honolulu. The vessel left Hong Kong June 18. She will be unloaded and turned over to the government for use as a transport vessel in a few days. She is in very good condition and but little is required to fit her for the service required of her by the government.

On board the Rio de Janeiro is an urn containing the ashes of Capt. Gridley, captain of the Olympia. The urn and the effects of Capt. Gridley will be shipped to Mrs. Gridley at once.

The Reports Confirmed.

MADRID, July 8.—The cabinet is of the opinion that the fleet of Adm. Camara should continue its voyage to the Philippine islands. The government has received a telegram from Adm. Cervera announcing the death of Adm. Villamil, who was in command of the Spanish torpedo boat squadron at Santiago de Cuba, and the suicide of Capt. Lazaga, the commander of the Infanta Maria Teresa.

Will Not Storm Santiago Immediately.

WASHINGTON, July 8. — The white house war conference Thursday decided not to storm Santiago immediately, believing its downfall can be accomplished soon without the heavy loss of men or ships that would result from storming the city.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

First Regular Session.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—SENATE—The senate was the only house of congress in session Monday. Resolutions calling upon the secretary of war for information as to experiments with explosives and inventions were passed and consideration of the Hawaiian resolutions was resumed. Mr. Allen (Neb.) opposed the resolution. He laid down the proposition that annexation involved the abandonment of the Monroe doctrine and the traditional foreign policy of this country. He declared that Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines should be made independent. Spain should pay the entire cost of the war and the war should end with any increase of the government's territorial possessions. At noon Senator Turpie (Ind.) read the Declaration of Independence. During the session a large number of pension bills were passed.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—SENATE—The debate upon the Hawaiian resolutions continued in the senate. Three speeches were made. Mr. Hoar (Mass.) in advocating annexation made a notable speech against the anti-any policy of general territorial expansion as a tendency of the war. Mr. Lindsay (Ky.) opposed the resolutions directing his attack principally against their constitutionality. Mr. White (Cal.) resumed his speech in opposition.

HOUSE—Representative Berry, of Kentucky, a member of the house committee on foreign affairs, Tuesday introduced the following joint resolution: "Joint resolution tendering the thanks of congress to Capt. [illegible], U. S. N., and the officers and men of [illegible] his command. Resolved, That the thanks of congress and of the American people are hereby tendered to Commodore [illegible], U. S. N., and the officers and men under his command, for their heroic and distinguished conduct in destroying the Spanish fleet in Santiago waters on the third of July last." The resolution was referred to the naval affairs committee.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—SENATE—Pettigrew's resolutions to annex the islands of Hawaii passed the senate late Wednesday afternoon by a vote of 42 to 21. The resolutions as passed were precisely as they passed the house. The president of the senate and speaker of the house signed the document and the president will attach his signature Thursday. Several amendments were voted down.

HOUSE—The house Wednesday, after a debate of four hours concurred in the senate amendment to the general deficiency bill authorizing the secretary of the interior, the attorney general and the secretary of the treasury to settle, with the approval of the president the indebtedness of the Central and Western Pacific roads to the government. The amendment was concurred in by a vote of 96 to 85. An amendment was offered and adopted to the Pacific railroad amendment providing that unless settlement was reached within one year, the president should begin foreclosure proceedings to collect all money due the government. During the hour debate Mr. [illegible] (rep. Cal.), Metz (dem. Ark.), Newlands (silver, Nev.), Castle (pop. Cal.), Barlow (pop. Cal.), Devries (dem. Cal.), Fleming (dem. Ga.) spoke in opposition while Messrs Grow (rep. Pa.) Grosvenor (rep. O.), Hepburn (rep. Ia.) and Cannon (rep. Ill.) supported the amendment. The conference reports upon the bills to increase the force of the engineer department and to protect harbor defenses and fortifications against injury were adopted. The bill granting an American registry to the steamship Titania of San Francisco was passed, as was also another authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Yalobusha river in LeFlore county, Miss., by the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. At 4:50 p. m. the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—SENATE—Late Thursday afternoon a bill conferring upon Adjt. Gen. Corbin the rank, pay and allowances of a major general was passed by the senate. When unanimous consent was asked by Mr. Sewall (rep., N. J.) for consideration of the bill, Mr. Pettus (dem., Ala.) objected. However, by a vote the senate decided to reconsider the bill. Bills passed: Fixing the days and allowance of chaplains of volunteer regiments, making them the same as those of a mounted captain; permitting officers in the regular or volunteer army to hold positions as commissioners, superintendents or historians of national parks. Mr. Allison called up the house resolution providing for the adjournment of congress Friday, and had it referred to the committee on appropriations.

HOUSE—The day in the house was given to consideration of measures by unanimous consent. Few of importance were passed. After the resolutions providing for final adjournment Friday was agreed to, there was a clamor characteristic of the closing days of a session, members in large numbers being almost constantly upon their feet, appealing for recognition and consideration of their local measures.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The second session of the Fifty-fifth congress expired Friday at 2 o'clock. It has been a session of new business for those United States, but its end was quiet, and, after the usual tameness, save for an incident in the house, where the sergeant-at-arms was obliged to use the mace, the "golden goose," which symbolizes the power of the house and the authority exercised in the name of all the people. The senate accepted the resolutions of the house fixing Friday at 2 o'clock as the hour for adjournment, when shortly after noon Friday the committee on appropriations reported that it had no further urgent business, and that the adjournment could be had without injury to the good of the country. Mr. Spooner offered a resolution thanking Senator Frye president pro tempore of the senate, for the able and courteous manner in which he had presided over the deliberations of the senate during the present session. It was adopted. A similar resolution offered by Mr. Cockrell (Mo.) thanking Vice President Hobart was adopted with a rousing yea. Vice President Hobart then, the hour of 2 o'clock being indicated by the senate time piece, formally declared the senate adjourned without day.

A Cablegram From Adm. Dewey.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The navy department has received the following cablegram from Adm. Dewey:

"CAVITE, July 4, via Hong Kong, July 8.—United States troops have landed and have been comfortably housed at Cavite, Luzon island. Insurgents still active. Aguinaldo proclaimed himself president of the revolutionary republic on July 1.

"DEWEY."

Schley Commended for His Action at Santiago de Cuba.

ANNAPOLIS, Ind., July 9.—A well attended meeting of citizens was held at the Assembly rooms here Friday night to adopt resolutions commending Commodore Schley in his action at Santiago. There was much enthusiasm. The Spanish officers, when brought here, will be quartered in the old cadet quarters and everything is being put in readiness.

Germans at Manila.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The report that Adm. Dewey fired on German ships at Manila is not believed. It is reported that Germans have landed stores on Marivales Bay, Philippine islands, under cover of night.

Spanish 4s Go Up.

LONDON, July 9.—Spanish 4s went up Friday on the rumor that Madrid is negotiating with Washington for peace, but the officials of the British foreign office say there are no indications that peace is being negotiated.

ARGUMENT OF A GOLD MAN.

Sir Robert Giffen Says a Gold Standard Will Not Do for India.

The New York Commercial Advertiser will doubtless read with wonder and alarm the letter recently contributed to the London Times by Sir Robert Giffen, the eminent statistician and economist, in opposition to the establishment of the gold standard in India. Sir Robert, as our readers will remember, has been a leading advocate of the gold standard during the past quarter of a century, and his arguments here or thereof have been the chief reliance of the financial ignoramuses in this country who had no arguments of their own.

In effect, Sir Robert Giffen says that a gold standard will not do for India. He calls a halt to the campaign, and practically admits that as the British pound sterling has conquered the United States, in the midst of much ruin, misery and sacrifice, there is no need for the advocates of gold to seize on India. He doesn't say that the gold standard will not be a good thing for India, but he thinks that the gold standard in India would have a disturbing effect on the bankers and bullionists of London; and he says that, in this matter, he represents the best opinion of London city, which is Lombard street. The Constitution has already stated the reason, namely, that a gold basis in India would prove a disturbing factor by setting up a drain on the gold reserves of the city.

What, then, is to be done to mitigate the present crisis in India, which is a very serious matter? Sir Robert indicates what is to be done, though he doesn't put it in plain and direct terms. As the closing of the Indian mints to silver was a political move intended to hasten the sacrifice of the interests of the American people to the golden god of greed, so now they are to be reopened to silver again, thus giving India and the people of that empire the inestimable commercial and agricultural advantages which will follow the renewal of free coinage. What is the argument in favor of it? Sir Robert presents it very clearly and concisely in the following paragraph:

The depression of exchange in the debtor country, which is the result of the competition for bills of the creditor country, lowers the valuation of the money compared with the creditors' money, and therefore by the value of all goods in the debtor country compared with the creditor's money. Hence there is a stimulus to the export of those goods which are suitable for the creditor country, and the money of the debtor country is not acted upon at all, although it is one of the first things to be acted on, as we have seen, when the debtor country has the same money as its creditor."

It will be seen here that the gold monometallists are prompt to adopt the arguments of the bimetallists when occasion serves. In the paragraph we have quoted is to be found a condensation of the main contention of those who voted for Mr. Bryan. The only difference is that Sir Robert is here contending for the much dreaded "silver basis," which was said to be too fearful to contemplate—too outrageous—even to be considered.

Under a gold standard, a debtor country can keep its gold reserve only when prices of commodities are forced down to a level with, or lower than, prices in a creditor country. Under a silver standard, the money of India will not be acted on at all, but the exports of goods and commodities will be stimulated. In fine, we may say, that Sir Robert's argument is the truth in a nutshell, and every word of it applied in this country from 1893 to 1897, and will apply again, with more force than ever, when India is again placed on a silver basis with open mints to the white metal, and the food crops of the world are not cut short.

The depression which is now central over India will then be transferred to the United States, and the work of spoilation to the profit of our dear mother country will go merrily on.—Atlanta Constitution.

MUST BE SIXTEEN TO ONE.

The War Bond Issue Makes It Imperative That Free Silver Should Win.

The $400,000,000 in bonds and interest-bearing certificates wrested from congress are not needed for the war against Spain. Not a dollar need to have been added to the war debt for war purposes, nor are these bonds really intended for war purposes. Their real purpose is to prevent corporation currency from being retired, and its place taken by cash issued by the government. The bond issue was forced by desperate and unscrupulous disciples of John Law, who wish to keep cash out of circulation so that they can inflate the currency with corporation notes, circulated at the highest possible interest rate through a forced loan of the credit of the people. The men who did this are anarchists and desperadoes. Sitting in the parlors of their London banks, they plot to begin wars and overthrow the government that they may increase their profit. Their hands are reeking with bloodshed. They care for no law, human or Divine, which threatens to stop them. If they can, they will enslave the people of America as they have already enslaved those of Ireland and India in one way and of South American in another. They will never succeed in subjugating America. When the Chicago platform was adopted, it meant unsurrendering resistance to them and it means it still.—St. Louis Journal of Agriculture.

——It is coming to be better understood with each year that Americans are more in danger of losing foreign markets by a restricted tariff policy than they are of saving their own from competition. Instances are thickening all the time in proof that the world is moving just in this way.—Boston Herald.

DEMOCRATS AND WAR.

Contemptible Methods of Republicans to Down Their Political Opponents.

The Indiana democratic platform speaks in no uncertain tone in those planks which deal with the war with Spain. The Hoosier democracy declares that the war is just and righteous; recalls with proper pride the persistent support of the country's cause by democratic senators and representatives, and congratulates the nation on the universal patriotic uprising which has swept away the last vestiges of sectionalism; rejoices in the heroic deeds of Dewey, Bagley and Hobson, and demands such a permanent strengthening of the navy of the United States and coast defenses as shall assure adequate protection against foreign aggression. Liberal pensions are advocated for the survivors of the civil and the present war. All which is unobjectionable, and most of which is highly commendable. There is, in all this, mighty cold comfort for that new generation of bloody-shirt wavers who, in their infinite littleness and contemptible partisanship, have hoped to utilize the war as a stepping stone to party aggrandizement.

The Indiana democrats have put a stop to all that, as no doubt their brethren in other states will do. No same man can be deceived by the alleged "war issue" in politics, in view of the earnest, spontaneous loyalty of this Indiana platform. The idea of attempting to carry elections on the strength of a war cordially and heartily supported by every party, and whose heroes come from democratic, populist and prohibitionist firesides to quite as great a degree as from the family circles of republicans!

Such an attempt, of course, argues the desperation of the narrow-gauge politicians who make it. In this state, the "war issue" has been resorted to simply as a drowning man clutches a straw. The republican machine, reduced to desperate straits by the astonishing disclosures made of canal frauds as well as by other circumstances which never can be rectified, was in no position to quarrel with any issue which might seem to offer. James G. Blaine, long before he died, warned his party that there was "not another presidency in the bloody shirt;" but the New York republican machine with Platt, of peace-at-any-price fame, at its head, and with Black, who voted against Cuban belligerency, as its prospective candidate, figured that there might be another governor in the "war issue." Hence the constant assaults upon democratic loyalty and patriotism. Hence the persistent misrepresentation of democrats in congress, because, forsooth, they did not tumble over one another to vote, at the drop of the hat, for republican financial measures which, in a time of peace, could not be adopted even by a republican congress!

These selfish demagogues are themselves the only traitors in sight. They are traitors to the union, which now knows no sections; they are traitors to the common good, which demands that partisanship be, so far as practicable, eliminated from all war discussions. In the common enterprise in which the nation is embarked, the party to which belong George Dewey and Richmond P. Hobson, and Fitzhugh Lee, and "Fighting Joe" Wheeler, is not likely to be found recreant. The carpet baggers and reconstructionists of the ern now past hardly did more mischief to the country than these latter-day machine politicians would do, could they array republican against democrat on the "war issue," and bring into question the loyalty of either of the great parties between which American citizenship pretty evenly divides itself. Such attempts deserve the indignant and emphatic repudiation of all loyal Americans.—Albany Argus.

RICHEST OF ALL CHINAMEN.

"Sir Whampoa," a Merchant of Penang, Is Reputed to Be Worth $300,000,000.

Stories of the fabulous wealth of Chinamen are not uncommon and may usually be taken with grains of allowance. An American who spent some years in the orient writes of one of the richest of these. His name is "Sir Whampoa," and he is said to haudle all the trade of the Penang peninsula:

"Astute, quick-witted and far-sighted," says the writer, "he has all the shrewdness of his race, combined with a breadth of view and a generosity rare in a Mongolian. We had many talks together, wandering around his superb home just outside the city, which is a palace set in the midst of the most glorious gardens. Only in the tropics is such a garden possible. It is miles in extent and filled with botanical and horticultural treasures of the world. Nowhere are there such orchids as his, or such superb Victoria Regias. Lawns, too, as smooth and soft as English turf. In its midst is the palace, a picturesque structure filled with the choicest treasures of oriental art.

"One passes from splendor to splendor, retaining a vague impression of superb carving, ebony furniture, unique ivories and jades, and matchless lacquers and bronzes. Yet with all the abundance of treasure the general effect is rich rather than vulgar. The gorgeousness is all in perfect harmony, and Whampoa's collections are the finest in the east, because of his intimate knowledge of bronzes, porcelains and stones.

"It is said this Chinaman is worth at least $600,000,000, and of all his race he alone lives in a state to which his wealth entitles him. I remember discussing this point with Whampoa one evening after a superb dinner, at which we had Chateau Yquem '64 and '84 Chatean Margaux. Some time before I had been privileged to call on Li Hung Chang at his great barracks outside of Shanghai, and I could not but contrast the cold dreariness of the statesman's establishment with the enchanting luxury of the merchant's palace. Yet Li is enormously rich.

"'He dare not, if he would, live as I do,' Whampoa explained. 'It is because I am under English rule and protection that I can have all this that you see. Let any Chinaman possess such treasures as I do and he will quickly be made to disgorge. His viceroy will come down on him for contributions and confiscation follow refusal.'

"Sir Whampoa told me strange stories of the wealth of the orient, enumerating the possessions of Li Hung Chang, whose income is greater than that of Rockefeller, of the empress dowager, who, through her long regency, handled the revenues of the celestial empire. It is said she is today far richer than either the queen of England or the emperor of Russia, who rank as the richest of European monarchs."—San Francisco Wave.

SELF-MURDER A CRIME.

Rev. Dr. Talmage Tells of Many Cases of Self-Destruction.

They Arose From a Disbelief in a Future World—With the Spread of the Gospel of Christ the Sin Is Commensurably Diminishing.

Dr. Talmage's text Sunday was Acts xvi., 28: "Do thyself no harm."

Here is a would-be suicide arrested in his deadly attempt. He was a sheriff, and, according to the Roman law, a bailiff himself, must suffer the punishment due an escaped prisoner, and if the prisoner breaking jail was sentenced to be endungeoned for three or four years then the sheriff must be endungeoned for three or four years, and if the prisoner breaking jail was to have suffered capital punishment, then the sheriff must suffer capital punishment. The sheriff had received special charge to keep a sharp lookout for Paul and Silas. The government had not much confidence in bolts and bars to keep safe these two clergymen, about whom there seemed to be something strange and supernatural. Sure enough, by miraculous power, they are free, and the sheriff, waking out of a sound sleep, and supposing these ministers have run away, and knowing he was there to die for preaching Christ, and realizing that he must therefore die, rather than go under the executioner's ax on the morrow, and suffer public disgrace, resolves to precipitate his own decease. But before the sharp, keen, glittering dagger of the sheriff could strike his heart one of the loosened prisoners arrests the blade by the command, "Do thyself no harm."

In olden times, and where Christianity had not interfered with it, suicide was considered honorable and a sign of courage. Demosthenes poisoned himself when told that Alexander's ambassador had demanded the surrender of the Athenian orators. Isocrates killed himself rather than surrender to Philip of Macedon. Otho, rather than submit to Julius Cæsar, took his own life, and three times after his wounds had been dressed tore them open and perished. Mithridates killed himself rather than submit to Pompey, the conqueror. Hannibal destroyed his life by poison from his ring, considering life unbearable. Lycurgus, a suicide, Brutus a suicide. After the disaster of Moscow Napoleon always carried with him a preparation of poison, and one night his servant heard the ex-emperor arise, put something in a glass and drink it, and soon after the groans aroused all the attendants, and it was only through utmost medical skill that he was resuscitated. Times have changed, and yet the American conscience needs to be toned up on the subject of suicide. Have you seen a paper in the last month that did not announce the passage out of life by one's own behest? Defaulters, alarmed at the idea of exposure, quit life precipitately. Men losing large fortunes go out of the world because they can not endure earthly existence. Frustrated affections, domestic infelicity, dyspeptic impatience, anger, remorse, envy, jealousy, destitution, misanthropy, are considered sufficient causes for absconding from this life by paris green, by laudanum, by belladonna, by Othello's dagger, by halter, by leap from the abutment of a bridge, by firearms. More cases of felo de se in the last two years than any two years of the world's existence, and more in the last month than in any 12 months. The evil is more and more spreading.

A pulpit not long ago expressed some doubt as to whether there was really anything wrong about quitting this life when it became disagreeable, and there are found in respectable circles people apologetic for the crime which Paul in the text arrested. I shall show you before I get through that suicide is the worst of all crimes, and I shall lift a warning unmistakable. But in the early part of this sermon I wish to admit that some of the best Christians that have ever lived have committed self-destruction, but always in dementia, and not responsible. I have no more doubt about their eternal felicity than I have of the Christian who dies in his bed in the delirium of typhoid fever. While the shock of the catastrophe is very great, I charge all those who have had Christian friends under cerebral aberration step off the boundaries of this life to have no doubt about their happiness. The dear Lord took them right out of their dazed and frenzied state into perfect safety. How Christ feels toward the insane you may know from the way he treated the demoniac of Gadara and the child lunatic, and the potency with which he hushed tempest either of sea or brain.

Scotland, the land prolific of intellectual giants, had none grander than Hugh Miller. Great for science and great for God. He was an elder in St. John's Presbyterian church. He came of the best Highland blood and was a descendant of Donald Roy, a man eminent for piety and the rare gift of second sight. His attainments, climbing up as he did from the quarry and the wall of the stonemason, drew forth the astonished admiration of Buckland and Murchison, the scientists, and Dr. Chalmers, the theologian, and held universities spellbound while he told them the story of what he had seen of God in "The Old Red Sandstone." That man did more than any other being that ever lived to show that the God of the hills is the God of the lowlands, and he struck his tuning fork on the rocks of Cromarty until he brought geology and theology accordant in divine worship. His two books entitled "Footprints of the Creator" and "The Testimony of the Rocks," proclaimed the banns of an everlasting marriage between genuine science and revelation. On this latter book he toiled day and night, through love of nature and love of God, until he could not sleep and his brain gave way, and he was found dead with a revolver by his side, the cruel instrument having had two bullets—one for him and the other for the gunsmith, who at the coroner's inquest was examining it and fell dead. Have you any doubt of the beatification of Hugh Miller after his hot brain had ceased throbbing that winter night in his study at Portobello? Among the mightiest of earth, among the mightiest of Heaven.

No one ever doubted the piety of William Cowper, the author of those three great hymns, "O, For a Closer Walk With God," "What Various Hindrances We Meet" "There is a Fountain Filled With Blood"—William Cowper, who shares with Isaac Watts and Charles Wesley the chief honors of Christian hymnology. In hypochondria he resolved to take his own life, and rode to the river Thames, but found a man seated on some goods at that very point from which he expected to spring, and rode back to his home, and that night threw himself upon his own knife, but the blade broke; and then he hanged himself to the ceiling, but the rope broke. No wonder that when God mercifully delivered him from that awful dementia he sat down and wrote that other hymn just as memorable:

"God moves in a mysterious way.
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.
Blind unbelief is sure to err
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain.

While we make this merciful and righteous allowance in regard to those who were plunged into mental incoherence, I declare that the man who, in the use of his reason, by his own act, snaps the bonds between his body and his soul goes straight into perdition. Shall I prove it? Revelations xxi., 8—"Murderers shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." Revelations xxii., 15—"Without are dogs and sorcerers and whoremongers and murderers." You do not believe the New Testament? Then, perhaps, you believe the Ten Commandments: "Thou shalt not kill." Do you say that all these passages refer to the taking of the life of others? Then I ask you if you are not as responsible for your own life as for the life of others? God gave you a special trust in life, and made you the custodian of your life, and he made you custodian of no other life. He gave you as weapons with which to defend it two arms to strike back assailants, two eyes to watch for invasion, and a natural love of life which ought ever to be on the alert. Assassination of others is a mild crime compared with the assassination of yourself, because in the latter case it is treachery to an especial trust; it is the surrender of a castle you were especially appointed to keep; it is treason to a natural law, and it is treason to God, added to ordinary murder.

To show how God in the Bible looked upon this crime, I point you to the rogues' picture gallery in some parts of the Bible, the pictures of the people who have committed this unnatural crime. Here is the headless trunk of Saul on the walls of Bathshan. Here is the man who chased little David—ten feet in stature chasing four. Here is the man who consulted a clairvoyant. Witch of Endor. Here is a man who, whipped in battle, instead of surrendering his sword with dignity, as many a man has done, asks his servant to slay him, and when that servant declined, then the giant plants the hilt of his sword in the earth, the sharp point sticking upward, and he throws his body on it and expires—the coward, the suicide. Here is Ahitophel, the Machiavelli of olden times, betraying his best friend, David, in order that he may become prime minister of Absalom, and joining that fellow in his attempt at patricide. Not getting what he wanted by change of politics, he takes a short cut out of a disgraceful life into the suicide's eternity. There he is, the ingrate!

Here is Abimelech, practically a suicide. He is with an army, bombarding a tower, when a woman in the tower takes a grindstone from its place and drops it upon his head, and with what life he has left in his cracked skull he commands his armor-bearer: "Draw thy sword and slay me, lest men say a woman slew me." There is his post-mortem protograph in the Book of Samuel.

But the hero of this group is Judas Iscariot. Dr. Donne says he was a martyr, and we have in our apologists for him. And what wonder, in this day when we have a book revealing Aaron Burr as a pattern of virtue, and this day when we uncover a statue of George Sand as the benefactress of literature, and in this day when there are betrayals of Christ on the part of some of His pretended apostles—a betrayal so black that it makes the infamy of Judas Iscariot white! Yet this man by his own hand hung up for the execration for all ages, Judas Iscariot.

All the good men and women of the Bible left to God the decision of their earthly terminus, and they could have said with Job, who had a right to commit suicide if any man ever had, what with his destroyed property and his body all aflame with insufferable carbuncles, and everything gone from his home except the chief curse of it, a pestiferous wife and four garrulous people pelting him with comfortless talk, while he sits on a heap of ashes scratching his scabs with a piece of broken pottery, yet crying out in triumph: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change comes."

Notwithstanding the Bible is against this evil, and the aversion which it creates by the loathsome and ghastly spectacle of those who have hurled themselves out of life, and notwithstanding Christianity is against it and the arguments and the useful lives and the illustrious deaths of its disciples, it is a fact alarmingly patent that suicide is on the increase. What is the cause? I charge upon infidelity and agnosticism this whole thing. If there be no hereafter, or if that hereafter be blissful without reference to how we live and how we die, why not move back the folding doors between this world and the next? And when our existence here becomes troublesome why not pass right over into Elysium? Put this down among your most solemn reflections. There has never been a case of suicide where the operator was not either demented, and therefore irresponsible, or an infidel. I challenge all the ages and I challenge the universe. There has never been a case of self-destruction while in full appreciation of his immortality and of the fact that that immortality would be a bliss or wretchedness according as he accepted Jesus Christ or rejected Him.

You say it is a business trouble, or you say it is electrical currents, or it is this or it is that, or it is the other thing. Why not go clear back, my friend, and acknowledge that in every case it is the abdication of reason or the teaching of infidelity, which practically says: "If you don't like this life get out of it, and you will land either in annihilation, where there are no notes to pay, no persecutions to suffer, no gout to torment, or you will land where there will be everything glorious and nothing to pay for it." Infidelity has always been apologetic for self-immolation. Voltaire, Tom Paine's "Age of Reason" was published and widely read there was a marked increase of self-slaughter.

A man in London heard Mr. Owen deliver his infidel lecture on socialism, and went home, sat down, and wrote these words: "Jesus Christ is one of the weakest characters in history, and the Bible is the greatest possible deception," and then shot himself. David Hume wrote these words: "It would be no crime for me to divert the Nile or the Danube from its natural bed. Where, then, can be the crime in my diverting a few drops of blood from their ordinary channel?" And having written the essay he loaned it to a friend, the friend read it, wrote a letter of thanks and admiration and shot himself. Appendix to the same book.

Rousseau, Voltaire, Gibbon, Montaigne, were apologetic for self-immolation. Infidelity puts up no bar to people rushing out from this world into the next. They teach us it does not make any difference how you live here or go out of the world; you will land either in an oblivious nowhere or a glorious somewhere. And infidility holds the upper end of the rope for the suicide, and aims the pistol with which the man blows his brains out, and mixes the strychnine for the last swallow. If infidelity could carry the day and pursuade the majority of people in this country that it does not make any difference how you go out of this world you will land safely, the Potomac would be so full of corpses that bonts would be impeded in their progress, and the crack of the suicide's pistol would be no more alarming than the rumble of a street car.

I have some times heard it disenssed whether the great dramatist was a Christian or not. He was a Christian. In his last will and testament he commends his soul to God through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. I know that he considered appreciation of a future existence the mightiest hindrance of self-destruction:

"For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? Who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death—
The undiscovered country from whose bourne
No traveler returns—puzzles the will!"

Would God that the coroners would be brave in rendering the right verdict, and when in a case of irresponsibility they say, "while this man was demented he took his life," in the other case say, "having read infidel books and attended infidel lectures, which obliterated from this man's mind all appreciation of future retribution, he committed self-slaughter."

Have nothing to do with an infidelity so cruel, so debasing. Come out of that bad company into the company of those who believe in the Bible. Benjamin Franklin wrote: "Of this Jesus of Nazareth I have to say that the system of morals He left and the religion He has given us are the best things the world has ever seen or is likely to see." Patrick Henry, the electric champion of liberty, says: "The book worth all other books put together is the Bible." Benjamin Rush, the leading physiologist and anatomist of the day, the great medical scientist—what did he say? "The only sure and perfect religion is Christianity." Isaac Newton, the leading philosopher of his time—what did he say? "The sublimest philosophy on earth is the philosophy of the Gospel." David Brewster, at the pronuneiation of whose name every scientist the world over bows his head—David Brewster saying: "Oh, this religion has been a great light to me, a very great light all my days." President Thiers, the great French statesman, acknowledging that he prayed when he said: "I invoke the Lord God, in whom I am glad to believe." David Livingstone, able to conquer the lion, able to conquer the panther, able to conquer the savage, yet conquered by this religion, so when they find him dead they find him on his knees.

The municipal laws of Berlin provide that no animal may be killed except at the city slaughter house. Every animal slaughtered for food purposes is subjected to a close scientific investigation before its death, and specimens of its blood and tissues are afterward examined under powerful microscopes by a corps of women microscopists, specially trained for the work.

There is a famous saying attributed to the duke of Wellington that "next to a disastrous defeat, the worst thing for a nation is a great victory."

A STARTLED MOTHER.

From the Freeport (Ill.) Bulletin.

While busy at work in her home, Mrs. William Shay, corner of Taylor and Hancock Avenues, Freeport, Ill., was startled by hearing a noise just behind her.

Mrs. Shay Was Startled.

Turning quickly she saw creeping toward her her four-year-old daughter, Beatrice. The child moved over the floor with an effort, but seemed filled with joy at finding her mother. The rest of the happening is best told in the mother's own words. She said:

"On the 28th of Sept., 1896, while in the bloom of health, Beatrice was suddenly and severely affected with spinal meningitis. Strong and vigorous before, in five weeks she became feeble and suffered from a paralytic stroke which twisted her head back to the side and made it impossible for her to move a limb. Her speech, however, was not affected. We called in our family doctor, one of the most experienced and successful practitioners in the city. He considered the case a very grave one. Before long little Beatrice was compelled to wear a plaster paris jacket. Prominent physicians were consulted, electric batteries were applied, but no benefit was noticed until we tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"Busy in my kitchen one afternoon I was startled by the cry of 'Mamma' from little Beatrice who was creeping towards me. I had placed her on an improvised bed in the parlor. She became tired of waiting for me to come back and made up her mind to go to me. So her story Mr. Pink Pills made me walk,' which she tells everyone who comes to our house, was then for the first time verified. She has walked ever since. She has now taken about nine boxes of pink pills and her pale and pinched face has been growing rosy, and her limbs gained strength day by day. She sleeps all night long now, while before taking the pills she could rest but a few hours at a time." Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are sold by all druggists.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

A TRAVELLER'S TESTIMONY.

What He Carried on the Cars.

To Take when Travelling.

Every traveller knows that continuous journeying on the railroad is very apt to derange the system in some way. In spite of springs and soft seats there is a continuous jar and vibration, which acts upon the nervous system, and produces results varying somewhat, according to the strength of the traveller or his predisposition to some specific ailment. The most common consequence of continuous car riding is constipation. And this condition invariably produces headache, and tends to biliousness. J. J. Converse, St. Louis, Mo., found a way to avoid the evil effects of constipation, to which he was subject when travelling. He carried with him "the pill that will" cure constipation and all its sequent sufferings. This is what he says:

"Travelling on the cars tends to constipation with me, but by using Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills moderately, my bowels are kept in healthy action. They also prevent headache."—J. J. Converse, St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. Ayer's Pills are good for constipation under all circumstances and conditions. They have cured long standing cases after every other medicine had failed. Rev. Francis B. Harlowe, of Atlanta, Ga., furnishes a case in point. He writes:

"For some years past, I was subject to constipation. From which I suffered increasing inconvenience, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, until some months ago, when I began taking Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and vastly improved my general health."—(Rev.) Francis B. Harlowe, Atlanta, Ga.

Constipation is, perhaps, the most serious physical evil of to-day. It is like the Octopus, that grapples its victim and fastens its tentacles on trunk and limbs one after another, until at last, incapable of longer resistance, the helpless being succumbs to his frightful foe. Constipation is the beginning of many of the most murderous maladies, the clogged system becoming charged with poisons that affect the liver and kidneys, and prostrate the entire being mentally, morally and physically. Dr. Ayer's Pills will cure constipation. If you doubt it, send for Dr. Ayer's Curebook, free, containing testimony of those cured by this remedy. Address J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

A remarkably self possessed gentleman was in Walton, some days ago, selling stone ware cooking utensils at Klondyke prices, claiming the ware was of the Zanesville, O., make. After he had delivered the goods, some body looked at the brand on the ware and discovered that it had really been made in Pennsylvania, and was not the genuine Zanesville article at all. There are many succesaful farmers in Boone county. G. Winston, of Hebron, takes the lead. If a man is careless and hap-hazard in his ways of working, he may as well go in the regular order, and system before applying for a job at Mr. Winston's place.

No fair of the past in this county was talked of as much as that to be held at Florence, beginning August 31. People are coming from every where, and many new exhibitors will attend for the first time.

With the hay and oats crop short, tobacco almost a failure, and good prospects for the corn crop being cut short by the dry weather, the outlook for the farmers in this part of the country is anything but favorable.

Don't forget to attend the bridge meeting at Bellevue at 1 p. m., on the fourth Saturday in this month. The bridge across Middle creek near McVille will be a great convenience to a very large territory tributary to McVille and Bellevue.

When you notice a man digging in the garden very slowly, stopping often to rest and cussin' occasionally it's safe to say his wife has got him to work; but if he be digging like a good fellow, never stopping to rest, and whistling a popular air, he's after worms for bait.

D. E. Castleman, Chairman of the Sunday School Board of the North Bend Association, called a meeting of the Board, on last Wednesday, to arrange for a convention. Although each member was notified in writing, yet no one appeared, and it now looks as if no convention will be held.

That tremendous volume of smoke that rose in the direction of Ludlow, late Saturday evening and stretched itself across this county, was caused by the burning of H. Garlick & Co.'s resin plant at Ludlow. The loss occasioned by the fire is estimated at $20,000. The plant was destroyed by fire in 1892.

Daniel Dobbins, of Richwood, was in town, one day last week, and reported that Prof. Collins is developing into one of the horny-handed yeomanry of this section. He says Andy can demolish as many briars and thorn bushes in a given time as any man in the county. Wont somebody insist on Andy stopping long enough to attend the fair, at least?

A squad of laborers were seen leaving the town, the other morning armed with pick and shovels. The first impression was that they were leaving for Cuba to assist Shafter intrench himself in front of Santiago, but an investigation proved they were a part of Commodore W. J. Rice's forces, going out to attack the bad places in the public roads.

Over in Dearborn county, Indiana, they compel the owners of dogs to pay taxes on them or do worse. The Lawrenceburg Register says: "Several persons from the country were arrested Friday and Saturday and taken before Squire Probst, charged with harboring dogs without paying taxes thereon as required by law. They were fined with costs amounting to $12 and $15. Other arrests and convictions will follow."

On Friday morning the Lawrenceburg Furniture Manufacturing Company made an assignment to Charles H. Lommel, who gave bond for $40,000, with W. H. O'Brien and Anton Schneider as sureties. Slow collections, bad accounts and general dullness in the furniture trade caused the assignment. The company had a capital stock of $45,000. It was organized in 1868 and reorganized when its charter expired in 1888.—Lawreuceburg Press.

It is reported that Laker, the Indiana man who operated his threshing machine on this side of the river last year, was coming back again this year, but was notified in writing that if he came he would not return with his machine, and he cancelled his Kentucky engagements. James Rogers, at whose yard Laker expected to thresh first, was notified not to permit Laker to do his work. If these reports are true things are evidently coming to a pretty pass in this county.

We made a trip through the Fourth Ward, one day last week. It is in this ward that a strong rivalry exists between the scientific gardners, each of whom is trying to excel his neighbor in producing vegetables. From what we had heard of the gardens in that particular section we expected to see some very fine vegetables, but were surprised to see that the untold amount of labor expended on these truck patches and the boasting of their very promising condition, the effects of the dry weather had not been overcome, and the several gardeus are in statu quo.

Perhaps few accidents have happened in the county more startling than that which occurred to George Gugel, a well known farmer living about a mile north of Holman, Saturday afternoon. While Mr. Gugel and his three sons were sawing out a beam in his barn in order that he might use a large hay fork, it became necessary to use a pick in prying out the huge timber. Mr. Gugel was using the pick when the timber came down carrying the pick with it, pluning him to the ground. As soon as the timber was removed by his sons he raised up and removed the pick from his abdomen with his own hands. He told his sons to go for aid as he was hurt badly, but before the physician arrived he had passed away.—Lawreuceburg Register.

Admiral Sampson has been much criticised in Congress because of his failure to even mention Commodore Schley's name in his dispatch announcing the destruction of Cervera's fleet, when it was well known that Schley was in command and directed the fight that resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet, and that it was to Schley that Cervera surrendered. As a result of this criticism a resolution was offered in the Senate by Senator Pettigrew and in the House by Representative Berry, of Kentucky, exteuding the thanks of Congress to Commodore Schley and the officers and men under him for destroying the Spanish fleet. Mr. Berry said of this resolution: "I propose that the officer to whom the glory is due shall be recognized. Schley is the real hero of the meideut. He and the brave band of officers and men under his immediate direction are the ones who achieved the victory, and all honor should be given them."

It is the prevailing opinion that our bachelor friend, Edward Botts, of the Piattsburg neighborhood, has a serious notion of "setting out" again, and his recent purchase of a handsome, new buggy, corroborates other circumstances tending to make his neighbors entertain the opinion they do.

S. Hogan, Ellie B Hogan, Elwood McClure, Fred Valiandingham and Chas. Renaker.—Courier.

There is considerable peace talk now afloat.

The Odd Fellows will have an interesting time at Florence Saturday night. The Bellevue degree team has been invited to do the work.

Santiago has been bombarded at intervals since Sunday, but the city had not surrendered when we went to press. It is feared that while Shafter was parleying with Toral, the Spanish commander in regard to a surrender of the city, that the Spanish troops were leaving the city and traveling west as fast they could go. The Spaniards are very tricky, and the prolonged negotiations may have been a clever scheme on the part of Toral to save a large part of his army, knowing that the city must fall in a very few days.

Another Old Citizen Passes Away.

In the death of Mr. Arthur Blyth, who passed away on the 6th inst., Burlington loses another of her old citizens, he having lived here for 59 years. He was born in Feifshire, Scotland, in the town of Cooper, September 19th, 1817, and died in Burlington, July 6th, 1898, aged 80 years, 9 months and 17 days.

He came to America with an older brother, in 1837, landing at New York. He afterwards went to Philadelphia, thence to Pittsburg, and later to Cincinnati. He remained in Cincinnati for several months, working at his trade, that of cabinet maker. He was a most excellent mechanic, and turned off what, at that day, was considered very fine work. At that time the city's population was 30,000.

In 1839 he locatad in Burlington, where he followed his trade for many years—until improved machinery wrought such changes in the furniture business that the local artisan found it impossible to compete with the factory. He, therefore, turned his attention to farming, to which occupation the last thirty-five years of his life was given.

When thirty years of age he was made an Elder in the Presbyterian Church, and always attended closely to his religious duties. He was Superintendent of the Sunday School in Burlington for over a quarter of a century, and was the teacher of a Bible class.

In 1839, May 28th, he was married to Miss Sarah Ann Hughes, who preceded him in death, passing away December 10th, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Blyth were born thirteen children, seven sons and six daughters. Ten of whom are living: Mrs. Richard Perkins, and Thomas Blyth, of Nebraska; James Blyth and Mrs. Grant Dempsey, of California; Rev. David Blyth, of West Liberty, Ohio; Mrs. F. J. Walton, Mrs. Dudley Rouse, J. F., George and Harry Blyth, of this county.

The deceased was a man who always took great interest in the affairs of the country, and kept well posted in passing events. The only public office he ever held was that of Justice of the Peace, which he filled many years, being one of the Justices when the noted and troublesome Bounty Fund Case was creating such a stir in the county.

A brief funeral service was conducted at 3:30 p. m., last Thursday, by Dr. Archibald, of Covington, at the Presbyterian Church, of which the deceased was so long an earnest member, after which the remains were consigned to their last resting place in the cemetery north of town.

Eliza Harper, of Hebron, was in town, Monday. While here he suspected Elmer Beall's bike, and it is reported that he left a bid for the machine.

The Cincinnati Reds started East, last Monday, with a pretty good grip on the lead. Their playing for the next several days will be watched with much interest.

Several of the local admirers of the national game went to Cincinnati, Sunday, to root for the Reds in their game with the Chicago team. They were pleased with the result of the game.

W. E. HENLEY, one of the most conspicuous journalists in London, and also a poet of no mean quality, has been honored by Mr. Balfour with a pension of $1,000 a year. A like sum was allotted to Tennyson in 1845, and the late laureate lived to draw it 47 times.

COUNTRY girls in Spain seldom wear hats or bonnets of any kind, and in the smaller places they do not even put mantillas on their heads, adorning their hair with flowers instead. It was in Spain, by the way, that the custom of a bride wearing orange blossoms in her hair originated.

AN inventor in India has constructed an apparatus for cooling by the heat of the sun. It consists of a box made of wood and lined with reflecting mirrors, at the bottom of the box being a small copper boiler, covered with glass to retain the heat of the rays concentrated by mirrors upon the boiler. In this contrivance any sort of food may be quickly cooked.

SCRAPING the lining of a chimney to get gold and silver is a form of mining which the books do not recognize, but it may be profitable under certain conditions. The chimney of the assay office in wall street is nearly 200 feet high. A new lining of fire brick has been put in it. The old lining, over 40 years old, yielded almost $1,500. There were 52 ounces of gold and 860 onnces of silver in the scrapings.

THE earth has a shadow, but few ever see it, except in eclipses of the moon, or else few recognize it when they see it. Nevertheless, many of us have noticed on fine, cloudless evenings in summer, shortly before sunset, a rosy or pink are on the horizon opposite the sun, with a bluish-gray segment under it. As the sun sinks the are rises until it attains the zenith, and even passes it. This is the shadow of the earth.

A CURIOUS incident occurred the other Sunday at St. George's chapel, Windsor castle. The choir boys, in accordance with an ancient custom, claim five shillings from any military man wearing his spurs during divine service. An officer who had innocently come to church in his spurs was noticed by some of the choristers, who, much to his surprised, demanded the fine as he was about to quite the chapel.

IN the Island of Minora, one of the Philippines, the humming birds are pugnacious little creatures. An American hunting party had a novel experience with them. One of the hunstmen wandered off from his comrades, but soon his screams were heard. Thousands of the humming birds had attacked him and wounded him in hnndreds of spots on his face and neck. When rescued he was streaming with blood.

HERE are a few very juicy annual salaries: J. M. Toucey, while manager of the Vanderbilt railroads, from which he has lately resigned, $50,000; E. W. Bok, editor Ladies' Home Journal, $25,000; Frank Thompson, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, $60,000; John A. McCall, president New York Life Insurance Co., $50,000; Conrad H. Mathiesen, president Chicago Sugar Refinery, $75,000; Dr. John Hall, the New York clergyman, $30,000.

THE longest electric railway in the world is said to be that operated between Kenosha and Waukesha Beach, both in Wisconsin. This line is 62 miles long and arrangements have been made by the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light Co. to run chartered cars from Milwaukee to Waukesha Beach. Commutation tickets, sold at a lower rate than the regular steam roads, and other inducements are expected to bring a heavy traffic.

THE largest painting in the world, exclusive of panoramas and cycloramas, is "Paradise," by Tintoretto, in the grand salon of the doge's palace at Venice. The painting is 84 feet wide by 34 feet high. If we consider the decoration of walls and ceilings, Tintoretto's work has been exceeded by Sir James Thornhill's fine painting on the ceiling of the great hall at Greenwich hospital, 112 feet by 50 feet, representing the founders, William III and Queen Mary, surrounded by the attributes of national prosperity.

IMMENSE fortunes have been made out of the banana business. Revenues do not accrue alone from the sale of the fruit, for the leaves are used for packing; the juice being strong in tannin, makes an indelible ink and shoe blacking, the wax found on the underside of the leaves is a valuable article of commerce; Manila hemp is made from the stems, and of this hemp are made mats, plaited work and lace handkerchiefs of the finest texture; moreover the banana is ground into banana flour. The fruit to be sold for dessert is ripened by the dry warm heat of flaring gas jets.

ABOUT TO SURRENDER.

Gen. Shafter Says Gen. Linares is Telegraphing to Spain—The American Forces More Secure.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The war department has posted the following dispatch: Hon. R. A. Alger, secretary of war:

CAMP NEAR SANTIAGO, July 7.

Perfect quiet today. At the request of Spanish general, employes of English cable Co., were sent in to him to telegraph his government as to surrendering. Men in good spirits and are making themselves more secure every hour. Wounds are much less dangerous than similar wounds made with caliber 45. Among the large number wounded there are few amputations. Perhaps ten will cover it. General health of the command is good. One hundred and fifty cases of fever, which runs its course in four or five days, but is not serious. I am feeling much better. [Signed]

SHAFTER, major general.

THE AMERICAN LOSS.

Number of Killed and Wounded at Santiago Outside of Gen. Wheeler's Command, Shafter's Report.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—A dispatch from Gen. Shafter was posted Friday afternoon at the war department:

In Bate's brigade, killed, 4 men; wounded, 2 officers and 26 men; missing, five men.

Signal corps, killed, 1 man; wounded, 1 man.

Gen. Wheeler's report not yet received.

SHAFTER.

A Land and Sea Attack.

NEW YORK, July 9.—A Washington dispatch to the Herald says that Gen. Shafter has notified the war department that the army and navy will make a joint attack on Santiago at noon Saturday. Gen. Shafter, after many days of rest, will go again to Santiago refreshed and reinforced to the extent of at least 3,500 men. These added to the 19,000 United States troops already under him and the 8,000 under Garcia, will bring Gen. Shafter's fighting force up to 30,000. From these must be deducted 1,700 killed and wounded. Gen. Linares has 19,000 in Santiago.

Russia Hopes for Peace.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 9.—The Russian officials and the general public here are strongly in favor of speedy peace as the only salvation for Spain, and the newspapers recommend the intervention of Europe to compel a cessation of hostilities. It is asserted that if any power directly interested in the fate of Spain or the United States proposed mediation or initiated intervention she would certainly have Russia's approval.

A Spanish Privateer.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The navy department has been informed that a Spanish privateer carrying five guns is hovering off the coast of British Columbia. According to last accounts the privateer was between Prince Charlotte sound and Dixon's entrance. Prompt instructions have been sent to the military authorities of the northwest coast to prepare for a visitation.

Disastrous Flood at Stanberry, Mo.

STANBERRY, Mo., July 9.—A heavy rain at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon became a flood of water along the valley south of the railroad track and some 15 families with their houses were carried along by the sweeping torrent. Some houses were destroyed, while men, women and children Saturday morning were found in trees and drifts for at least a mile along the valley. The known dead are four.

Heavy Rainfall at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, July 9.—All records have been broken in St. Louis and vicinity by a heavy rainfall. The damage done amounts into the hundred thousands. During 24 hours 5.08 inches of rain fell. All the low and badly drained sections of the city are flooded, cellars are filled and the lower stories of many houses are wet with several feet of water.

Ordered to Take Morro Castle.

NEW YORK, July 9.—A Washington dispatch says that the president has given Shafter and Sampson imperative orders to take Morro castle, at the mouth of Santiago harbor. It is believed that it will be the first object of attack Saturday noon, the time decided upon for the final assault against Santiago.

The newspapers throughout Europe are urging Spain to sue for peace. It is generally recognized that Senor Sagasta's cabinet will shortly be superseded. The difficulty in the way of peace is the army, which is anxious to retrieve the failure of the navy.

The 325 wounded heroes of Santiago brought to Key West by the Iroquois are doing well and none are in danger. They are distributed between the marine and convent hospitals and an unused cigar factory, which had been previously remodeled for such purposes.

THE ATTACK BEGUN.

Sampson's Fleet and Shafter's Troops Bombard the City of Santiago.

The City Is Completely Invested and For the Beleaguered Garrison There Is No Possibility of Escape — Shafter's Forces Greatly Augmented.

WASHINGTON, July 11. — Shot and shell from ships and siege guns are reported to be screaming over the doomed city of Santiago.

The bombardment will not cease until Santiago has fallen. Gen. Corbin said Sunday night that the firing, once having begun, it would stop only with the capitulation of the city. The town, it is now said at the war department, is completely invested, and for the beleaguered garrison there is no possibility of escape. This does not mean that the Spanish soldiery must stand still within the walls and be shot down like sheep. It is not impossible that, like the brave and reckless Cervera, they may be lead out to attack the American forces on the surrounding hills. This would be a forlorn hope, but it would offer a chance of striking the American line in a weak spot, breaking it and turning back one of the flanks. It would mean destruction in the end for the Spaniards, of course, but it would give them one last grand dash with the glory of dying in hand-to-hand conflict.

The bombardment began about 5 o'clock. Earlier in the afternoon a dispatch was received from Gen. Shafter saying that Col. Toral had declined the terms of unconditional surrender, and that the bombardment would begin as soon after 4 o'clock as possible. At 11 o'clock Sunday night nothing further had been received at the war department, and the anxiety for news from the scene of operations was intense. Toral is second in command of the Spanish troops, and it is presumed he replied to Shafter's demand because Gen. Linares was so seriously wounded as to be incapable of duty.

Gen. Shafter, the war department says, has in place 40 3.1-inch guns and eight 7-inch mortars. With the reinforcements that arrived Sunday he must have nearly 28,000 men.

Ohio troops it is probable will have the honor of being present at the fall of the first fortified town in Cuba to be captured and perhaps of participating in the battle. A dispatch from Gen. Shafter received early Sunday afternoon that the St. Paul arrived at or near Baiquiri Sundny afternoon. This is about 15 miles from Siboney, and three miles from the American front. On the St. Paul was the 8th Ohio volunteers, called here in Washington "The President's Own," because it was recruited largely from the northeastern part of the state, and has for its lieutenant Col. Charles Dick, secretary of the republican national committee, and the president's close friend. It would take some hours for the men to reach the front from their landing place, but it is believed at the war department Sunday night that Col. Dick and his soldiers are now with Shafter's forces, perhaps participating in the battle, or at least ready to aid in the investment of the city when it falls.

Preparations for the Porto Rico expedition are being hastened with the utmost speed. Not the least of the reasons for this is the fact that an impression is growing that peace is near at hand. If the American forces capture Porto Rico before peace is declared, the permanent investment of the islands will be greatly simplified.

Patriotic Services in Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 11.—Special patriotic services were held in many churches Sunday. It was the president's proclamation. While the religious aspect of the war was emphasized, a spirit of patriotism breathed in every utterannce. The churches were in most instances beautifully decorated and special musical programmes were rendered.

Blanco Urges "War to the End."

PARIS, July 11.—A letter from Madrid says that Gen. Blanco, in replying to the government's request for his views of the situation, urges "war to the end," and asserts that the Cuban volunteers can not be reconciled to the idea of the handing over of the islands to the Americans, especially now that a great majority of the Cubans favor Spain.

Villaverde Blown Up by a Shell.

NEW YORK, July 11.—A Key West dispatch says that news has reached there of the destruction of the Spanish steamship Villaverde by the United States gunboats Hawk and Castine, on the beach at Mariel, Cuba. The Villaverde was on the way from Mexico with supplies and munitions for Blanco.

Hawaiian Commissioners Appointed.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The president has appointed Senator Cullom, of Illinois, Senator Morgan, of Alabama, Representative Hitt, of Illinois, Sanford Dole, president of the Hawaiian Republic, and W. F. Frear, of Hawaii, to be commissioners under the Hawaiian annexation resolution.

HAVANA TO BE SHELLED.

Report That Commodore Howell Has Demanded the Surrender of the City Within Four Days.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The report that Commodore Howell has notified Blanco that if within four days he does not haul down the Spanish flag and prepare to vacate Havana the harbor defenses will be bombarded was neither affirmed nor denied at the navy department Sunday night. It may be assumed however that Commodore Howell delivered that or a similar message to Blanco.

COMMODORE HOWELL.
(Now in Command of the Cuban Blockading Squadron.)

It is a part of the general system of terrorizing that is to be inangurated along the Cuban coast. Blanco is hard pressed for food. his supplies from Jamaica, via Cienfuegos, have been cut off, and half the population in Cuba are thoroughly sick of the war and desire a resumption of business and normal conditions.

Blanco and his soldiers for months have been awaiting the attaack in a distressing state of alarmed expectancy. Commodore Howell has in his blockading fleet the three monitors Terror, Amphitrite and Puritan, and expects in a few days the addition of the monitor Miantonomah and the ram Katahdin. He can push these monitors to within a mile of the shore, and even into Havana harbor itself, without injury to them, presenting, as they do, only curved surfaces slightly above the water line. If Santiago is disposed of within the next 48 hours Sampson could send a large part of his fleet as a re-enforcement to Howell. The sea attack on Havana could then go on most effectively.

ADM. CERVERA.

He Speaks of the Kind Treatment Received by the Americans While a Prisoner of War—Says He Has Many Friends.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 11.—The St. Louis, with Adm. Cervera and 800 prisoners and 40 officers of the Spanish fleet captured off Santiago, arrived here Sunday.

Adm. Cervera came on deck late Sunday afternoon and consented to talk with representatives of the press, who went out to the St. Louis on a tug.

"You ask me," he said, "how I like America and I answer you that I have always liked, and I may say, loved your people, but this war has been a duty with me and the men under me. I knew that the American fleet clearly outclassed us, but it was a question of fighting either inside or ontside the harbor. I have many friends in America and have only the kindliest feelings for them, but every man has a duty to perform to his country and all Spaniards tried to perform that duty. There has been much feeling in Spain and I want all Spain to know the truth, that every ship of my squadron fought until the last, and when we could do no more we surrendered.

"I have much interest to know the exact situation in Spain. Capt. Goodrich has treated us all as well as any one could possibly be treated. My officers have occupied quarters in the saloon and we can not complain."

A telegram was taken out to Adm. Cervera at half past 10 o'clock Sunday night. Nothing is known as to the sender or purport of the dispatch.

Gen. Pando's Troops Not in Santiago.

SIDNEY, July 7.—(Delayed in Transmission.)—The troops said to have been sent by Pando to reinforce Linares at Santiago are not in that city. They are at Manzanillo. The only chance the Spaniards now have to get in or out is along the coast, and the fleet is watching as closely as the army to prevent soldiers entering or leaving the city.

Well-Known Writer Dead.

COLUMBUS, O., July 11.—Capt. Stephen B. Porter, for many years editorial writer on the Columbus Dispatch, died suddenly at an early hour Sunday morning, after an illness of but two days. The immediate cause of his death was a malignant growth upon the vocal cords.

Three of the Vessels May Be Saved.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Adm. Sampson has cabled the navy department that in his opinion three of the Spanish vessels may be saved. The Colon is certainly in good condition, he reports, and there are reasonable hopes of saving the Maria Teresa and the Vizcaya. This is the only news received from Sampson in a day or more, the cables apparently being interrupted or in bad working order.

Gen. Linares has resumed command of the army at Santiago.

A Bald-Headed Reply.

A naval officer very well and favorably known in London has for some unknown reason been advanced in his profession very slowly, though he has grown gray in the service, and indeed, lamentally bald. Recently one of his juniors was held enough to question him as to his remarkable absence of hair.

"How comes it that you are so very bald?"

The officer replied promptly and with much cindidness:

"Young man, you would be bald, I think, if you had had men stepping over your head for years in the way I have."—London Judy.

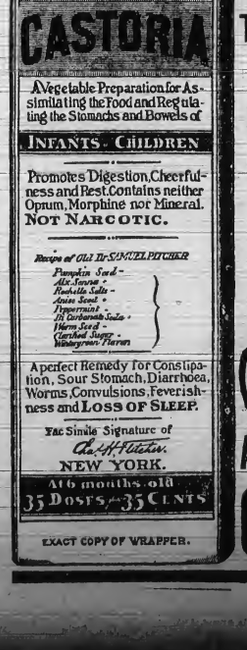
OPEN LETTERS FROM



Jennie E. Green and Mrs. Harry Hardy.

JENNIE E. GREEN, Denmark, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I had been sick at my monthly periods for seven years, and tried almost everything I ever heard of, but without any benefit. Was troubled with backache, headache, pains in the shoulders and dizziness. Through my mother I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has done me so much good. I am now sound and well."

Mrs. HARRY HARDY, Riverside, Iowa, writes to Mrs. Pinkham the story of her struggle with serious ovarian trouble, and the benefit she received from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This is her letter:

"How thankful I am that I took your medicine. I was troubled for two years with inflammation of the womb and ovaries, womb was also very low. I was in constant misery. I had heart trouble, was short of breath and could not walk five blocks to save my life. Suffered very much with my back, had headache all the time, was nervous, menstruations were irregular and painful, had a bad discharge and was troubled with bloating. I was a perfect wreck. Had doctored and taken local treatments, but still was no better. I was advised by one of my neighbors to write to you. I have now finished the second bottle of Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and am better in every way. I am able to do all my own work and can walk nearly a mile without fatigue; something I had not been able to do for over two years. Your medicine has done me more good than all the doctors."

A SEA DISASTER.

Tremendous Loss of Life by Sinking of a French Steamer Off Sable Island.

Women and Children Had No Show for Their Lives—Men Fought Like Wild Beasts for Places in the Life Boats—A Sad Story.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 7.—The ship Cromartyshire, in tow of the Allan steamer Grecian, came into the harbor early Wednesday with her bow stove in and partly dismasted. She had been in collision with the French steamer La Bourgogne off Sable Island. The latter sank with 725 people. Two hundred were saved.

La Bourgogne sailed from New York July 2 for Havre. A large number of her passengers were Americans.

Only one woman survivor is among the saved. The only officers saved were the purser and three engineers. Thirty men belonging to the crew were also picked up. The remainder of the 200 saved are passengers.
